Of course I realize that in some States difficulty arises from the fact that there is no State legislation providing for the filing of transcripts and the securing of liens in other counties than that in which the judgment is rendered. That is the difficulty with which the Committee on the Judiciary has had to deal in framing this bill. I think the amendments suggested by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WILSON] tend to simplify and make plain the provisions of the bill; but I desire to offer an amendment to the third section which I ask to have read.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. I yield for the reading of the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas.

The Clerk read as follows:

That this act shall not be in force in any State until the laws of such State provide that transcripts of judgments and decrees of the courts of the State may be filed in other counties in the State than the one in which the said judgments and decrees shall be rendered, and become liens upon the real estate situated in such other counties from and after the filing of such transcript.

Mr. PERKINS. This amendment, it seems to me, will make the third section definite and clear. I hope the committee will consent that it may be offered.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been very carefully considered by the Judiciary Committee. A great many gentlemen on the floor seem to think that the bill is awkwardly or inartificially drawn—that its meaning is not clear. It may so appear to gentlemen who have examined it for only a few minutes. But we have considered the bill with the utmost care. We have had the benefit of the debate in the Forty-ninth Congress on a measure which was substantially this bill. I do not believe the language can be made any plainer, when we consider that the object is not to force any new law upon any State, but simply to require that the lien which the State provides for the judgment of its own courts shall be the lien of a Federal judgment whenever the State law will permit. Congress can not pass a law compelling a State officer to record a Federal judgment in the clerk's office of a State court. If we could do that, the committee would have drawn the bill in that way. But we provide that the lien of a judgment of a Federal court shall be the same as the lien of the judgment of a State court—that it shall be a lien on property in the same manner and to the same extent.

It goes on to say when State law requires certain things to be done before the lien shall attach then those regulations of State courts shall apply to regulations of Federal courts whenever the Legislature of a State will so authorize.

Mr. TAULBEE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. TAULBEE. I want to know what provision is made in this bill or existing law for the payment of the cost arising out of the filing and recording of these transcripts?

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. None in the world.

Mr. TAULBEE. I had supposed there would be no difficulty in having the work done provided some means were provided for payment.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. That will have to be done before the Federal judgment can be docketed. Whatever the State law requires about that this law permits.

Mr. TAULBEE. Whatever cost is incurred by reason of the filing or recording of these transcripts will be paid by the United States?

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. Not at all, but by the parties.

Mr. TAULBEE. I mean causes in which the United States is a party.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. Of course it will be paid by the losing party. The State law can provide how the cost shall be paid.

I understand a great many gentlemen are willing to accept the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WILSON], and so far as I am concerned I am perfectly willing to have that amendment read and accepted by the House.

Mr. ROGERS. I have analyzed the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota. My judgment is the result of his amendment will be precisely the same as this bill. I am free to say it is a briefer and a clearer one. The result is the same.

The amendments of Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota, were read, as follows:

In line 5, strike out "only" and insert "when under the same conditions." In line 7, strike out "the" where it occurs the second time and insert "any." In line 11, strike out "not." In line 12, strike out all after the word "States" and insert "whenever and only whenever." Strike out section 3.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. I have no objection to those amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, they will be agreed to.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I object. That might be all right in the State from which the gentleman comes, but it does not apply in the State of Illinois.

The amendments of Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota, were agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina, demanded the previous question.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. What I wish to say is that the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota is not fully understood by members of the House. It may be right; but I suggest this bill go over until the next day given to the Committee on the Judiciary, and it be printed in the RECORD so we may see it.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. I insist upon my demand for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. KERR. I ask for the reading of the bill as amended.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Is it not in order for me to move that the bill be recommitted with instructions?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will ask the House to allow him to state the motion before any other business is done.

Mr. TAULBEE. I did not rise to make a motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair must state the question before he can recognize any gentleman for any other purpose.

The gentleman from North Carolina demands the previous question.

Mr. TAULBEE. I rose to demand the reading of the bill, which had been demanded by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR], and the bill has only been read by its title.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will now read the bill.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] now moves to recommit the bill.

Mr. McRAE. I move to amend the motion in the manner specified in the paper I now send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That judgments and decrees rendered in a circuit or district court shall not be liens on property within any State; but all executions issued on such judgments or decrees shall be liens on such property in the same manner and extent as executions on the judgments and decrees of the courts of such States."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the instructions just read, as an amendment to the motion to recommit the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 11, noes 99.

So the amendment was rejected.

The question recurred on the motion to recommit the bill.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 55, noes 69.

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

Mr. RAYNER. I would like to call the attention of the House to a clerical error in the bill, which appears on page 2, line 14, where it provides:

—judgments and decrees of the United States to be registered, etc.

It should be United States courts.

Mr. ROGERS. That is correct, and I ask unanimous consent that the word "courts" be inserted there in its proper place.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The question recurred on the passage of the bill; and there were, on a division—ayes 96, noes 21.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6437) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 7315) to divide the Great Sioux Indian reservation into separate smaller reservations, and for other purposes, requested a conference with the House of Representatives on said bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. DAWES, Mr. PLATT, and Mr. JONES of Arkansas as conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 1669) authorizing the Mississippi and Louisiana Bridge and Railroad Company, of Natchez, Miss., to construct a bridge over the Mississippi River at or near Natchez, Miss.; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. OATES rose.

Mr. BURNES. I rise to make a privileged report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama has been recognized.

Mr. OATES. I ask unanimous consent to take up Senate bill numbered 788 and pass it. It is identical with the bill we passed this morning.

Mr. BURNES. I am bound to insist on my motion, which is one of the highest privilege.

I call up the conference report on the urgent deficiency bill, and ask to have it read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6437) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 8, 9, 10, 22, 23, 28, 44, 55, 57, and 62.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 4, 11, 16, 17, 18, 20, 24, 25, 27, 29, 30, 47, 52, 59, and 61, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

Add after the matter inserted by said amendment the words "including the erection of an iron stairway;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Add after the word "high," in the matter inserted by said amendment, the words "which extension is hereby authorized;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert in lieu of the amended paragraph the following:

"Suppressing counterfeiting and other crimes: For continuing the investigation of certain claims of Indian soldiers and their heirs for arrears of pay and bounty, $2,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said House amendment insert "$15,000;" and the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Strike out the matter inserted by said amendment and insert after the word "dollars," in line 12, page 9, of the bill, the following: "All of said work to be completed by November 1, 1888:" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 15, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: Strike out the word "March" and insert in lieu thereof the word "April;" and strike out the words "one thousand six hundred and eleven dollars and sixty-seven cents" and insert in lieu thereof "one thousand two hundred and ten dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 32, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$750;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$750;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,250;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$750;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,125;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$750;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,125;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,250;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 42, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$750;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 43, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$600;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following:

"Traveling expenses of Indian school superintendent: For necessary traveling expenses of one Indian school superintendent, including incidental expenses of inspection and investigation, $500, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That he shall be allowed $3 per day for traveling expenses when actually on duty in the field, exclusive of cost of transportation."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numered 56, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 58, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Strike out from said Senate amendment the words "eighteen hundred and eighty-eight" and insert in lieu thereof the words: "eighteen hundred and eighty-seven;" and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 63, and agree to the same.

JAMES N. BURNES,
JOSEPH D. SAYERS,
LOUIS E. McCOMAS,
Managers on the part of the House.

EUGENE HALE,
W. B. ALLISON,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the managers of the conference on the part of the House was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6437) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the action which is recommended by the conference committee on each of the amendments in the accompanying conference report, namely:

On amendment numbered 1: Strikes out proposed additional compensation to Samuel A. Robinson, inspector of plumbing for the District of Columbia.

On amendments numbered 2 and 3: Appropriates $7,000 for the completion of the public building at Leavenworth, Kans., including the erection of an iron stairway therein.

On amendments numbered 4 and 5: Appropriates $65,000 for the completion, including the extension, of the public building at Syracuse, N. Y., the extension thereof being specifically authorized.

On amendment numbered 62: Strikes out the provision to pay a judgment in favor of Mattie S. Whitney, rendered by the Court of Claims under the so-called Bowman act.

On the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 63: Appropriates $1,190.28 to pay balance of salary certified to be due W. C. Buck as minister to Peru, and $927,177.40 to pay the amount certified to be due to the State of Texas under the act of June 27, 1882.

The bill as it passed the House appropriated $5,290,620.64; as it passed the Senate it appropriated $6,015,208.93; in acting upon the Senate amendments the House added to the bill $968,402.68; and as agreed upon by the conference committee it appropriates in all $6,876,502.88.

JAS. N. BURNES,
JOSEPH D. SAYERS,
LOUIS E. McCOMAS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SPRINGER). The question is on agreeing to the report of the conference committee.

Mr. ADAMS. I think we should always have some explanation of even a conference report. I listened to it carefully, and there are three items which escaped my attention. I ask the gentleman who has presented the report what was the final disposition of the further appropriation for the revenue-cutter system? Was that finally dropped from the bill?

Mr. BURNES. The explanation accompanying the report is so full and complete on each and every item acted on by the conference committee that I thought it would be unnecessary to say a single word. If the gentleman had listened he would have found that the Senate receded from that proposition.

Mr. ADAMS. As I am to ask another question, I may say that the report of the conference committee simply gave the number of each amendment without stating what the amendment was.

Mr. BURNES. The statement gives the number of the amendment and substance of the amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. And finally there was a statement, after the whole enumeration had been gone through, of the substance of each amendment by numbers, but I venture to say that not one man in a hundred in this House understood the details of the statement.

Mr. BURNES. Very well, I will satisfy the gentleman.

Mr. ADAMS. I wish to ask whether the appropriation for the extension of the dry-dock at New York has been left out?

Mr. BURNES. I supposed that every gentleman heard read the statement that the House recedes, and that the 100 feet of extra dry-dock at the Brooklyn navy-yard are not provided for.

Mr. ADAMS. My theory was that a gentleman who was unable to gather the fact from the reading had the right to ask for information.

Mr. BURNES. The report states it in precise words.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, I see that the bill is increased from the amount appropriated by the House a million and a half. I suppose the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] regards that increase as entirely proper.

Mr. BURNES. As a matter of course I regard it as proper. The increase comes mainly from the claim of the State of Texas, which is nearly a million dollars, and which the House put on.

Mr. BURROWS. The bill increased, I observe.

Mr. BURNES. As the gentleman will observe from the report, the House put on a good many amendments and the Senate put on a good many amendments.

Mr. BURROWS. The amendments put on by the Senate were entirely proper, were they?

Mr. BURNES. Well, as to the amendments that we yielded to, of course I am not in a position to say that they were not proper. At the same time, I resisted several of them with what skill and ability I could command.

Mr. BURROWS. But in your judgment they ought to be embraced in the bill?

Mr. BURNES. In my judgment they had to be embraced in order to pass the bill.

The report of the committee of conference was adopted.

Mr. BURNES moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. BELMONT, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Foreign Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the items in the estimates for foreign intercourse relating to the international boundary survey between the United States and Mexico and the Alaska boundary survey, and they were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

BUSINESS FROM THE COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, by unanimous consent, offered a resolution fixing a day for the consideration of business reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I shall object to the consideration of the resolution unless it goes to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then I withdraw the resolution.

CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION, COLUMBUS, OHIO.

Mr. WILKINS, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 8380) to authorize the loan of certain exhibits to the centennial exposition to be held at Columbus, Ohio, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

UNITED STATES LOAN AND TRUST COMPANY, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. REED, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8777) to incorporate the Loan and Trust Company, District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

FOREST CONDITIONS OF THE ROCKY MOUNTAINS.

Mr. McRAE, from the Committee on the Public Lands, submitted as a privileged report the following:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 27, 1888.

Resolved, That the Commissioner of Agriculture be requested to forward to this House any facts or statistics in his office relating to the forest conditions of the Rocky Mountains, and any matter pertinent to their consideration not heretofore reported.

The committee, to whom was referred the accompanying resolution, have considered the same, and report it back with the recommendation that it be adopted.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. McRAE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

APPEALS IN LAND CONTESTS.

Mr. STOCKDALE, from the Committee on the Public Lands, submitted as a privileged report the following:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 6, 1888.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be requested to inform the House of Representatives—

1. How soon after the filing of an appeal in a land-contest case in the office of the Commissioner of the Land Office is such case reached for hearing and consideration.
2. If such cases are considered in the order of their filing.
3. The cause of delay in the consideration of such cases, if there is any such delay.
4. After an appeal is taken to the Secretary of the Interior in such cases, how soon is it reached for hearing and consideration.
5. The cause of such delay, if any.
6. How soon after final decision in such cases does a patent issue.
7. The cause of such delay, if any.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. STOCKDALE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 1611) for the erection of a public building at Springfield, Mo.;

A bill (H. R. 4487) to enable the Secretary of the Interior to pay certain creditors of the Pottawatomie Indians out of the funds of said Indians; and

A bill (H. R. 5728) to amend the laws relating to navigation, and for other purposes.

And then, on motion of Mr. CANNON (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills and joint resolutions of the following titles were introduced and referred, as indicated below:

By Mr. C. S. BAKER: A bill (H. R. 8778) for the relief of Mary Dickinson—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8779) granting a pension to Mary Dickinson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BELMONT: A bill (H. R. 8780) for compensation, salvage, and medal of honor to Capt. Horatio Nelson—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BLAND: A bill (H. R. 8781) for the relief of Francis M. Gaddy—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. W. C. P. BRECKINRIDGE: A bill (H. R. 8782) to direct the Secretary of War to appoint a commission to ascertain and report the acts concerning the destruction of property at Cynthiana, Ky., on June 11, 1864—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CARUTH: A bill (H. R. 8783) to authorize the Kentucky Rock Gas Company to lay conduit pipes across the Ohio River—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. CHEADLE: A bill (H. R. 8784) for the relief of H. M. Sailors—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. COMPTON: A bill (H. R. 8785) for the relief of R. A. Francis—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. DUNHAM: A bill (H. R. 8786) for the relief of Sarah Friedman—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. FITCH: A bill (H. R. 8787) granting a pension to John J. Gilmartin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FLOOD: A bill (H. R. 8788) granting a pension to Elsie Dykeman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GALLINGER: A bill (H. R. 8789) granting a pension to Caroline R. Haseltine—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. D. B. HENDERSON: A bill (H. R. 8790) granting a pension to Thomas Rook—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KEAN: A bill (H. R. 8791) to carry into effect the recommendation of the board of admirals convened under the joint resolution, approved February 5, 1879, in the case of Commander James H. Sands, United States Navy—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. NELSON: A bill (H. R. 8792) granting a pension to Edward F. Wait—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, March 23, 1888.

DEATH OF THE CHIEF-JUSTICE.

The Chaplain of the Senate, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Thou, O God, liveth and reigneth forever, and we rejoice that our life is in Thy hands. Thou numberest the hairs of our head. A sparrow can not fall without Thy notice. We bow reverently and humbly before Thee under the shadow of death. O God, comfort and sustain the loved ones who are so sorely bereft.

Teach us so to number our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom. We rejoice in Thee, the upholder of life. We seek of Thee guidance and help, so that in living God may be glorified, and that after having served our generation we may fall asleep and be gathered to our fathers.

We bless Thee for the life of Thy departed servant, for his faith, for his labor, for his faithfulness, for all the service he has rendered. We rejoice in the hope that gathers around his bier, and we pray Thee, O God, as Thou art thus moving among us and causing us to see ourselves moving among the opening graves, that day by day we may learn wisdom, and so live faithfully and well, spending these frail, fleeting lives in the service of men and to the glory of God, that we may have peace of conscience, and that we may finally rest where death can not come.

Oh, forgive us. Enter not into judgment with us. We thank Thee for the voice of prayer daily heard here; for every heart that prays; that this is God's house; and we pray Thee manifest Thy presence through the spirit, and by Thy word and Thy providence, so that we may hear in our inward ear, and that we may walk softly before God.

We ask these mercies with grace and peace, in the name of Him who has taught us, when we pray, to say: Our Father who art in Heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come: Thy will be done in earth, as it is in Heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever. Amen.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the Journal of the proceedings of yesterday.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks unanimous consent that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with. It is so ordered, if there be no objection.

The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Supreme Court of the United States, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, March 23, 1888.

SIR: I am directed by the Supreme Court of the United States to notify the Senate through you that the Chief-Justice of the United States died at his residence this morning at 6.30.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

SAM. F. MILLER,
Justice, Supreme Court.

Hon. JOHN J. INGALLS,
President of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, on the 21st day of January, 1874, Chief-Justice Waite received his commission and took his seat as the presiding officer of that great tribunal, and for now more than fourteen years, partly in times of great excitement, difficulty, and trouble, and through a career in that court and of it embracing questions of the widest importance to human rights, involving life, liberty, and property, the Chief-Justice has been a conspicuous figure in the jurisprudence of this nation, and, perhaps, not less conspicuous in respect of the jurisprudence of the whole world.

His career is ended for this life. It has neither been tarnished during this whole period by any stain nor clouded by any reproach, either official or personal. Upright, brave, even-minded, impartial, patient, learned as a judge; gentle, generous, affectionate, kindly as a citizen, he has in every walk of private life filled his career with honor—great honor to himself and infinite benefit to his country.

I move, Mr. President, that the Chair appoint a committee of five Senators to take such order as may be expedient in respect of the funeral of the Chief-Justice and other matters connected therewith; and if this shall be agreed to, I shall move that in view of this great calamity the Senate adjourn until Monday next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that a committee of five Senators be appointed by the Chair to take action concerning the funeral of the Chief-Justice.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS having declined service upon the committee on account of the condition of his health, the President pro tempore announced the following committee: Senators SHERMAN, HOAR, WILSON of Iowa, PUGH, and GEORGE.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move as a further mark of respect that the Senate adjourn until Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, March 26, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, March 23, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Rev. J. H. CUTHBERT, D. D., of Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Our holy heavenly Father, we thank Thee for the mercies of the past night, for the light and comfort of another day. We come before Thee with prayer and supplication for all who are in authority, as Thou hast commanded us to pray for all who are in authority, that we may lead quiet and peaceable lives in all godliness and honesty. Regard in great mercy Thy servant the President of the United States, both Houses of Congress in session, Thy servants especially before Thee to-day.

We thank thee, O God, our Father, for the spirit of faith and prayer that marked conspicuously the founders of this Government, and especially him whose earthly remains lie so very near to where we stand to-day. May the same spirit be in our rulers now that they may all be men after Thine own heart, fearing God and loving truth and righteousness. Thou knowest the difficulties and perplexities of their positions and duties. Give them grace and strength from above to discharge every duty in the fear of God, and without respect of persons.

Especially we would remember this morning that family in sore affliction. We remember how, in Thine inscrutable providence, Thou hast called away Thy servant, the late Chief-Justice of the United States. Help us to say, "The Lord gave, the Lord hath taken away." Be very near to his afflicted family, to his associates in office, to all of our people in the high places and the low places, that we may love Thee and serve Thee, and do with our might whatsoever our hands find to do. Guide us with that counsel which can never err. Support us by that hope which can never fail, that love which is infinite. And finally, in Thy great mercy, O Lord, save and accept us in Thy heavenly kingdom. And to Thy great name, Father, Son, and Spirit, be present and everlasting praises. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS FOR NEXT FRIDAY.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the order of the House heretofore made in relation to the bill granting a pension to Mrs. John A. Logan, and the bill to increase the pension of Mrs. Apolline A. Blair, be continued in force, to operate next Friday instead of to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the order heretofore made by the House fixing this day, immediately after the reading of the Journal, for the consideration of the bills in reference to pensions to Mrs. Logan and Mrs. Blair be continued until next Friday morning, upon the same terms and conditions.

Mr. TAULBEE. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. If this request be not granted, when will those bills come up in the regular course of business?

The SPEAKER. If the request be not granted, the bills will come up next Friday, immediately after the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar rises and makes its report. These bills are unfinished business in the class of business to which they belong. The Committee of the Whole House having been discharged from their further consideration, they are in the House as unfinished business from that committee.

Mr. ENLOE. I object.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE] will withdraw that objection, if he understands the purport of the proposition.

Mr. ENLOE. I would like to know what the effect of withdrawing my objection will be.

The SPEAKER. If the objection be withdrawn, and the request of the gentleman from Indiana agreed to, these bills will come up next Friday immediately after the reading of the Journal, instead of coming up when the Committee of the Whole House rises on that day. That is the only difference.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The object of the request, as I understand, is simply to have a full vote of the House.

Mr. ENLOE. As I now understand, the only difference is that in one case the bills would be considered in the afternoon, and in the other case immediately after the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. That is all.

Mr. ENLOE. Then I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. The objection being withdrawn the request of the gentleman from Indiana, in the absence of further objection, will be agreed to. The Chair hears no objection; and it is so ordered.

DEATH OF CHIEF-JUSTICE WAITE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will lay before the House a communication which has been received from the Supreme Court of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, March 23, 1888.

SIR: I am directed by the Supreme Court of the United States to notify the House of Representatives through you that the Chief-Justice of the United States died at his residence this morning at 6.30.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,
SAM. F. MILLER, Justice, Supreme Court.

Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, as appears by the communication just read, the great office which was yesterday occupied by Morrison R. Waite is to-day vacant—an office second in dignity to none within my knowledge in the whole civilized world. It has been occupied by him for many years with such ability and industry, such a disposition to discharge conscientiously his whole duty, that to-day the nation is in mourning for his decease. This is not the time for eulogy, nor in fact for any extended remarks. But for the purpose of exhibiting the respect entertained by this House for his memory, I ask that the Clerk read, and that the House adopt, the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives has heard of the death of Chief-Justice Waite, of the Supreme Court of the United States, which occurred this morning at 7 o'clock, with feelings of deep and sincere sorrow.

Resolved, That while the nation mourns the loss of one of its most useful and illustrious sons, it is fitting that the House, representing the people, express its deepest sympathy with the family of the deceased in their affliction.

Resolved, That the House will attend as a body the funeral of the late Chief-Justice, and the Speaker is requested to appoint a committee consisting of nine members to act with a committee of the Senate in any necessary action relating to the funeral.

Resolved, That as an additional mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the House do now adjourn.

The resolutions were unanimously adopted.

The SPEAKER. Before announcing the result of the vote, the Chair wishes to state that the committee provided for in the resolutions will be designated hereafter.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, permit me to say in this connection, if the parliamentary custom should require myself to be put upon that committee, being the mover of the resolutions, that other engagements will prevent my acting, and I ask therefore to be excused.

The result of the vote upon the adoption of the resolutions was then announced; and accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills and joint resolutions of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. BUTLER: A bill (H. R. 8803) for the relief of John Holt—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, March 24, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. J. H. CUTHBERT, D. D., of Washington, D. C.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXPENDITURES OF THE FISH COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the House, a report relative to the property and expenditures of the Fish Commission; which was referred to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

FINDINGS OF FACT BY COURT OF CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House communications from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting copies of findings of fact by that court in the following cases against the United States; which were severally referred to the Committee on War Claims, namely:

S. B. West, administrator;
William F. Ricks; and Levi W. Brooks.

REFERENCE OF BILLS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. Res. 81) to authorize the purchase of the lands necessary to the construction of locks and dams on the Cumberland River; which were referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. 1387) for the relief of volunteers of the Fourth Regiment Iowa Infantry.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House disagree to the amendments of the Senate and ask a conference thereon.

The SPEAKER. The amendments will be read.

The amendments of the Senate were read.

Mr. CULBERSON. I demand the regular order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I think this had better go to the committee for consideration.

Mr. CONGER. Is not the motion in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not. Under the rules of the House the bill and amendments will be referred to the proper committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. To what committee?

The SPEAKER. To the Committee on Military Affairs.

JAMES M. WILLBUR.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 1044) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to state and settle the account of James M. Willbur with the United States and to pay said Willbur such sum of money as may be found due him thereon.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas has demanded the regular order, which cuts off all demands for unanimous consent.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. Then I ask that this bill be allowed to remain upon the table for the present.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

REFERENCE OF BILLS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House bills of the Senate of the following titles; which were severally read twice, and referred as follows, namely:

The bill (S. 1669) authorizing the Mississippi and Louisiana Bridge and Railroad Company of Natchez, Miss., to construct a bridge over the Mississippi at or near Natchez—to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (S. 788) to provide for holding terms of the United States courts at Mississippi City—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (S. 671) to provide for the sale of the site of Fort Omaha, Nebr., the sale or removal of the improvements thereof, and for a new site and the construction of suitable buildings thereon—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (S. 38) granting to the Washington and Idaho Railroad Company the right of way through the Cœur d'Alene Indian reservation—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The bill (S. 64) authorizing the juries of the United States circuit and district courts to be used interchangeably, and to provide for drawing talesmen—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (S. 171) granting a pension to Jennie H. Coghill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (S. 192) to provide that judges of the United States circuit and district courts shall reduce their instructions to writing in all States wherein by the laws thereof State judges are required so to do—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (S. 212) for the relief of Patrick H. Winston, jr.—to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (S. 250) for the repair of Fort Marion, at St. Augustine, Fla.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (S. 258) for the relief of Maj. Daniel N. Bash, paymaster, United States Army—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (S. 379) to allow soldiers and sailors in the United States service who have lost both hands an increased pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (S. 535) providing for an inspection of meats for exportation, prohibiting the importation of adulterated articles of food and drink, and authorizing the President to make proclamation in certain cases, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (S. 539) amending section 3749 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the disposition of property of the United States, and repealing the first paragraph of section 3208 of the Revised Statutes—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (S. 667) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North—to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (S. 850) granting certain lands in the Territory of Wyoming for public purposes—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

The bill (S. 879) for the relief of the administratrix of the estate of George W. Lawrence—to the Committee on War Claims.

The bill (S. 903) for the relief of Laban Heath & Co., of Boston, Mass.—to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (S. 998) to restore pensions in certain cases—to the Committee on Pensions.

The bill (S. 1129) granting to the Newport and King's Valley Railroad Company the right of way through the Siletz Indian reservation—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The bill (S. 1163) for the relief of Edward Rice—to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (S. 1376) for the relief of John W. Blake—to the Committee on War Claims.

The bill (S. 1378) directing the prosecution of inquiries by the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries in respect to the destruction of oysters in the natural oyster-beds lying within the waters and jurisdiction of the United States by star-fish, etc., and making an appropriation for such purposes—to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

The bill (S. 1499) for the relief of Mary A. Lewis, widow of Joseph N. Lewis—to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (S. 1817) to grant to the State of Oregon certain lands in that State for a public park—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

The bill (S. 1852) to modify and amend the provisions of the dedication to public use of the tract of land known as Dearborn Park, in the city of Chicago, State of Illinois—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7315) to divide the Great Sioux reservation into separate smaller reservations, and for other purposes.

Mr. PEEL. I ask unanimous consent to consider the amendments of the Senate now.

Mr. CULBERSON. I must insist upon the demand for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. That demand, of course, cuts off all recognition for unanimous consent. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HOPKINS, of Virginia, for four days.

To Mr. MCCLAMMY, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. PENINGTON, for four days, on account of important business.

To Mr. FISHER, indefinitely, on account of important business.

REPRINT OF BILL.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL], chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, asks that Senate bill No. 931 be reprinted. If there be no objection, the order will be made and the usual number will be printed.

There was no objection.

FUNERAL OF LATE CHIEF-JUSTICE WAITE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces as the select committee to act with a committee of the Senate in any necessary action relating to the funeral of the late Chief-Justice Waite, Mr. KELLEY, of Pennsylvania, Mr. SENEY, of Ohio, Mr. GROSVENOR, of Ohio, Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, Mr. CANNON, of Illinois, Mr. CARLTON, of Georgia, Mr. STEWART, of Vermont, Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa, and Mr. RUSSELL, of Connecticut.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CULBERSON. By direction of the Committee on the Judiciary, my colleague on the committee from North Carolina [Mr. HENDERSON] will make a report from that committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. Before the regular order is proceeded with will the gentleman from Texas allow me to make a report?

Mr. CULBERSON. I have refused other gentlemen.

TERMS OF COURT AT VICKSBURG, MISS.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported as a substitute for the bill H. R. 1592 a bill (H. R. 8808) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for holding terms of United States courts at Vicksburg, Miss.; which was read a first and second time.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. CULBERSON. I desire that the bill shall be taken up for consideration now.

The SPEAKER. The bill goes to the House Calendar, but that does not prevent its being taken up.

The bill H. R. 1592 was laid on the table.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. I ask for the reading of the substitute.

The bill (H. R. 8808) was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an act approved February 28, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for holding terms of United States courts at Vicksburg, Miss.," be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting before the word "Washington," in the first section thereof, the words "Bolivar and Sunflower."

SEC. 2. That all crimes and offenses heretofore committed within the counties of Bolivar and Sunflower shall be prosecuted, tried, and determined in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been passed.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. This is a local bill. There is no objection to it on the part of any of the Representatives from Mississippi. I ask that it be put upon its passage.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC TIMBER LANDS.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I desire to make a privileged report from the Committee on the Public Lands.

The Clerk read the following resolution, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, which the committee recommended should be adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to send to this House a report by special agent Bowers to the Secretary, containing in outline the desirable features of legislation for the public timber lands, together with the needful augmentation of its provisions, and referred to in the report of the late Secretary of the Interior.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. WASHINGTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CALIFORNIA REDWOOD COMPANY.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I desire to make a privileged report. I am instructed by the Committee on the Public Lands to report back with a favorable recommendation the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, requested to transmit to this House all information in his possession, as far as is in his judgment compatible with the public interest, relating to the alleged frauds upon the Government by the California Redwood Company, and also information as to what suits, if any, have been caused by him to be instituted for the recovery of the lands held by said company, and what additional legislation, if any, in his judgment is needed to secure the rights of the Government in said matter.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest that the words "so far as is in his judgment compatible with the public interests" should be omitted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves to amend the resolution by striking out the words he has indicated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CULBERSON. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 8190) to define and regulate the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States.

The SPEAKER. This bill is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. ROGERS. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the bill just called up.

Mr. STEELE. Will the gentleman allow me to make a report from the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. ROGERS. I dislike to yield, because other gentlemen desire the same privilege. I shall not, however, refuse the request of the gentleman from Indiana, but hope no other gentleman will follow suit.

PROMOTION OF ARMY OFFICERS.

Mr. STEELE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported, as a substitute for sundry bills, a bill (H. R. 8809) to provide for the promotion of officers of the Army after continuous service in one grade; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The bills H. R. 1882, H. R. 3273, H. R. 5008, and H. R. 6442, were laid on the table.

JURISDICTION OF UNITED STATES COURTS.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the bill H. R. 8190.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. HATCH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the bill the title of which has been read.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the bill be dispensed with unless some gentleman desires to hear it read in full.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I object. This is a very important bill, and it should be read at length.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the district courts of the United States shall hereafter have and exercise, exclusive of the circuit courts of the United States, in addition to the jurisdiction conferred upon them by existing law, all the original jurisdiction now vested by law in the circuit courts of the United States, and that the circuit courts of the United States shall have and exercise such jurisdiction, by writ of error and appeal, as they have and exercise under existing laws, except as herein modified, and such other jurisdiction, appellate or otherwise, as is conferred by this act.

SEC. 2. That there shall be appointed for each circuit, by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one additional circuit judge, who shall have the same qualifications and be entitled to the same compensation as the circuit judge appointed under existing laws. The circuit court in each circuit shall consist of the justice of the Supreme Court assigned to the circuit and of the circuit judges thereof, any two of whom shall constitute a quorum. Such justice of the Supreme Court, or, in his absence, the circuit judge present who is senior in office, shall preside. In the absence of a quorum, the justice or judge present may adjourn the court from day to day, or without day, but the number necessary to make a quorum, at any term at which the justice of the Supreme Court or the requisite number of circuit judges are unable to attend, may be supplied for the time being by a district judge of the circuit, designated for that purpose by the justice of the Supreme Court or the circuit judge senior in office, so that, however, there shall always be present a circuit justice or circuit judge, who shall preside therein: Provided, That no district judge before whom a cause or question may have been tried or heard in the district court shall sit on the trial or hearing of such cause or question in the circuit court.

SEC. 3. That a writ of error in cases proper for such writ, and in all other cases an appeal may be taken to the circuit court from any final judgment or decree of any district court within the circuit in a civil cause, either at law or in equity, and in causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction as now provided by law. No such appeal shall be taken or writ of error sued out except within six months after the entry of the order, decree, or judgment sought to be reviewed. Where, upon a hearing in equity in a district court, an injunction shall be granted or continued by an interlocutory order or decree in a cause in which an appeal from a final decree could be taken under the provisions of this act to the circuit court, an appeal may be taken from such interlocutory order or decree granting or continuing such injunction to the circuit court, provided the appeal is taken within thirty days from the entry of such order or decree; and the proceedings in other respects in the district court shall not be stayed during the pendency of such appeal. All existing provisions of law regulating the mode of taking and perfecting appeals and of issuing writs of error, and the effect thereof, and in reference to citations, writs of error, appeal bonds, or other process or papers in cases of appeals and writs of error to review the decrees and judgments of district courts in circuit courts, shall continue and apply to similiar proceedings under this act. Upon such writ of error or appeal the circuit court shall review such order, judgment, or decree, and may affirm, modify, or reverse the same, or may make such order or may render such judgment or such decree as the district court should have made or rendered, or may order a new trial or other proceedings therein. The circuit court shall have power to issue writs of error, mandamus, prohibition, scire facias, habeas corpus, and all other writs which may be necessary or proper to the exercise of its jurisdiction and agreeable to the principles and usages of law; and said court shall have original jurisdiction in cases of habeas corpus, mandamus, and prohibition. The circuit court may also establish such rules, not inconsistent with law or the rules established by the Supreme Court, as it may deem necessary for the regulation of the practice of said court. Each of the circuit judges shall have authority to act at chambers, to be exercised as may be prescribed by the rules of the court; and as to matters pending in the district court, or relating thereto, when the district judge is disqualified or for any cause is unable to act, with the powers of a district judge. A circuit judge may also hold the district court, in place or in aid of the district judge, as the occasion may require.

SEC. 4. That the circuit court shall have the jurisdiction in criminal causes which is now provided by law, by writ of error to the district court, which writ may be issued out of the circuit court, on the allowance of one of the judges thereof, for cause shown of probable error, within sixty days after the entry of final judgment, during which time the judgment of the court shall not be executed, but remain in abeyance; and the circuit court shall also have appellate jurisdiction in such cases, by appeal from the final judgments of the district courts, and an appeal in such cases shall be a matter of right, and the practice, mode, and forms of procedure in the district court shall conform, as near as may be, to the practice, mode, and forms of procedure existing at the time in like criminal causes in the courts of record of the State within which said district courts are held, any rule of the court to the contrary notwithstanding. In the trial of indictments for crimes the punishment whereof is capital, one circuit judge of the circuit, to be designated by the circuit justice, shall sit with the district judge in the district court. The judgments of the district court in such cases shall be subject to be reviewed by writ of error, issued out of the Supreme Court, on the allowance of one of the justices thereof, for cause shown of probable error, within ninety days after the entry of such judgment, or on appeal thereto from the district to the Supreme Court in the mode and manner hereinbefore prescribed for appeals from the district to the circuit court in other criminal cases. All writs of error or appeals in criminal cases provided for by this act shall operate as a stay of all proceedings in such cases until their final determination; and a refusal to allow the writ by one judge or justice shall preclude its allowance by another.

SEC. 5. That civil causes, at law and in equity, removable from a State court into the circuit court of the United States under existing provisions of law may be removed into the district court of the district in the territorial jurisdiction of which they were commenced.

SEC. 6. That the circuit courts shall have the same appellate jurisdiction, by writ of error or appeal, to review the judgments, orders, and decrees of the supreme courts of the several Territories as by this act they may have to review the judgments, orders, and decrees of the district courts; and for that purpose the several Territories shall, by orders of the Supreme Court, to be made from time to time, be assigned to particular circuits.

SEC. 7. That the decision of the circuit court upon questions of fact shall in all equity cases be final and conclusive, except as otherwise provided in this section, the facts to be specially found if requested by either party; and the rulings of the court, occurring during the trial or hearing, upon the admission or rejection of evidence, or upon its legal effect, may be brought into the record by a bill of exceptions duly allowed and signed, according to the practice in cases at law, and a review upon all questions of law, upon the record, may be had, upon writ of error or appeal in the manner now provided by law, in the Supreme Court of the United States, of every final judgment or decree of the circuit court where the matter in controversy exceeds the sum or value of $10,000 exclusive of costs, or where the adjudication involves a question upon the construction of the Constitution, or the construction or validity of a treaty or a law of the United States, or where the circuit court shall certify that the adjudication involves a legal question of sufficient importance to require that the final decision thereof should be made by the Supreme Court; but in the last-mentioned two cases the circuit court shall state the question arising upon the construction of the Constitution or the construction or the validity of such treaty or law, or the question that the adjudication involves, with the facts upon which the same arises, and such questions only shall be certified to and finally decided by the Supreme Court; and its decisions thereon shall be enforced in like manner as is now provided by law in cases where a question is certified to the Supreme Court upon which the judges of a circuit court are divided in opinion. But in patent and copyright cases in equity a review by the Supreme Court may be had, without regard to the sum or value in dispute, upon the questions, both of law and fact, affecting the validity or the infringement of the patent or copyright. Such writ of error or appeal shall be sued out or taken within one year after the entry of the judgment or the decree sought to be reviewed. The Supreme Court may affirm, modify, or reverse the judgment or the decree brought before it for review, or may direct a judgment or a decree to be rendered or such further proceedings to be had as the justice of the case may require. The judgment or the decree shall be remitted to the proper circuit or district court, to be enforced according to law. If, within the year after the entry of the judgment or decree sought to be reversed, any party shall die, the personal representative or heir as the case may require, may, within one year next after the proof of the will or appointment of the administrator, or within one year next after the death of the ancestor in the case of an heir, sue out or be made a party to a writ of error, or take an appeal or be made a party thereto, without reviving the judgment or decree in the court in which the same was entered. But appeals taken to and writs of error from to the Supreme Court under existing laws before this act takes effect shall not be affected by this act.

SEC. 8. That no writ of error from or appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States shall lie in any cause, at law or in equity, determined by the supreme court of the District of Columbia, except in cases where the United States, or some officer thereof, acting under its authority, is a party, or when the adjudication involves a question upon the construction of the Constitution or the construction or validity of a treaty or a law of the United States, in which description of cases the questions for determination shall be certified by the supreme court of the District of Columbia, in the manner provided in the last preceding section as to writs of error and appeal in similar cases adjudged in the circuit courts.

SEC. 9. That the amount or value of the matter in controversy necessary to confer appellate jurisdiction in any case upon a court of the United States shall be measured by the pecuniary value of the interest therein of the plaintiff in error or appellant, and regarding as one party for such purpose all who are united in the record in a common or like interest in the prosecution or defense of the suit or the application or distribution of a common fund; but where it shall be made to appear to the appellate court that although the amount or value of the matter in controversy in the particular suit or action is less than that necessary to confer the jurisdiction by writ of error or appeal, but that the judgment sought to be reviewed directly concludes, by way of estoppel or by agreement of parties, an amount in value equal to or in excess of the required amount, the jurisdiction shall be exercised.

SEC. 10. That nothing in this act contained shall affect the laws now in force in relation to appeals in cases of prize from the district court, or to appeals in cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction from the circuit court to the Supreme Court of the United States; and all laws now in force in relation to writs of error and appeals from the district court to the circuit court, and from the circuit court to the Supreme Court, so far as applicable, shall continue and remain in force for the purpose of giving effect to the provisions of this act.

SEC. 11. That this act shall not affect cases now pending: Provided, however, That all undetermined suits, actions, and proceedings pending in the circuit courts as original suits, or of which they may have jurisdiction by removal from a State court, at the time this act takes effect, of which the district court would have original jurisdiction according to the provisions hereof, shall be transferred from the circuit courts to the proper district court, together with all writs, process, papers, and transcript of previous orders and proceedings; and all further proceedings therein shall be had in the district court. And this act shall take effect immediately after its approval as to the appointment of judges herein provided for, and in all other respects six months after the approval thereof.

SEC. 12. That all existing provisions of law relating to the designation, appointment, and compensation of a district judge to hold a district court in place or in aid of any other district judge within the same circuit are continued in force, such designation and appointment to be made by the senior circuit judge.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to announce to the House that, in view of the importance of this measure and in view of the numerous calls for the bill and the report, I took occasion to have a limited number of reports printed for my own use. I have them now at my desk, and any gentleman who has been unable to procure a copy in the document-room can get one here by sending for it.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill how much time is to be allowed to the opposition to this bill or for general debate?

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I have no disposition at this time to indicate any limit to the debate. The Committee on the Judiciary are perfectly willing that this measure shall have ample and thorough consideration. On that subject I may be permitted to state that this bill has gone through three different prints in the Judiciary Committee at the present session, and that the committee have gone through the bill section by section and line by line on each occasion, endeavoring in every conceivable way to produce a measure that would be thoroughly clear, thoroughly comprehensive, and yet as brief in its verbiage as it could possibly be made, so as to meet, as far as possible, every exigency that can arise with reference to the necessities of the country touching the Federal judiciary. Without going at this time into any extensive observations, I now yield the floor to the gentleman from Texas, the chairman of the committee [Mr. CULBERSON], who will explain to the House the provisions of this bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as this bill will be read and discussed by sections, I deem it proper at this time only to call the attention of the House to some of the changes proposed in the existing law. The bill proposes radical and important changes in the judiciary system of the United States, and I desire briefly—very briefly at that—to call the attention of the House now to some of the more important of those changes, in order that members may have before them the entire intent and scope of the measure.

By the provisions of the first section of the bill, all the original jurisdiction now vested in and exercised by the circuit courts of the United States, save original jurisdiction in habeas corpus, mandamus, and prohibition, is vested in the district court of the United States; so that, if this bill becomes law, the district courts of the United States will be vested with all the original jurisdiction, with the exceptions named, now vested by law in the district courts and in the circuit courts of the United States.

The second section of the bill provides that the circuit courts of the United States shall be reconstructed in this way: After this bill goes into effect the circuit courts of the United States will be composed of a circuit justice of the United States and two circuit judges; two constituting a quorum. If, for any cause, a quorum of these judges should not attend it is provided that the presiding justice shall designate a district judge to occupy the bench in place of the absent judge. It is also provided that the circuit judges shall have the powers of a district judge, and shall exercise the powers of the district court whenever may become necessary by reason of the absence, sickness, or disqualification of the district judge. In order to construct and organize the circuit court in this way, the bill provides for the appointment of nine additional circuit judges.

Section 3 provides that the circuit court so constructed shall have jurisdiction to hear and revise upon writ of error all cases proper for such writ, and in all other cases an appeal may be taken from any final judgment or decree of the district court; and the court is also given jurisdiction to review all judgments in admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, as now provided by law. So it will be perceived that every final judgment or decree rendered by a district court may be reviewed in the circuit court as established by the provisions of this bill. It is provided further, by this section, as a matter of detail, that a writ of error shall not be sued out after six months.

Another important provision, changing the existing law, is in line 10 of the third section. An appeal is there given from an interlocutory judgment or decree of a district court in matters of equity. While the bill gives this right of appeal to the circuit court from an interlocutory judgment or decree of a district court, it does not suspend proceedings in the main cause. Gentlemen will remember that under the law as it now exists an appeal from an interlocutory judgment in an equity cause does not lie.

The sixth section of the bill provides that all civil cases at law and equity removable now from a State court to a Federal court, or into the circuit court of the United States, shall be removable into the district court of the United States instead of the circuit court.

Under the law as it now exists an appeal lies from a final judgment or decree of the supreme court of any of the Territories to the United States Supreme Court.

The sixth section of this bill provides that there may be an appeal or a writ of error from final judgments of the supreme court of any Territory to the circuit court of the United States, or from the district to the circuit courts, as contemplated by this measure; and in order to accommodate that provision judges of the circuit court are required to attach each of the Territories of the United States to some one of the circuits in which these appeals and writs of error may be heard.

Section 7 provides that the judgments of the circuit court shall be final except where the matter in controversy exceeds the sum of $10,000, in which case an appeal or writ of error, as the case may be, lies to the Supreme Court of the United States. Further, where the adjudication involves a provision of the Constitution or laws of the United States or a treaty made in pursuance of the laws of the United States, the judgment in such case may be reviewed in the Supreme Court of the United States without reference to the amount involved; and a similar right of review will exist wherever the circuit court shall certify that the question involved in the suit is of sufficient importance to demand a revision by the Supreme Court.

Under the law as it now exists an appeal lies directly from the supreme court of the District of Columbia to the Supreme Court of the United States in any controversy which involves $2,500 or more. By the provisions of this act it is proposed to limit that right of revision to cases which involve a question upon the construction of the Constitution of the United States or the construction or validity of any treaty or law of the United States. Thus it will be perceived that the supreme court of the District of Columbia in this matter will be placed, with reference to appeals to the Supreme Court of the United States on Federal questions, upon the exact footing of a State court.

Mr. WARNER. The gentleman will pardon me for asking, before he leaves this point, upon what questions does the supreme court of the District of Columbia have to pass except questions arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States, as the District is governed entirely by acts of Congress. In this view, might not the provision to which the gentleman refers enlarge the right of appeal from the supreme court of the District of Columbia to the Supreme Court of the United States? I ask this question merely for information; I have not considered the bill carefully.

Mr. CULBERSON. I understand the gentleman's proposition. It will be noticed that I omitted to state one class of cases which may be reviewed in the Supreme Court of the United States upon writs of error to the supreme court of the District of Columbia; that is, cases where the United States or some officer acting under the authority of the United States is a party. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] asks me whether this provision with reference to the supreme court of the District of Columbia might not enlarge the number of cases which would go from that court to the Supreme Court of the United States. I think not. Unless the question depends upon a proper construction of the Constitution or some law or treaty of the United States it would not fall within the provision of this section. A case decided by the application of the general principles of law does not involve, of course, any Federal question.

Section 10 provides—

That nothing in this act contained shall affect the laws now in force in relation to appeals in cases of prize from the district court, or to appeals in cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction from the circuit court, to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Section 11 preserves the present status of pending litigation in the courts.

Section 12 is a matter of mere detail.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there are, so far as I am concerned, two great leading objects in view in advocacy of the passage of this bill. I desire, first and above all things, to destroy the judicial despotism now exercised by the district courts of the United States. Secondly, I desire to relieve the overburdened docket of the Supreme Court of the United States. In this connection I will ask the Clerk to read an extract from an address recently delivered by Mr. Justice Harlan, which will show the condition of that docket.

Before the Clerk proceeds to read the extract I have marked from the speech of Associate Justice Harlan of the Supreme Court, I wish to call attention to the fourth section of the bill, which provides—

That the circuit court shall have the jurisdiction in criminal cases which is now provided by law by writ of error to the district court.

It will be remembered that under existing law the writ of error lies from the circuit court to the district court in criminal cases where the punishment does not exceed a fine of $300 or imprisonment. The provision made by this bill retains that appellate jurisdiction of the circuit court. It also provides:

In the trial of indictments for crimes, the punishment whereof is capital, one circuit judge of the circuit, to be designated by the circuit justice, shall sit with the district judge in the district court.

Mr. MORROW. I see it is provided in the trial of indictments for crimes the punishment whereof is capital, one circuit judge is to be designated by the circuit justice to sit with the district judge in the district court. It is provided also in section 3 that a circuit judge may also hold the district court in place of or in aid of the district judge as the occasion may require. If the opinion of the district judge and the circuit judge should be opposed on any matter or any ruling upon evidence or instruction to the jury, is there any provision which opinion should prevail?

Mr. CULBERSON. There should be such a provision that the opinion of the senior judge should prevail in such a case.

Mr. MORROW. Is it proposed to amend the bill in that particular?

Mr. CULBERSON. There should be such an amendment. As I do not desire to trespass upon the attention of the House at this time, I will conclude by asking the members of the House to listen to the extract which the Clerk will read from a speech made by Associate Justice Harlan, to show the present condition of the Supreme Court docket.

The Clerk read as follows:

Occasionally I have seen it stated in the public prints that the Supreme Court ought to clear its entire docket during each term. Those who thus complain are without accurate information as to the amount of its business. They have no conception of the extent to which that business has increased since the organization of the Government, especially within the past thirty years. Think of it; in 1803 the whole number of cases on the docket of the Supreme Court was 51. In 1819, when the court determined the great cases of Sturges vs. Crowninshield, McCulloch vs. State of Maryland, and Dartmouth College vs. Woodward, there were 131 cases, of which 53 were disposed of during the term. But in 1860 the number on its docket had increased to 310, of which 91 were determined during the term. In 1870 the docket contained 636 cases, of which 280 were decided during the term. In 1880 the whole number was 1,202, of which 365 were disposed of during the term. In 1886 the docket had increased to 1,396 cases, of which 451 were disposed of during the term. Is it just to litigants that this condition of things continue? The remedy is not with the Supreme Court. After service of ten years as a member of that court, I am able to say that it moves with all the rapidity that is physically possible. Its members can do no more than they are doing. With rare exceptions, the court decides each term, and before its members start for their respective circuits, every case reached and submitted during that term. If the court had twice the number of justices it now has, no more business could be done by it than has been done, unless the court were divided into sections, a scheme which, it is to be hoped, will never be adopted. The Constitution makes provision for one Supreme Court. Without expressing any opinion as to whether its division into sections would be admissible under the Constitution, I may say that it would be unfortunate for the country if that court should ever be so enlarged in the number of its members as practically to convert it into a town-meeting upon questions of constitutional or general law.

Mr. CULBERSON. I now yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. WEAVER. The bill also curtails appeals, or looks in that direction, from the Supreme Court. It enlarges the amount necessary for an appeal from the circuit to the Supreme Court. Has the committee made any calculation as to the amount of curtailment in the business of the Supreme Court which will be made by this provision?

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not know whether the committee has made any such investigation on that point or not, but some members have done so, and we are told that will have the effect to diminish the business of the Supreme Court one-third.

Mr. WEAVER. I understand the adoption of this provision will then diminish the business of the Supreme Court one-third.

Mr. ROGERS. How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has thirty-five minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. ROGERS. There has been no indication on the part of the House or on the part of any gentleman to speak at this time.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. If the gentleman is not disposed to proceed with his remarks, I will take the floor, if there be no objection, and ask to be recognized.

Mr. ROGERS. I will reserve my time and yield the floor to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, this is a very important question and should have the most deliberate consideration on the part of the House.

Mr. ROGERS. Nor have I the remotest desire to adopt any other course. In the opening I called attention to the importance of the subject-matter now pending, and proposed it should have full and ample consideration.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I shall be very glad if I can have the attention of the House. I have not consumed much of the time of the House in talking and I have no disposition to waste it now or at any time. But as I have now an opportunity to address myself to a proposition which to my mind is superior in importance to any other question which will present itself to the House, I must crave permission to be heard. I would not appeal to the House now to give me its attention except for the fact I propose to address myself to a proposition of this character and one of peculiar interest to my own people.

So far as the provisions in detail of this reorganization bill are concerned I must pass them by for the present. I want now to speak of one feature of the bill especially. I will read a few lines from the third section of the pending bill:

The circuit court shall have power to issue writs of error, mandamus, prohibition, scire facias, habeas corpus, and all other writs which may be necessary or proper to the exercise of its jurisdiction and agreeable to the principles and usages of law; and said court shall have original jurisdiction in cases of habeas corpus, mandamus, and prohibition.

At the beginning of the last Congress I introduced a bill to limit the jurisdiction of Federal courts. That is the bill which above all others I feel most interest in. I have introduced it again this Congress. I I am something like an old hen with one chicken so far as that bill is concerned. I have clucked every time it has come in sight and I propose to cluck whenever I have an opportunity until I can get the proposition embodied into law. As part of my remarks I ask the Clerk to read that bill of mine, which at the proper time I will offer as an amendment to the pending bill, in the form I now propose, to follow immediately after the lines I have just read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, The jurisdiction of the district and circuit courts of the United States shall not be deemed to extend to any judicial or other officer elected or appointed under the laws of any State to compel by mandamus or other writ the performance by such officer of any official act arising under or authorized to be done by the laws of such State.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I propose now to have read a memorial from the judges of one of the county courts of my district and it will explain in part why I am especially anxious to have some such provision as that suggested by my amendment incorporated into the statutes of this country. I ask the House to listen to the reading of this memorial.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

The undersigned, citizens of the United States and the State of Missouri, respectfully represent that they are the judges of the county court of St. Clair County, Missouri, a court of record, upon which court the statutes of that State impose the duty of levying taxes on all property in said county for public purposes. That the power of said court to levy taxes for any and all county purposes is limited by the constitution and statutes of the State to one-half of 1 per cent., based on the last assessment for State and county purposes; and the said court is forbidden and prohibited by the laws of the State from levying, or attempting to levy, any tax for county purposes in excess of said limitation until first ordered so to do by the (State) circuit court, or judge thereof in vacation, having jurisdiction in said county, according to certain forms and methods prescribed by the statutes of the State; and any violation of said statutes by any county judge, or other county officer, is made a crime punishable by a fine of not less than $500 and forfeiture of his office.

Your memorialists further represent that notwithstanding the premises the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Missouri, on April 23, 1887, issued its writ of mandamus to the undersigned, commanding them as judges of said county court to levy a tax on all property in said St. Clair County, largely in excess of the limitation aforementioned, for the purpose of raising a county fund sufficient to satisfy a certain judgment theretofore rendered in said United States circuit court against said county, to which writ your memorialists, as respondents, made return to the effect that they could not obey the writ without violating the laws of the State which they had been elected, commissioned, and sworn to execute, and subjecting themselves to criminal prosecution and punishment. Thereupon the said circuit court quashed the return and attached your memorialists for contempt, and on the 23d day of November, 1887, made an order committing them to the common jail in Cole County, Missouri, there to remain until they acknowledge themselves ready and willing to levy a tax according to the mandate of said court, or until the further order of said court; and accordingly your memorialists were committed to, and have been since confined in, said jail.

Protesting against this deprivation of liberty as a gross personal wrong, and, what is of still greater consequence, as a dangerous subversion of the rights of the State in imprisoning her judicial officers for refusing to violate her laws; and yet being without remedy, your memorialists humbly pray that Congress will investigate the legality of their imprisonment and take such action as may seem proper for their relief and for the protection of State officers from such violence and injury in future.

JOHN F. TAUDY,
Presiding Judge.
ALBERT HOYT,
S. C. PEDEN,
Associates.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I desire to make that memorial the basis of what I purpose to say. These judges are the judges of a court of record of the State of Missouri. They represent a part of the judicial machinery of that State. They have jurisdiction to issue writs of habeas corpus and injunction, and have jurisdiction over a multitude of important matters. They audit all accounts against the county, draw all warrants on the treasury, distribute and control the public-school funds, revise the assessments of property for taxation, and, in short, are the most important of all our officers in the administration of county affairs, and among the most important in the administration of State affairs.

These judges are now in jail, literally behind the bars of a jail, and have been there for four months, or since about the last of November, 1887. They are, I repeat, absolutely and literally in a cell, confined as prisoners, on the order of a Federal judge. The memorial which the Clerk has just read in part explains the occasion for this imprisonment; but I desire to elaborate that statement somewhat, and I think gentlemen who hear me will sympathize with my anxiety to secure the legislation I am proposing, and I hope to win to my assistance votes enough to ingraft it on the pending bill.

At the close of the war and for some years afterwards Missouri, or that part of the State in which St. Clair County is situated, was in a condition of great disorder and confusion. A large percentage of the most intelligent people were deprived of the right of suffrage and the right to hold office. In many instances the bad elements were in the ascendant, and irresponsible county officers—de facto county judges—assuming to act under the laws as they then existed, issued, or pretended to issue, bonds of the counties almost without limit and for almost every conceivable purpose, and to dispose of them upon the best terms they could, and often for their personal advantage.

St. Clair County was the victim of one of these outrages. De facto county judges fraudulently assumed to and did issue the bonds of that county, aggregating in amount several hundred thousand dollars, in aid of an imaginary railroad upon which, practically, not a lick of work has ever been struck, or ever will be.

These bonds were disposed of. Subsequently the question as to the legality of their issue, and the binding character of the bonds as obligations of the county, came before the State judiciary, and the State courts held that the bonds were fraudulently issued, and issued without compliance with the substantial requirements of the law, and therefore were not binding upon the county. The bondholders sought relief in the Federal courts, and those courts, ignoring the adjudications of the State courts, held to the contrary, and adjudged that the bonds having been issued by men who were ostensibly agents of the municipality, and being (as they decided) negotiable paper in the hands of innocent purchasers, were valid and binding obligations.

A contest, quite animated and vigorous, has been going on ever since between the people of the county and the holders of these bonds—one seeking to enforce and the other to resist their collection. So far as this discussion is concerned, the legality or illegality of the bonds, whether they were honestly or dishonestly issued, is, to a great extent, a question of indifference. In a large measure that is a question foreign to the proposition I have before me, and affects it only in an incidental and collateral way. The Federal courts, in contravention of the State courts, held the bonds to be valid obligations and, as I have said, a contest has been going on ever since, in the courts and out of the courts, between the people of the county and the bondholders. Judgments were obtained from time to time against the county for large amounts in the circuit court of the United States sitting at Jefferson City. Mandamuses were issued to the judges of the county court requiring them to levy and collect a tax with which to satisfy those judgments. Out of those writs of mandamus this imprisonment has grown.

Under the laws of the State of Missouri, the judges of the county courts have absolutely no original power to levy such a tax. The law of the State authorizes the county courts to levy taxes to a limited extent; in counties of the class of St. Clair, to the extent of one-half of 1 per cent., or 50 cents on the hundred dollars of valuation. But that tax is expressly declared to be for the purpose of meeting the current county expenses, and for that only. The constitution of the State and the statutes of the State, affirmed and interpreted by the decisions of the supreme court, confer jurisdiction upon the county courts to levy this limited tax for specific purposes; and the same laws specify the uses to which these revenues shall be appropriated. That is to say, for purely county purposes—for the support of the poor and insane, for roads and bridges, for the payment of salaries of county officials, for witness and jury fees, election expenses, and the like. The laws of the State provide that the county court shall have no original jurisdiction to levy any other tax; and if a necessity exists for an additional tax to pay an existing debt, or there is any occasion for an extraordinary tax, another course of proceedings is required. No original jurisdiction is conferred upon the county courts to levy a tax to meet any such extraordinary demands; but on the contrary, such jurisdiction is expressly withheld.

Mr. PETERS. I would like to interrupt the gentleman from Missouri to ask if that defense was set up by these county court officials?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. It was, I will state to the gentleman; but I am coming to that in a moment.

I want the House to understand the exact status of this question. To my mind it is one of the most profound interest, and if gentlemen will be patient and hear me through, I will endeavor to explain the facts as fully as I can in my awkward way. I can not speak eloquently, but I do speak with feeling. I move with a leaden step and stumble as I go, and though I may tax your patience I ask you to hear me, for my heart is full of my subject.

I said, Mr. Chairman, that the county court had no original jurisdiction to levy the tax it was commanded to levy, a tax to pay judgments rendered on bonds of the county.

Where the necessity for such a tax exists the law requires that the county court shall cause the county attorney, who is an officer of that court, to prepare and present a petition to the State circuit court, which is a court of common law jurisdiction, or to the judge in vacation, setting forth the necessity and the reason for the tax, and all the facts connected with it; and the circuit judge, or court, shall examine the petition, and, after understanding the facts, if he shall hold that the debt is a valid one, and the tax a proper one to be levied, he can issue his order authorizing and empowering the county court to levy the tax; which order may be a continuing one, from year to year, as long as the necessity for the tax exists, or until it is revoked by the order of the court which made it.

The county court, I say, is devoid of jurisdiction and power to levy the tax in the first instance. The power to make the levy does not exist until the circuit court confers it in the manner provided by law. I have a brief here referring to several cases decided by our supreme court supporting what I say. I hold in my hand one of the very last reports issued containing the opinions of the court. It is volume 91 of the Missouri Reports, and the case I refer to is directly in point. A judgment was recovered in the Federal circuit court against the county of Cape Girardeau upon bonds similar to those involved in the St. Clair County controversy; a mandamus issued from the Federal court to the county judges requiring them to levy a tax to pay the judgment. The county attorney of that county went into the State circuit court with a petition for an injunction to restrain the county judges from levying the tax. The injunction was granted; an appeal was taken, and in that way the question was presented to the supreme court of the State. That court held that the county judges could not lawfully levy the tax. Let me read from the opinion:

The circuit court granted a temporary injunction restraining the judges of the county court of Cape Girardeau County, and others, from collecting a certain special tax of 2 per cent. ordered to be levied on all real and personal property in Cape Girardeau Township for the purpose of paying certain judgments rendered in the United States circuit court for the eastern district of Missouri, which judgments were based on coupons attached to bonds issued under the provisions of the act of March 23, 1868, commonly known as the township-aid act. On final hearing the temporary injunction was made perpetual, and this ruling was based on the express ground that the steps required by section 6799 had not been complied with prior to extending the tax on the tax-books and levying the same.

That section 6799 is the section of the statutes which provides that the county courts shall have no power to levy such taxes until jurisdiction and authority is conferred by the circuit court. But I read further:

It has been ruled by this court that taxes of the nature now in question can only be levied and collected in the manner provided in said section, and that unless the methods prescribed are pursued, the failure to pursue them, when, as here, they are the conditions essential to the exercise of the power, will render the tax invalid. (State ex rel. vs. Railroad, 87 Mo., 236.) Here those methods, those conditions precedent, were not followed; and hence the county court, having no inherent power to levy a tax and deriving its only authority from the State, must of necessity pursue the course in this regard marked out by the sovereign authority by its laws. (State ex rel. vs. Railroad, supra.)

Nor do I see that the matter being discussed is at all affected because the action of the county court was produced by the mandate of the Federal court. If, as already seen, the county court was powerless to act, except when acting in conformity to express statutory conditions, it was still the duty of the judges to comply with those conditions, while yielding obedience to the mandate aforesaid; for outside of those statutory conditions they were utterly powerless to act. Indeed, under section 6800, they were punishable for a misdemeanor in failing to comply with the provisions of section 6799 before levying the tax. It does not stand to reason that their act could be valid and still at the same time punishable as a crime. (State ex rel. vs. Garoutte, 67 Mo. loc. cit., 456.)

I have read that to put beyond controversy the correctness of my statement, that the county judges now in jail have no power to levy the tax which the Federal court ordered them to levy until the State circuit court shall first confer jurisdiction and authority.

I am informed that since the mandamus was served upon the county judges they filed their petition with the State circuit court setting forth the fact that the mandamus had been served upon them, and asking that authority might be given to them to levy the tax in obedience to the mandate of the court. But the State circuit court, having long before held the bonds to be invalid, and as that court first obtained jurisdiction and was the first to decide that question, and as it is a court of concurrent and co-ordinate jurisdiction with the Federal court as to such matters, it did not feel disposed to yield, and refused to yield, to the later decisions of the Federal court, which had treated the prior judgment of the State court with contempt, and so refused to authorize the levy of the tax. I understand that to be the situation. I may not be accurate in all the details, but, according to my information, I state the case substantially as it is. The county judges then are wholly devoid of power to make the levy required, and any attempt to do so would subject them to a criminal prosecution and heavy penalties under the statutes of the State.

They made return of these facts to the Federal circuit court, setting forth that they were without authority to levy the tax commanded, and that any attempt to levy it would subject them not only to suits for damages at the instance of tax-payers whose property might be seized, but to a criminal prosecution under the law of the State, which declares that any officer who shall levy, or attempt to levy, or collect any tax, except in strict accordance with the provisions of the statute, shall forfeit his office and be liable to a fine of not less than $500.

In the face of all that the Federal court held that the return was bad and quashed it, and issued a warrant committing the judges for contempt, and they have been under duress ever since.

Mr. PETERS. Could not they take an appeal to the United States Supreme Court?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. They did not.

Mr. PETERS. Why?

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. Because, as the gentleman from Missouri says, they have been in jail. Is not that so?

Mr. OATES. No appeal lies for contempt.

Mr. PETERS. I think we ought to remedy that by legislation.

A MEMBER. Why don't they appeal to the Supreme Court? Would not that court set it right?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I will come to that in moment. Mr. Chairman, some gentleman has asked about an appeal, and what the Supreme Court would do. I do not know. I see in the Western newspapers that only a few days since an application for a writ of habeas corpus was made to the Federal circuit court and refused, and I am informed that papers are now being prepared with a view to presenting the question to the Supreme Court of the United States. What the Supreme Court may decide I do not know. I am glad to observe a growing disposition on the part of the Supreme Court to get back on safe ground once more, to respect the limitations of the Constitution, and the reserved rights of the States. The case of Ex parte Rowland, reported in 104 United States Reports, which was a habeas corpus proceeding brought by the commissioners of a county in Alabama, the Supreme Court retreated somewhat from the advances it had made in the wrong direction. And the more recent Virginia habeas corpus cases indicate that the Supreme Court justices, or most of them, have been baptized anew in the waters of the Constitution. Still the departure of that court from the earlier doctrines has in many respects been so radical that no mortal man can tell what it may decide when the case of these imprisoned judges is presented. I believe, as the tendency now is, they would be discharged; but that is altogether a matter of conjecture when we take in view the decisions of that court in corresponding cases. I beg the House to follow me while I examine briefly some of the more important cases, illustrating the disposition and views of the Supreme Court, and explaining why I say the law is now in a state of uncertainty, and demonstrating the necessity for legislative interference.

Mr. Chairman, during the first eighty years of our history, that is, prior to December, 1860, the right of the Federal Government to control State officers in the administration of State laws had not been asserted. More than that, prior to December, 1863, the Supreme Court of the United States, by a long and unbroken chain of decisions, had established the doctrine and observed the rule of following the latest decisions of the supreme court of a State in the interpretation of its own constitution and laws. In the case of The United States vs. Morrison, reported in 4 Peters, 124, Chief-Justice Marshall, while presiding over the circuit court for the district of Virginia, decided that a judgment in that State was, under the circumstances of that case, a lien on the real estate of the judgment debtor. The case was appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, and soon thereafter the court of appeals of Virginia, in another case, held the contrary. When the case appealed to the Supreme Court came up Chief-Justice Marshall said he would follow the recent decision of the court of appeals without examination, although it required the reversal of a judgment in the circuit court rendered before that decision was made.

In the case of Green vs. Neal, 4 Peters, 291, the Supreme Court, in the language of Justice Miller, in the case I hold here—overruled two former decisions of its own, based upon former decisions of the State court of Tennessee, in order to follow a later decision of the State court, after the law had been supposed to be settled for many years.

And that doctrine was followed and emphasized by a great many decisions for three-quarters of a century.

In 1860 the tide turned. It is well, as we go along, to notice the character and the subject-matter of the litigation. Aspinwall and others were the owners of certain coupon-bonds of Knox County, Indiana, upon which judgment was obtained before the circuit court of the United States for that district. Failing to realize by execution, a mandamus was issued to the commissioners of Knox County, commanding them to levy a tax, under the laws of the State, to pay the judgment. Seven years afterwards Judge Miller, in combating it as a doctrine dangerous and subversive, referred to it as—the first instance in which a Federal court ever issued a writ of mandamus to a State officer in the history of this Government.

Mr. OATES. If it will not interrupt the gentleman's line of remark, I wish to ask him whether he is not aware that the Supreme Court of the United States have held in the case of Rowland, and in other cases, that the remedy is by habeas corpus, no appeal lying; and that whenever the law of the State does not authorize the judge or officer imprisoned to do the act his imprisonment is unlawful?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I am aware of that case, and I have referred to it already, though I think my friend states it rather broadly.

Mr. OATES. Does not the gentleman think that the amendment proposed by the Committee on the Judiciary to section 725 of the Revised Statutes covers the case he has in mind?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I do not. I think that is simply a declaration of the law as it exists.

Mr. OATES. I admit that it is declaratory; but will it not be sufficient to meet the case?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. It is sufficient to declare the law as it is already understood.

Mr. OATES. It puts, in substance, on the statute-book what the court has decided.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Possibly. But I think it furnishes no substantial remedy for the evil I am complaining of.

Mr. OATES. The Supreme Court of the United States has decided it in several cases.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. In the Alabama case referred to by my friend [Mr. OATES], the commissioners of the county had been ordered by mandamus to levy and collect a tax, and they did levy the tax, and the books were put into the hands of the collector. Under the laws of Alabama the collector was required to execute an ordinary bond for the collection of ordinary taxes, but before he was authorized to collect that special and extraordinary tax, he was required to execute an additional or special bond. That he was not able to do, and——

Mr. OATES. And Judge Rowland, under the law, had no power to collect the tax.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. He had no power to collect the tax, and on that account the Supreme Court held that his imprisonment was contrary to law, and he was released. I have referred to that case.

Mr. OATES. The Supreme Court has uniformly held, wherever the question has been brought before it, that if there is no law authorizing the State officer to do that which the Federal court requires him to do, his imprisonment is unlawful.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I have just stated that there was absolutely no law under which these county judges could levy this tax. I speak with reference to the conditions as they existed. I go further, and say that the circuit judge of that circuit has recently dismissed an application for a habeas corpus——

Mr. OATES. How does it come to the Supreme Court?

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. The case, I understand, is coming to the Supreme Court. What the Supreme Court may do is altogether problematical. I understand the Federal courts below hold that if the State circuit court refuses to confer authority on the county court to levy the tax, that the order of the Federal court will take the place and supersede the necessity of a jurisdictional order by the State court. But let me proceed.

In 1863 the next step was taken. Then the old doctrine that the Supreme Court would follow the latest decisions of the State courts in the construction of their own laws was wrecked and thrown aside. I refer to the case of Gelpcke vs. The city of Dubuque, 1 Wallace, 175. The action was founded on municipal bonds issued in aid of a railroad. The supreme court of Iowa, by a divided bench, two affirming and one denying, at first held the law under which the bonds were issued to be constitutional.

Some time afterward the same court, by a unanimous decision, overruled the former decision rendered by a divided court, and held the law unconstitutional. Between the dates of the two decisions the bonds in litigation were issued. The conflict in the courts of Iowa was a stubborn and passionate one; and when, finally, the bondholders were routed in the courts of the State they fled to the Federal courts, and those courts, overturning an old established doctrine, complacently held that they were not bound by and would not follow the latest decision of the State court, interpreting its own constitution, but would be governed by the former divided opinion. The justice who rendered the opinion took occasion to make this complimentary allusion to the supreme court of Iowa:

> The late case in Iowa and two other cases of a kindred character in another State, also overruling earlier adjudications, stand out, as far as we are advised, in unenviable solitude and notoriety. We shall never immolate truth, justice, and the law because a State tribunal has erected the altar and decreed the sacrifice.

A State tribunal, indeed! A tribunal which has given to the country some of the most eminent jurists of this century is hardly a tribunal to be discredited in so flippant a way. It is a tribunal in whose hands any mortal man who has a just right under the laws of the State is perfectly safe. And Justice Miller, who rendered an unanswerable dissenting opinion, very justly resented the slight put upon the State court, and wisely asked what special charge did Federal courts have over contracts beyond other courts, except to declare judicially whether the statute of a State impairs their obligation, a question which did not arise in that case, as the construction of the very statute under which the plaintiff claimed was the subject of discussion.

But the decision involved something of far more importance than the question of ethics. It was the first announcement of the doctrine that the Federal courts would follow the decision of the State courts in interpreting their own laws only when it suited them to do so. Let me read a part of Judge Miller's dissenting opinion:

> The court has, in this case, taken a step in advance of anything heretofore decided by it on this subject. That advance is in the direction of a usurpation of the right which belongs to the State courts, to decide as a finality upon the construction of State constitutions and State statutes. This invasion is made in a case where there is no pretense that the constitution, as thus construed, is any infraction of the laws or Constitution of the United States.

The next important step in what Justice Miller denominates this march of judicial usurpation was taken in 1867, in the case of Riggs vs. Johnson County, 6 Wallace, 166. This was the greatest stride of all up to that date. Johnson County, Iowa, had issued bonds in aid of a railroad. The supreme court of the State held the law under which the bonds were issued to be unconstitutional. The Federal courts held otherwise. Mr. Riggs, a holder of Johnson County bonds, obtained judgment against the county in the Federal circuit court. After this, various tax-payers of the county filed a bill in chancery in one of the State courts against the county commissioners, alleging that the bonds were void from the beginning, and had been repeatedly held so by the supreme court of Iowa, and praying a perpetual injunction to the commissioners against levying any tax to pay them, which injunction the State court granted. Afterwards Mr. Riggs applied to the Federal circuit court for a writ of mandamus to the commissioners to compel them to levy a tax not only to pay the bonds merged in the judgment, but to continue the tax from year to year until all the bonds were paid, whether embraced in the judgment or not. The commissioners answered, setting up the injunction previously laid on them by the State court. The circuit court sustained the commissioners, held the return good, and refused a peremptory writ. Mr. Riggs appealed. The Supreme Court reversed the decision and directed the mandamus to issue. Again Justice Miller delivered an able and exhaustive dissenting opinion, in which he was sustained by Chief-Justice Chase and Justice Grier. I wish I had time to read the entire opinion; but I have not. I can only read some extracts from it.

I read as follows:

> In the case of Gelpcke vs. Dubuque I felt called upon to point out the evil consequences likely to flow from the doctrine there asserted for the first time—that the construction given by the State courts to their own constitutions and statutes could be disregarded and overruled by the Federal courts sitting in the same States and deciding the same controversies. These consequences are now apparent in the judgment just rendered, whereby the State officers are commanded to disobey an injunction of a State court rendered in regular judicial proceedings to which they were proper parties, in a matter of which that court had undoubted jurisdiction, concerning the levy of a tax under State laws.
> It may not be inappropriate to review the steps by which this court has gradually arrived at the conclusion that it can do this, for the purpose of enforcing the payment of bonds issued without authority of law, out of the property of those who never consented to their issue or agreed to pay them.
> In almost all the cases where municipal corporations have any authority at all to issue such bonds the statutes which give the authority require that there shall first be a vote of the majority of the people of the municipality approving the purpose for which they are issued and authorizing their issue. Of course, the law fixes the manner of taking this vote, and I believe that until this court decided to the contrary no court had ever held that such bonds were valid without a substantial compliance with the statutes on that subject.
> But in the case of The Commissioners of Knox County vs. Aspinwall, 21 How., it was held that the commissioners, whose duty it was to issue these bonds in the event that a majority voted them, were to be the exclusive and final judges of their own authority. It was said that because it became their duty to determine whether the bonds had been legally voted or not, before they issued them, therefore the fact that they had issued them was conclusive of the vote and of their own authority, and precluded all inquiry into that question.
> These commissioners were merely the agents of the people of the municipality. Their authority depended on no private instructions, but on the public statutes of the State, which every person who dealt with them could examine. The proceedings for a vote were all of record, as well as the return of the officers taking the vote.
> Yet in the face of all this, when these agents transcend their authority and attempt to bind upon the people of the county a load of debt which may absorb all their property and heavily burden them for years, we are told that the agents were the final and exclusive judges of their own authority. When the highest court in the land renders a judgment or decree, any other court before which the matter may come has a right to inquire into its authority to pass such judgment; but these mere agents of the people, whose powers are limited by law, may, by merely asserting their authority, pass a decree which no court can examine, because none can dispute their jurisdiction.
> After this decision, no matter how illegal, fraudulent, or unauthorized were corporation bonds, no defense could be made to them in the Federal courts, and, of course, they were all sued upon in those courts.
> But when judgments were obtained, it was found that the ordinary executions did not always produce the money, and some new device was to be resorted to for this purpose. Accordingly, we find Mr. Aspinwall applying for a writ of mandamus to compel the board of commissioners to levy the tax necessary to pay his judgment. This court held, in 24 Howard, that he was entitled to the writ. This was decided only seven years ago, and is the first instance in which a Federal court ever issued a writ of mandamus to a State officer in the history of this Government.
> I shall examine into its authority to do so hereafter, but merely note it in passing as among the new doctrines which this court has found it necessary to establish to enforce payment of county bonds.
> The next step was the decision, already mentioned, of Gelpcke vs. Dubuque, in which the court held that the later decision of a State court on the construction of its own constitution, although unanimous, would be disregarded in this court in county bond cases in favor of the earlier decisions made by a divided court.
> In the present case we are required to take another step in the same direction, and one still more serious. We are asked by a mandamus to compel these municipal officers to disobey an injunction of the State court duly served on them, and made perpetual by a decree to which they were party, and which if they disobey they will be imprisoned for such disobedience.

The learned justice then proceeds at length to discuss and combat anew the right of the Federal courts to exercise such powers. In concluding he says this:

But if I am mistaken in all I have thus far been saying, there is another proposition, supported by a uniform current of authorities, which would preclude the issuing the writ of mandamus in this case; that is, that the writ is never issued to a party whom it would expose to imprisonment or other serious damage for obeying it.

With all the respect which I have for this court and for my brethren who differ with me, I take the liberty of saying it has no right to set aside all precedent and disregard established rules in the belief, however confidently entertained, that it is done in the cause of justice.

There was a case where the State court, having jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter, enjoined the collection of taxes, and the Supreme Court of the United States directed a mandamus to the same officials commanding them, in defiance of the injunction of the State court, to levy the tax. They are subjected to fine and imprisonment if they do, and subjected to fine and imprisonment if they do not.

There is a case to which I invite the attention of the gentleman from Alabama, directly in point, where these officers of the State are put between the fires of the State courts on the one side and the fires of the Federal courts on the other.

But here, Mr. Chairman, they have made another advance, and in this instance my own constituents are immediately interested. This time the Federal courts command the State officers to do an act which they have no lawful authority to do, and which an attempt to do would be in open violation of the law, result in a forfeiture of office, and lay them liable to a criminal prosecution.

There is the point we have now reached, following one step after another from the first disastrous mistake made in asserting the right to issue the writ of mandamus in such cases. First came the startling assertion of the right to issue the writ; then the overthrow of the doctrine that the Federal courts would conform to the State courts in the construction of State constitutions and statutes; then an order to State officers to disregard an injunction of their own State courts, issued and served in the regular course of judicial proceedings; and now comes an order requiring State officers to perform acts in excess of their lawful powers, thereby violating the laws of the State and committing a crime. And when those officers make respectful return of these facts they are told the defense is insufficient, and they are ordered to jail and are put behind the bars in sight of the very dome of the capitol within whose walls the laws were enacted which they were sworn to execute, by virtue of which their offices exist, and which they refuse to violate. Such a condition is intolerable. It is monstrous. If such a doctrine is to stand, State governments can not stand. It puts the officers of the State between the devil and the deep sea; they are damned if they do and damned if they do not.

Possibly we might come here and obtain release under the writ of habeas corpus, as suggested by the gentleman from Alabama. That doubtless will be tried. It has been tried before the circuit judge, and failed. I do not know what the Supreme Court may do. I do not know what a court which required the State officers of Iowa to levy a tax in disobedience of an injunction of the State judiciary, and at the same time declaring its ability and purpose to protect them from the consequences of such disobedience, may decide when the question is one, not of disobedience of the order of a court, but the violation of a public statute.

I think this matter ought not to be left where it is. We should not leave it to judicial settlement. The representatives of the people should take it in hand and strike at the root of the evil. We must relieve the States of this judicial despotism. We must entirely separate the machinery of the State and Federal Governments. That is the only safe and complete remedy. That is the purpose of my amendment, and that will be its effect if enacted into law.

But it is said if this is done the bondholders will be practically without remedy. That is the only objection I have heard urged. If you withdraw from the Federal courts the power to lay their hands upon the officers of the State, officers existing solely by virtue of State laws, for the purpose of executing State laws, and sworn to obey them, we are told you will endanger the precious interests of the bondholder. Are such interests of higher consequence than the preservation of our local governments and the liberties of the people? Shall we put the bondholder before the State?

The division-line between Federal and State powers ought not to be obscure. It is reasonably clear. Upon this head I wish to read one or two lines from an opinion delivered in 1870 by the Supreme Court, which will be found in 11 Wallace, 124. The case is Collector vs. Day.

The General Government and the State, although within the same territorial limits, are separate and distinct sovereignties, acting separately and independently of each other within their respective spheres. The former in its appropriate sphere is supreme; but the States within the limits of their powers not granted, or in the language of the Tenth Amendment "reserved," are as independent of the Federal Government as that Government, in its sphere, is independent of the States.

I say it is monstrous that officers who are elected or appointed under State laws to execute State laws, who are sworn to execute those laws, and are put under bonds to do so, should be put in a position where the Federal courts can command them to do one thing, while the State courts and the State laws may command them to do another.

Here is a great evil bristling with danger. We should supply a remedy, sharp, clear, and decisive, and be prompt about it. Let us separate the Federal courts and the State governments. Let the line be drawn broadly. Something in the nature of my proposition, and nothing short of it, will answer the purpose or meet the demand. Would you be willing to enact a statute subordinating your State governments to the Federal judiciary? Would you by express enactment be willing to authorize that judiciary to do what it has arbitrarily done without any enactment at all? If not, then come to the rescue of your home governments. If in truth the bondholder should get hurt, all the worse for him. But there is no truth in nor justification for the statement that public creditors will be denied or endangered in any just right they may have. Why should they, and why will they be? They will be upon an equality with all other citizens, and I know of no reason why they should be given special consideration. The courts of the State will be open to them, if they desire to invoke the power of the State and use its machinery. If they have no respect for or confidence in the State courts, the Federal courts will still, I say, remain open. They can sue there and recover their judgments. The only thing I propose is that when they go into the Federal courts they must depend upon the machinery of those courts to enforce their decrees.

I simply propose to take the hands of mammon and of power from the fair throat of the State. The Federal courts, doubtless, can devise methods and processes for the execution of their judgments. If the courts can not do so, let Congress do it for them. That is another phase of this question, but an entirely independent one. I am seeking now to correct an evil and escape danger. When we have done that I am ready and quite willing to discuss and argue upon just and adequate remedial processes.

What I am seeking to do is to protect the State governments—to protect our local officers in executing the laws under which they exist and which they are sworn to execute, free from outside interference.

What I am seeking to do is to check this judicial usurpation, to render its repetition impossible, and to preserve the remaining remnants of our State governments from utter overthrow and disintegration. And I do not propose to stop and ask what effect it may have on the ability of speculators in fraudulent securities to enforce their payment. I do not think the sovereignty of a State should be subordinated to such uses or the liberties of a great people bartered at such a price.

My time has expired. I thank the House for its courteous attention. [Great applause.]

FUNERAL EXPENSES OF THE CHIEF-JUSTICE.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] asks that the committee may informally rise in order that he may submit a resolution at this time which is deemed to be necessary in order to carry out the resolution of the House in respect to the funeral of Chief-Justice Waite.

Mr. ROGERS. I trust that will be done by unanimous consent.

There was no objection.

The committee accordingly informally rose; and Mr. HOLMAN took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. GROSVENOR. By request of Judge KELLEY, chairman of the committee on behalf of the House in the matter of the funeral of the late Chief-Justice, I ask for the reading of the resolution I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the necessary expenses incident to carrying out the resolution of the House of the 23d instant, relating to the funeral of Chief-Justice Waite, be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this resolution, and that the Clerk of the House be directed to advance to the Sergeant-at-Arms the necessary funds therefor.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 3508) for the relief of William G. Galloway, late captain, fifteenth United States Army; and

A bill(H. R. 4327) regulating the construction of bridges over the Muskingum River, in Ohio.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 1528) to reward the Esquimaux natives of the Asiatic coast of the Arctic Ocean for acts of humanity to shipwrecked seamen;

A bill (H. R. 1589) to provide for holding terms of the United States courts at Mississippi City;

A bill (H. R. 5373) to change the location of a certain alley in the city of Washington; and

A bill (H. R. 5723) to amend section 461 of the Revised Statutes, regulating fees for exemplifications of land patents, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 17) for the relief of Thomas Guinean;

A bill (S. 27) to prevent the obstruction of navigable waters and to protect public works against trespass or injury;

A bill (S. 249) to prevent the manufacture or sale of adulterated food or drugs in the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. 316) for the relief of Edward Fitzgerald;

A bill (S. 372) to provide for a commission on the subject of the alcoholic liquor traffic;

A bill (S. 525) for the relief of Samuel A. B. Woodford;

A bill (S. 622) to amend section 2805 of the Revised Statutes of the United States so as to allow oaths to be administered by notaries public;

A bill (S. 899) for the relief of Mary M. Briggs;

A bill (S. 901) for the relief of Sophia W. Wright;

A bill (S. 1007) granting a pension to John S. Coleman;

A bill (S. 1102) to aid the State of Colorado to support a school of mines;

A bill (S. 1128) to create ports of entry at Tacoma and Seattle, in Washington Territory;

A bill (S. 1248) to effect a rearrangement of the grades of office in the Subsistence Department of the Army;

A bill (S. 1405) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the city of Oquawka, in the State of Illinois, and to establish it as a post-road;

A bill (S. 1428) to authorize the appointment of a hydrographer and assistant hydrographer of the Navy;

A bill (S. 1484) to fix the status in the Navy of certain cadet engineers;

A bill (S. 1498) granting to the city of Grand Forks, Dak., the right to build two free bridges at said city across the Red River;

A bill (S. 1524) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Tennessee River, between Bridgeport and Sheffield, Ala.;

A bill (S. 1525) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Cumberland River, between Burnside, Ky., and Carthage, Tenn., or the south fork of said river, between Burnside and Tateville, Ky.;

A bill (S. 1526) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Caney Fork River, between Rock Island and Carthage, in Tennessee;

A bill (S. 1663) authorizing the Little Rock and Alexandria Railway Company to build certain bridges in the State of Arkansas;

A bill (S. 1701) authorizing the construction of a high wagon-bridge across the Missouri River at or near Sioux City, Iowa;

A bill (S. 1939) providing in certain cases for the forfeiture of wagon-road grants in the State of Oregon;

A bill (S. 2001) for the relief of George F. Roberts, administrator of the estate of William B. Thayer, deceased, surviving partner of Thayer Brothers, and others;

A bill (S. 2220) to correct an error in and to further amend "An act to authorize the Georgia Pacific Railroad Company to construct bridges across the Sunflower, Yazoo, and Tombigbee Rivers, in Mississippi," approved March 3, 1887; and

A bill (S. 2405) for the reduction of postage on seeds, cuttings, bulbs, scions, and so forth.

The message also requested that the House of Representatives return to the Senate bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. 788) to provide for holding terms of the United States courts at Mississippi City; and

A bill (S. 192) to provide that judges of the United States circuit and district courts shall reduce their instructions to juries to writing in all States wherein by the laws thereof State judges are required so to do.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a resolution (in which the concurrence of the House was requested) for printing the report of the Senate select committee appointed under resolution of March 3, 1887, to inquire into the methods of doing business, etc., in the Executive Departments.

JURISDICTION OF UNITED STATES COURTS.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. ROGERS. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER].

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Chairman, I shall detain the House but a very few moments in reference to this bill. I wish to say that I am in hearty accord with most of its provisions, but with one, however, I am not. I do not believe that there is any necessity for the appointment of nine or any number of additional circuit judges. The bill itself makes it unnecessary in my judgment.

It is conceded by the chairman of the Judiciary Committee that the three features of the bill, sending appeal cases from the district courts to the circuit courts, increasing the amount to $10,000 in cases where appeals are taken from circuit courts to the Supreme Court, and the provision looking to the curtailment of appeal in the District of Columbia, will reduce the amount of business in the Supreme Court at least one-third. With that reduction I do not believe there is any necessity for increasing the number of circuit judges. That will unload—to use a trite phrase—the Supreme Court, and enable the present force of that court to transact its business within a reasonable length of time.

Now, if one other feature is added to the bill the court will be further relieved; and I propose, at the proper time, to offer the amendment I send to the desk, and ask now to have it read and to be considered as pending, to be offered when we reach the section to which it appropriately belongs, under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That in all actions hereafter commenced in the courts of the several States, wherein a citizen of the State and a corporation engaged in the regular transaction of business in said State are parties, the right to remove such cause of action from the State court into the courts of the United States shall not be allowed.

Mr. WEAVER. Now, Mr. Chairman, that would further relieve the Supreme Court of an immense amount of business that regularly flows into the court caused by the removal of causes from the State to the Federal courts. Why is not that a proper amendment? Where the corporation erects its plant within a State and expects to remain there for all time, and to be engaged constantly in the transaction of business with the people of the State, why should it not be permitted and held to be a citizen of the State? Why should it not be placed upon the same footing with the citizens of the State with which it daily transacts its business?

I would like some gentleman to give a good reason why the corporation, in such cases, should be privileged above all the citizens as to the forum in which to litigate its action. It seems to me that a mere statement of the proposition is sufficient to secure its adoption in the form of the amendment I have submitted. With that and the three provisions to which I have already alluded I think the Supreme Court will be sufficiently relieved of the constantly inflowing business which has so much overcrowded its docket of late years.

I would rather, if there is to be any increase of judges, increase the number of district judges than the number of circuit judges. I can see a greater reason for it.

Mr. MCADOO. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. WEAVER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCADOO. Is it not a fact that these corporations avail themselves of every pretext to get into the Federal courts from the State courts?

Mr. WEAVER. Certainly; and the law seems to have been framed, wittingly or unwittingly, to give them that pretext. They feel secure when they reach the Federal court. It is remote from the home of the citizen, who is taken away from the court and jury of his vicinity and taken to a court far from his residence, where marshals, not elected by the vote of the people, but appointed by the President of the United States, summon the juries, where everything is strange to him. It has the effect of denying justice to the people or discouraging them from litigating their causes against the corporations of the country. I would, rather than increase the number of Federal judges, look to some legislation curtailing the jurisdiction of Federal courts and turning the business of the country into the local courts, where the people are upon an equal footing with one another, and where the officers, ministerial and judicial, are responsible to the people for the manner in which they discharge their duties.

Mr. CULBERSON. If the gentleman from Iowa will permit me, I will state to him that there is a bill on the Calendar, reported favorably from the Committee on the Judiciary, which covers that exactly.

Mr. WEAVER. The gentleman says there is a bill on the Calendar which contains the very doctrine embraced in my amendment. Very well; I am very glad to know it. I was not aware of that.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let it go into this bill.

Mr. WEAVER. Yes; let it go into this bill and let it be enacted here. This bill may succeed and the other may fail. Let it go on both bills. We can not have it too often; and if the other bill finally secures passage through the Senate of the United States and through this House it can be stricken out of one of them. The other bill will not, in all probability, get through as a separate measure; I mean a bill providing against the removal into the Federal courts of causes such as are named in my amendment. Such a bill, perhaps, can not be passed at this session of Congress, and may not secure passage at all. But I believe that the proposition placed on this may be stronger than when standing alone and on its own merits.

Mr. ROGERS rose.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. I ask the gentleman from Arkansas to yield to me to permit me to offer an amendment.

Mr. ROGERS. This is not the time for offering amendments. When the bill is being considered under the five-minute rule, then all amendments can be offered.

I yield ten minutes, or fifteen if necessary, to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I regard the pending measure as one of very great importance to the country in its general provisions. But I am opposed to several of the main features of this bill for the reason that I do not believe it tends in the direction of the curtailment of the business of the Federal courts of the country.

I am opposed to the section which provides for the increase of the Federal judiciary to the extent of nine circuit judges. If there is anything in this country that the people are interested in having brought to their immediate homes and reduced in cost to the very minimum it is the administration of the public justice of the country.

In the section of the country and in the State which I in part have the honor to represent I undertake to say that there is more irritation among the people growing out of the matter of their being dragged from their homes to distant courts, at great expense, than out of any other one source that I can think of.

We are beginning to realize in the frequency of the interference of Federal authority through the administration of the courts of the country something of what our old forefathers complained of when they alleged that they were being dragged beyond seas to answer to charges. We all know how expensive these courts are. In truth and in fact that provision of the Constitution which declares that all men may have their day in court and that a man's property shall not be taken without due process of law is well-nigh denied to any man who has in controversy more than $500, or even $2,000 for that matter, if he must be dragged into a United States court and fall within the tender mercies of United States marshals and United States officers.

In the Forty-ninth Congress there was passed what is termed the removal act; and it seems that in that act there was an intention to increase the jurisdictional sum as between citizens of different States from $500, where it has stood for a hundred years almost, to the sum of $2,000.

And yet that statute is left in such a condition that I have not found a man, no matter how learned he might be in the law, who was able to tell whether the jurisdictional sum was changed or not. In fact, I heard one distinguished judge in my own State say, when the matter was brought to his attention on a petition for a removal of a cause from the State to the Federal court, that an examination of the second section of that act forced him to the conclusion that there had been either bungling or criminal conduct in connection with its enactment, and, in harmony with the too prevalent mercenary spirit of the age, he said he presumed it was more charitable to the distinguished men who framed that second section to say that they had been guilty of criminal conduct than that they had bungled in its enactment.

I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read an amendment which I wish to have regarded as pending, and which I propose to offer at the proper time as an addition to section 5 of the pending bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That in all suits at law and equity between citizens or residents of different States in which the matter in dispute exceeds the sum of $2,000, removal of said suits to the United States district courts shall not be allowed.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I am told that there is legislation now pending and maturing that will be constructive of the law as it was attempted to be declared by the Forty-ninth Congress, and which will meet the purposes for which I submit this amendment. Even if that be true, as was said by the gentleman who preceded me [Mr. WEAVER], we can not do a good thing too often, and I submit that this amendment can do no harm, as it will simply be declaratory of the law as it now stands. Then, in the enactment of this measure which seems to be general in its nature, if it does become a law, there will be a declaration that as to citizens or residents of different States where the sum in controversy does not exceed $2,000 removal shall not be had in the district courts as provided in this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why allow it at all?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I would not allow it at all if I thought such a provision would pass this House. I am ready to vote for a bill to take away all jurisdiction from these courts between the citizens of different States, and I am amazed to find gentlemen on this side of the House, our good old Democratic friends, who in the past have clung with such tenacity to the doctrines of state rights; many of them now touched, I was going to say by the spirit of mammon, insisting upon the Federal courts being extended and widened and broadened in their jurisdiction until they come at last to take charge of the entire business of this country. I am State-rights man enough to be in favor of the home courts in my State, and I am opposed to any law that in the remotest degree has a tendency to increase the jurisdiction of the Federal courts. We can see, Mr. Chairman, from what has been read from the Clerk's desk with reference to what one of the justices of the Supreme Court has said, that the business in the Federal courts of this country is growing to such an extent that it is absolutely impossible for the judges of those courts to discharge satisfactorily the duties of their high office. If this amendment shall prevail prohibiting removal in cases involving sums not in excess of $2,000, it will be a step in the direction of lessening the business of the Federal courts, and it will be a long step in the direction of bringing peace to men who, in cases involving amounts less than that, are now annoyed and irritated by being taken into the Federal courts, and thus, in fact, deprived of their right to be heard and to have due process of law where their property is in jeopardy.

Mr. ROGERS. How much time have I left, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has fifteen minutes left. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ANDERSON] has occupied but ten of the fifteen minutes allowed to him.

Mr. ROGERS. I should like very much to come to an agreement now as to the time that is to be allowed for general debate. I ask unanimous consent that general debate close in twenty minutes from this time.

Mr. DARLINGTON. I object.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman indicate what time he desires?

Mr. DARLINGTON. Oh, it will take probably a week before some of these amendments can be disposed of.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to this bill.

Mr. ROGERS. The bill can not be amended until we come to consider it under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] asks unanimous consent that general debate upon this bill close in twenty minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest thirty minutes.

Mr. ROGERS. I accept that. I will remind the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DARLINGTON] that the five-minute rule does not cut off debate. The bill is in committee as long as they desire to keep it there.

Mr. DARLINGTON. Well, I withdraw my objection.

The request of Mr. ROGERS that general debate be limited to thirty minutes was agreed to.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the remainder of my time, and I will now yield the floor to any gentleman who desires to control the remaining time. I believe I have fifteen minutes left. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I have thought somewhat of the substance of the amendment which has been presented by the two gentlemen of Iowa [Mr. WEAVER and Mr. ANDERSON]. At an early period in this session I presented a bill which is a great deal more radical than either of those amendments, a bill which accomplishes what those gentlemen propose, but which their amendments would not accomplish. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, when we reach section 5 I will propose an amendment in the words of the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no corporation shall in any suit or action to which it may be a party be held to be a citizen of any State other than that in which such suit or action is brought because it was created by or organized under the laws of such other State; nor shall any corporation be authorized to bring a suit or action in any court of the United States, or to remove any suit or action from any State court into any court of the United States, because it was created by or organized under the laws of any State other than that in which such suit or action is brought. And in such cases the circuit and district courts of the United States shall not have jurisdiction other than such as they would have if such corporation had been organized by or under the laws of the State in which such suit may be brought.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, if lawyers of this House have given attention to this amendment, they must see that it cuts up, root and branch, the theory that a corporation aggregate shall be held, for the purposes of jurisdiction, a citizen of the State creating it.

Mr. WEAVER. The gentleman will allow me to call his attention to the fact that the Supreme Court has twice decided, in two fundamental cases, that corporations are citizens within the meaning of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. It has never been decided, I think, by the Supreme Court of the United States that they are citizens.

Mr. WEAVER. I refer the gentleman to 20 Wallace.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. If permitted to bring authorities here, I will demonstrate the fact that that has not been decided. What has been decided, when we come down to it, is this: The court says, after considerable vascillation, "If you allege that a corporation aggregate is a citizen of the State by virtue of whose laws it exists, we, under the laws now on the statute-book, will not permit that fact to be traversed." That is what the court in effect says.

Mr. WEAVER. That is another case.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. No person who has examined the matter has ever denied, I think, that Congress has the right to say that a corporation aggregate shall not, even for the purpose of jurisdiction, be considered a citizen.

Mr. WEAVER. I have examined the law, and I would like to ask the gentleman this question: Wherein does the gentleman's amendment differ from mine?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. My amendment provides that in no case wherein a corporation is a party to a suit, either as plaintiff or defendant, shall it be permitted to claim that because it was created by the laws of another State it is to be considered a citizen of that State, or permitted either to bring its litigation in or remove it into the Federal courts on account of such alleged citizenship.

Mr. WEAVER. My amendment says the corporation shall not remove the suit, which is practically the same thing.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. The gentleman's amendment is still more limited than I have said. It only refers to suits pending in a State in which the corporation is doing business and to a case in which the corporation is defendant. My amendment refers to all cases.

Mr. Chairman, this is a very important question. Under the statutes now in force, and the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, corporations created by the laws of any State other than that in which a suit is brought are allowed, in their discretion, to sue in the Federal courts, or to remove suits against them from the State courts into the Federal courts when the amount involved is over $2,000 and the adverse party is a citizen of the State in which suit is brought. Inasmuch as the powers of the General Government are only those that are granted, the cases in which the Federal courts can properly entertain jurisdiction can only be such as fall under some enumerated class. The question which first arises is, therefore, one of interpretation, or construction, of that clause of the Constitution which provides that the judicial power of the Federal Government shall "extend to controversies between citizens of different States," for it is under that clause that corporations claim the right, as such, to litigate in the Federal courts.

Every member of the legal profession knows that of late it is assumed for the purpose of jurisdiction that a corporation is a citizen of the State by virtue of whose laws it exists; and that a suit between such a corporation and a citizen of any other State is assumed to be a suit between citizens of different States. This position is manifestly untenable. Carried to its logical consequences, it is alarming. If we admit that a corporation aggregate is a citizen of the State of its creation, within the purview of section 2, Article III, of the Constitution, it is impossible to resist the conclusion that under section 2, Article IV, which declares that "the citizens of each State shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens of the several States," the term "citizen" should have an equally comprehensive signification. But to hold that a corporation aggregate is a citizen entitled to all the rights and immunities of citizens of the several States is farther than any court has gone, or than any intelligent lawyer would assert there is any warrant in the Constitution for going.

For about half a century after the adoption of the Constitution it was uniformly held that a corporation, as such, had no right to sue in or to remove a suit into a Federal court. At that time it was considered almost treason to disregard or evade the mandates of the Constitution; but the influence of wealth and corporate power soon began to be felt, and the tendency of courts always being to absorb questionable jurisdiction, by a divided court, in a case in which this question did not necessarily arise, this new doctrine was approved, and, not without protest at first, that decision has since been followed. This is an illustration of the tendency of courts, on any excuse or pretext, to expand their jurisdiction, and of the never-ceasing, ever-increasing influence of corporations and concentrated capital; and, I may add, of the tendency of late towards unwarranted and unconstitutional centralization.

But that Congress has a right to regulate and limit this jurisdiction is not open to doubt, even if it were admitted that a corporation aggregate is within the purview of the Constitution a citizen. The Constitution does not confer jurisdiction on the Federal courts in every case between citizens of different States. It merely declares the limit of the possible jurisdiction in such cases. The question is, therefore, we having the power, what is our duty in the premises? Shall we take any, or limit this illegitimate exercise of jurisdiction, or tacitly give our sanction to it?

It is provided in the constitutions of most of the States that every person is entitled to a speedy remedy in the law for all injuries or wrongs he may suffer. This should be the birthright of every American citizen, even in the absence of any constitutional provision. But the modern doctrine of the Federal courts takes away this right and delivers the masses of the people bound hand and foot to the tender mercies of corporations and concentrated and organized capital. Every lawyer of extensive practice has frequently seen this.

Let me illustrate: A has insured his property in a foreign corporation, and the property being destroyed by fire the insurance company refuses payment. The assured is compelled at great expense to bring suit in the Federal court. Ordinarily the expense of such litigation at such a distance from his home is a great burden and hardship—in some cases nearly a denial of justice. But this is only the beginning of his calamity. An appeal may be taken by the insurance company, if a decision is adverse to it, to the Supreme Court of the United States. This delays the final decision about four years longer. Unless the assured is wealthy, if he relies, as is ordinarily the case, on the amount recovered from the insurance company to replace his buildings or his stock, the delay is simply ruin. He is therefore compelled to accept such terms of compromise as the corporation sees fit to offer.

I might instance, too, the case of life insurance, of claims for personal injuries against railroad companies, of claims on contracts, or for torts against foreign corporations generally. In any and all such cases the claimants, when the case is removed into the Federal courts, and the amount is sufficient to give a right of appeal, are, if not wealthy, simply at the mercy of the corporation and compelled to accept such terms of adjustment as may be offered. We should here take care that the rule of the Constitution be restored and the rule established by the Federal courts abrogated, and that the rights of the people be regarded instead of the interest of capital.

This modern rule is one of the most objectionable phases of centralization.

Mr. WEAVER. The gentleman is right about that.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. It tends and is intended to magnify the officer at the expense of the people, the central Government at the expense of the State, the strong at the expense of the weak, and the rich at the expense of the poor. The States can not give the needed relief; no power but Congress can give it.

Mr. HOLMAN obtained the floor.

Mr. WEAVER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will yield to me to read a sentence from a decision of the Supreme Court.

Mr. HOLMAN. Just a moment.

Mr. WEAVER. I call the attention of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WILSON] to a decision in 20 Wallace, page 553, where the court gives us this language:

> It has also been held many times that a corporation is a citizen of the State by which it is created and in which its principal place of business is situated, so far that it can sue and be sued in the Federal courts.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Exactly; but——

Mr. WEAVER. Wait a moment. Then the court goes on and holds that by virtue of this citzenship the corporation has the right to remove a cause to the Federal courts.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I admit that the courts have held that it will, under the laws in existence, be assumed for the purposes of jurisdiction that the corporation is a citizen of the State of its creation.

But Mr. Chief-Justice Taney and Mr. Justice Curtis, in different cases, emphatically decided that it could not be held that such a corporation is a citizen within the meaning of the Constitution.

Mr. WEAVER. I agree with the gentleman from Minnesota, that this system should be cut up by the roots; but the court, I say, has held they are citizens.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, there are two modes by which the large accumulation of commercial business in the Supreme Court of the United States, which is the occasion for the proposed legislation, can be reduced. One is by reducing the jurisdiction of the Federal courts and thus reduce the number of causes in the Federal courts, and the other is by creating an intermediate appellate tribunal between the Supreme Court of the United States and the trial courts, nisi prius courts, of the Federal system. Which of these two shall be taken? If you adopt the latter, that of intermediate appellate tribunals, such as are proposed here—intermediate appellate courts, the plan proposed by this bill—you accomplish what I trust this House does not propose to do, an unexampled increase in the number of judges in the Federal judicial system. Unexampled, I say, and I think I use that term advisedly.

I call attention to the fact that if you confer on these district courts, in addition to the jurisdiction they now possess, the jurisdiction now possessed by the circuit courts, you will substantially double the business of those courts.

I predict, if you pass this bill, inside of five years, as an inevitable result, you will have to double the number of your district courts and double the number of your district judges. That is inevitable and patent. I am astonished that a fact so apparent and manifest has not been met by this committee by an increase not only of circuit, but also of the district judges. Why does not the committee provide for a large increase of the number of district judges at once, as the business thrown on these courts is enormously increased by this bill? Taking my own State, and judging from the business before the district and circuit courts at the present time, and from the additional business that will be thrown on the district courts by this bill, I am confident before the adjournment of the present Congress the Representatives from that State will find it necessary to consider the propriety of dividing the State into two districts. It will be found to be the same in the other States of the Union. Unless the House is prepared to go to the extent of enlarging the Federal system and the number of its judges beyond anything contemplated in our past history, gentlemen will hesitate to pass this bill.

You propose to diminish the business of the Supreme Court of the United States. That is undoubtedly proper and ought to be done. It is readily done when you establish the proper relations between the Federal and State courts. You thereby prevent those conflicts which have been occurring from time to time during the last twenty years, and certain to increase in the future under the present state of affairs, where the Federal authorities are brought in conflict with State authorities and citizens forced into inevitable peril of serious loss and imprisonment.

The jurisdiction of the Federal courts in all questions arising under the Constitution, laws, and treaties of the United States, of course must be maintained and to the extent prescribed by the Constitution, and there it ought to end. Beyond that it is a proper subject for the consideration of Congress Generally in all the States throughout the Union the judicial systems are well organized, society is well crystallized, and the relation between the various States of the Union and the citizens of all the States is such as to render it certain that justice will be secured in the courts of all the States.

The opinion is generally entertained that in the administration of justice where a citizen is to be sued the suit should be brought in the county where he resides and where he will suffer the least inconvenience. In the States the citizen is not to be taken beyond the tribunal of the county in which he lives.

To enlarge the Federal judicial system on one side diminishes the importance of your State courts and restricts them, and in a corresponding degree augments the importance of the Federal judiciary, and at the same time oppresses your people. I think this is a departure from what was contemplated by our fathers in providing for the organization of the Federal judiciary.

Mr. CUTCHEON. In speaking of the matter of the expected increase of business in the Federal courts, I presume if this bill passes the jurisdiction of the Federal courts will not be extended where they do not now have it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly. It imposes double the business on the district courts, and will compel a large increase in the number of district judges.

Mr. CUTCHEON. In your opinion it will enlarge the district court business?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think it will more than double the business in my State, and in that way require a larger number of districts.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ROGERS. I yield now such time to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] as he may desire.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Chairman, I have but a word to add to what has been already stated in reference to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WILSON] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ANDERSON].

I have to say this: I do not doubt that Congress has power to enact such legislation as they propose; and I have no doubt of another fact, that the Supreme Court of the United States have virtually, time and time again, held that for all judicial purposes the corporation created and organized under the laws of the State was a citizen of that State. They have constantly held that the judicial power of the United States, which provides that the courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction over controversies between the citizens of different States, that in such cases a corporation is a citizen within the meaning of that term in the Constitution; and the jurisdiction of these courts has been upheld from time to time upon that construction.

I confess that in the earlier days of the Supreme Court of the United States they held quite a different doctrine, and for many years such was no doubt the ruling of the court. But for years past the other has been the accepted construction, and is to this day.

Recognizing that fact, I did in the Forty-eighth Congress, and also in the Forty-ninth Congress, ingraft a provision into the law, which passed during the last Congress, to take away from these courts, the United States courts, original jurisdiction over controversies between corporations doing business in a State and the citizens of that State. That provision passed the House of Representatives twice, once in the Forty-eighth and again in the Forty-ninth Congress. It was stricken from the bill at the other end of the Capitol, and the balance was passed on the 3d day of March, 1887.

I beg to say that while we think—some of us do at least—that this is proper legislation, and upon a proper occasion ought to be insisted upon, yet in dealing with this bill, which we regard as very important, we believed that we should leave the jurisdiction of these courts just exactly where we found it, and not attempt, in a bill of this character, to diminish or increase that jurisdiction, but to organize these courts with reference to existing jurisdiction solely. And I do hope that this bill, having had the mature consideration of the committee in that view, will not be loaded down with these amendments in respect to the increase or diminution of existing jurisdiction.

Now, a word further. I understood the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ANDERSON], who was on the floor awhile ago, to recite a conversation with some judge, up in Iowa, I believe, or some other State, in which that judge had declared that the member of Congress who had contributed the second section of the act of March, 1887, had been guilty either of "bungling or criminal neglect," or something of that character.

I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that I had somewhat of responsibility in connection with the construction of that act of Congress. Indeed, I represented it upon the floor in the last four Congresses and had the gratification to see the act passed by this House in three Congresses. It went over to the Senate in the last Congress, and went into the hands of a conference committee in the very last hours of the session. It has certainly not escaped the attention of the gentleman from Iowa that a bill is now pending in this House, and is also pending in the Senate, to correct the enrollment of that bill. It was enrolled under circumstances that made it an utter physical impossibility for the clerk to reach, it seemed to me, a correct and accurate representation of the bill as it passed both Houses of Congress in time for the signature of the President. It has been ascertained that from fifteen to twenty errors exist in that bill in the enrollment, consisting of punctuation, spelling, and the transposition of some sentences out of their proper places.

This bill has never been under judicial review, I think, except in two instances, since its adoption. While these errors have been complained of by the judges, none of them (and it has passed in review before one of the judges of the Supreme Court sitting at circuit and other circuit judges)—none of them have complained of any criminal negligence or blundering in connection with the bill, and no one ever heard before that any man could fail to see that the minimum jurisdiction of these courts had been raised from $500 to $2,000. No one has ever heard of such a complaint; and if I had time to read the act as it passed, and as it is placed in parallel columns with the act of 1875 in the one hundred and twentieth volume of the United States Reports, every gentleman could see exactly the change in the original law.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Nobody ever doubted that it was good law.

Mr. CULBERSON. Not that I ever heard of, except some gentleman in Iowa.

Now, I do not care to detain the House further.

Mr. ROGERS. I yield now one minute to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, as to the statement made by the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee, as to the number and variety of the errors made and otherwise contained in that removal act, he can raise no controversy with me.

Mr. CULBERSON. Not the removal act; the whole act taken together.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. And particularly as to the second section——

Mr. CULBERSON. I beg the gentleman to allow me to say that I did not have reference to the removal act solely. The removal clause is only one section of the act out of a good many.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I simply referred, by way of argument, to what a distinguished judge in my State had said when the construction of that section came legitimately before him. We had there not only the law, but the history of the enactment of the statute as it took place in both branches of Congress; and I am glad and cheerful to say that I exonerate the chairman of the Judiciary Committee and any other member of this House, and that the bungling or criminal conduct, whatever it may have been, was not in that court or by me intended to be imputed to this House or any member of it.

Mr. ROGERS. I have only occupied one or two moments, and one or two gentlemen still desire more time than I have. I think I shall occupy the other five minutes I have remaining. Before doing so I ask that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SENEY], who is detained from the House by sickness in his family, be permitted to have remarks on this bill printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS. I am gratified that the debate and criticism of this bill have resulted complimentarily to the Committee on the Judiciary in this respect: that the conciseness and perspicuity of the bill have been beyond criticism. The only criticism whatever that has been made upon the bill is upon the policy of reorganizing the judicial system of the country, and upon the additional fact that the bill does not contain other provisions curtailing the jurisdiction of the Federal courts.

It was the earnest desire, and I think I may say the unanimous view, of the Judiciary Committee that in presenting this bill to the House this year, a bill, I think, which has twice received in the form now presented substantially the assent of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate and of the Senate, it should not be encumbered with anything, certainly with no aggressive or affirmative legislation of any description that did not relate to the simple reorganization of the judicial system of the Government, and I express the hope and urge upon the friends of this measure who would like to see this system reorganized, that they do not encumber it with any legislation at all except to perfect, if it has any defects in it, the system itself.

It is conceded that this bill in no wise increases the jurisdiction of the Federal courts. It is urged, upon the other hand, that the tendency of it is to increase the litigation of those courts. My heart, Mr. Chairman, was enlisted in this measure first by an incident which took place in Great Britain. I allude to the trial of O'Donnell, I believe, as a suspect, and in which he was convicted in one of the courts of Great Britain over which there was no appellate jurisdiction. It was at least a political crime of which he had been convicted; and the whole country seemed shocked at the idea that an American citizen could be tried in one of the nisi prius courts of Great Britain and the judgment of the court remain final.

There were most severe and harsh criticisms on any system which tolerated the idea that the life and liberty of a citizen should be put in peril in that way.

And yet when we reflected on the fact that our own Federal system is organized on the same principle, we were estopped from complaining of the system of Great Britain; for it is true for the first hundred years of the Republic there has been no appellate jurisdiction from the nisi prius courts in criminal cases. It is true that where a question of jurisdiction of the lower courts may be involved the Supreme Court upon a writ of habeas corpus will review the rulings of the court below; and if it shall determine that jurisdiction did not exist it may discharge the prisoner. But there is no appellate jurisdiction. And the leading principle which is involved in this bill is the principle of humanity. It is the principle that runs in favor of human life and human liberty.

But there is another feature of this bill which is worthy of the earnest consideration of the American Congress. It is the destruction, the wiping out, so to speak, of that almost undefined and indefinable line of jurisdiction between the district and the circuit courts of the United States, and the simplification of the jurisdiction as well as the great simplification and expedition in the procedure of the courts.

Then there is still another feature in the bill, Mr. Chairman. It is said, and I am not willing to permit that to go unnoticed, that the tendency of this legislation is to increase the jurisdiction of the Federal courts. It is due the Judiciary Committee of the House, at least since I have had the honor to be a member of it, that I should say that with the single exception of the extension of jurisdiction in the cases of polygamy, and perhaps with another exception, with reference to the recovery of the public domain, every step we have attempted thus far to take has been in the direction of curtailing the jurisdiction of the Federal courts.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired. By order of the committee, made by unanimous consent, all general debate is now closed; and the Clerk will proceed to read the bill by sections for amendment.

The Clerk, reading the bill by sections, read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the district courts of the United States shall hereafter have and exercise, exclusive of the circuit courts of the United States, in addition to the jurisdiction conferred upon them by existing law, all the original jurisdiction now vested by law in the circuit courts of the United States, and that the circuit courts of the United States shall have and exercise such jurisdiction, by writ of error and appeal, as they have and exercise under existing laws, except as herein modified, and such other jurisdiction, appellate or otherwise, as is conferred by this act.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, in order that I may conclude the observations that I desire to make in connection with former remarks. I repeat, sir, that, with the exception noted, every step taken during the last four years by the Judiciary Committee of the House has been in the direction of curtailing the jurisdiction of the Federal courts. It is said in this connection that if we pass this bill we shall be compelled in five years to double the number of district judges of the United States. The investigation of the question of raising judicial salaries has led the members of the Committee on the Judiciary to investigate to a considerable extent the amount of business now pending in the Federal courts throughout the country, and the conclusion reached by at least a large number of the members of the committee is that in many of the district courts the dockets are comparatively small.

It is also true, Mr. Chairman, that the district courts do, to a very large extent, circuit-court business, and an article which I had the pleasure of reading this morning, said to have been written by one of the most accomplished and distinguished lawyers that I have the honor to know, alluding to the bill, says in substance the same thing, namely, "that the jurisdiction of the circuit courts, as they are now constituted, is transferred to the district courts, which have at present but little business upon their dockets."

If that be true, Mr. Chairman, and if this unnecessary division of duties between the district and circuit courts be wiped out, and all of this business given to the district courts, so that they can arrange it and dispose of it in an orderly way and let it go up gradually by appeal to the higher courts, then we shall have these district courts organized substantially as the circuit courts of the several States are now organized. In other words, they will become the great reservoir, so to speak, of original jurisdiction, controlling, in the exercise of their executive ability, the management and dispatch of their business.

Now, what will be the other effect of this bill? Why, litigants who come into the district court will be enabled, as soon as the circuit courts may be organized, to secure a speedy trial before a tribunal of at least equal dignity with the supreme court of any State in this Union. In addition to that, these circuit courts will stop all cases below $10,000. Those above that, or, as has been said by my colleague, those involving treaty or constitutional questions, may proceed to the Supreme Court. The effect of this will be to curtail the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, unload its docket, and in this way we accomplish good at both ends of the line.

But there is one other aspect of the matter which is of the very highest importance. That is the fact that under the organization here presented, as rapidly as the Territories may be developed into States, this system enlarges and takes them in without requiring any additional legislation whatever, and they become at once homogeneous parts of the system; so that there can arise no necessity for a change or modification of a system which will adapt itself as the country grows and develops, so as to meet every exigency that may arise.

We have, therefore, the two great principles combined or concurrent, namely: no questions of jurisdiction or thorough perspicuity as to every question of that sort that can arise, and, at the same time, the utmost simplicity of practice familiar to every member of the bar, because the procedure, so far as it is altered at all, is made to conform to that of the several States throughout the Union. I withdraw the formal amendment.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

I had no opportunity to say a word on this bill in the general debate, and therefore I shall have to avail myself of the occasion of speaking under the five-minute rule.

It is very well known, sir, that in the formation of the Government and in the adoption of the existing Constitution and the creation of the Federal judiciary long debates arose about the power which was being conferred upon the judiciary of the Federal Government and the power which was reserved to the States, and it was then argued that the boundary line between the jurisdiction of the Federal courts and the jurisdiction of the State courts was imperfectly defined, and that conflicts between the two jurisdictions would not be of infrequent occurrence in the progress of the country; a prediction which we have seen fully illustrated in later times. As was well said by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE], in the very able and compact brief which he presented this morning, for many years after the adoption of the Constitution of the United States the principle was laid down and followed by the Supreme Court of the United States that in adjudicating upon the law of a State it would follow the construction of the supreme court of that State as to its own constitution and laws. That rule remained unbroken until we begin in the Aspinwall case and the Riggs case, to which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE] has referred, when another and a different construction was placed upon their duty by the Supreme Court of the United States as to following the adjudication of the court of last resort in the State from which the case came.

And Mr. Justice Miller raised a note of warning which ought to be heard throughout the length and breadth of this land when he delivered the very able dissenting opinions in both those cases and invoked his judicial brethren to return to the original doctrine upon the subject—that it was the duty of the Supreme Court of the United States to follow the adjudications of the highest tribunal of the State in the construction of the State constitution and laws. And in an opinion delivered in 11 Wallace, page 125, by that able jurist, the late Judge Nelson, speaking for the Supreme Court of the United States—the same opinion referred to by the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE]; an opinion delivered in 1870—we find this language:

It is a familiar rule of construction of the Constitution of the Union, that the sovereign powers vested in the State governments by their respective constitutions remained unaltered and unimpaired, except so far as they were granted to the Government of the United States. That the intention of the framers of the Constitution in this respect might not be misunderstood, this rule of interpretation is expressly declared in the tenth article of the amendments, namely: "The powers not delegated to the United States are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people." The Government of the United States, therefore, can claim no powers which are not granted to it by the Constitution, and the powers actually granted must be such as are expressly given, or given by necessary implication.

The General Government and the States, although both exist within the same territorial limits, are separate and distinct sovereignties, acting separately and independently of each other, within their respective spheres. The former in its appropriate sphere is supreme, but the States within the limits of their powers not granted, or in the language of the tenth amendment, "reserved," are as independent of the General Government as that Government within its sphere is independent of the States.

The relations existing between the two governments are well stated by the present Chief-Justice in the case of Lane County vs. Oregon (7 Wallace, 76). "Both the States and the United States," he observed, "existed before the Constitution. The people, through that instrument, established a more perfect union by substituting a National Government, acting with ample powers directly upon the citizens, instead of the confederate government, which acted, with powers greatly restricted, only upon the States. But in many of the articles of the Constitution the necessary existence of the States, and, within their proper spheres, the independent authority of the States, are distinctly recognized. To them nearly the whole charge of interior regulation is committed or left; to them, and to the people, all powers not expressly delegated to the National Government are reserved." Upon looking into the Constitution it will be found that but a few of the articles in that instrument could be carried into practical effect without the existence of the States.

Two of the great departments of the Government, the executive and legislative, depend upon the exercise of the powers, or upon the people, of the States. The Constitution guaranties to the States a republican form of government, and protects each against invasion or domestic violence. Such being the separate and independent condition of the States in our complex system, as recognized by the Constitution, and the existence of which is so indispensable that without them the General Government itself would disappear from the family of nations, it would seem to follow as a reasonable, if not a necessary consequence, that the means and instrumentalities employed for carrying on the operations of their governments, for preserving their existence, and fulfilling the high and responsible duties assigned to them in the Constitution, should be left free and unimpaired, should not be liable to be crippled much less defeated by the taxing power of another government, which power acknowledges no limits but the will of the legislative body imposing the tax; and, more especially, those means and instrumentalities which are the creation of their sovereign and reserved rights, one of which is the establishment of the judicial department and the appointment of officers to administer their laws. Without this power and the exercise of it, we risk nothing in saying that no one of the States under the form of Government guarantied by the Constitution could long preserve its existence. A despotic government might. We have said that one of the reserved powers was that to establish a judicial department; it would have been more accurate, and in accordance with the existing state of things at the time, to have said the power to maintain a judicial department. All of the thirteen States were in the possession of this power and had exercised it at the adoption of the Constitution; and it is not pretended that any grant of it to the General Government is found in that instrument. It is, therefore, one of the sovereign powers vested in the States by their constitutions, which remained unaltered and unimpaired, and in respect to which the State is as independent of the General Government as that Government is independent of the States.

Mr. DUNN obtained the floor and said: I yield my time to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER].

Mr. HOOKER. It will be seen, Mr. Chairman, on examining this bill that it proposes in the first section to give additional jurisdiction to the district courts of the United States, diminishing correspondingly that of the circuit courts. I agree with my friend from Texas [Mr.

CULBERSON], to whose clear knowledge of the law I generally bow, in his construction of the act which was passed in the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress, restricting the jurisdiction of the district courts by a limitation of $2,000 and relegating to the State courts the adjudication of questions which by construction had been taken from those courts and given to Federal tribunals. I do not know what may have been in other States than my own the operation of the policy of authorizing unduly the removal of suits from the State courts to the Federal courts, but I know that in Mississippi it operated to strike down the State courts and transfer to the Federal tribunals sitting frequently at points remote from the residence of the parties the determination of their controversies. In this way the jurisdiction of the courts of our State was in a very large degree absorbed by Federal tribunals. I agree with the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WILSON] in desiring to see this portion of the law swept away, so that justice shall no longer be defeated by transferring to the Federal courts actions begun in the tribunals of the State.

What will be the effect of this bill? As has been well said by my distinguished friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], it will tend to enlarge the jurisdiction of the district courts and diminish that of the circuit courts. What will result? In a little while each State of the Union, instead of having, as Mississippi now has, a single Federal judge, will have two or three. A clamor will come up for the creation of Federal judgeships in addition to the nine new circuit judges that this bill proposes to authorize—a provision which constitutes, to my mind, the grand objection to the bill. I would not create by my vote another Federal judicial officer except in a case of absolute necessity, and if I made such increase I would begin at the bottom round of the ladder. I would not vote to authorize these nine additional circuit judges, because I believe that the Federal judiciary has under the present system sufficient power. To add to it by multiplying Federal judges and increasing the jurisdiction of the district courts would, in my judgment, be unwise policy. It has been said that the line of demarkation between Federal and State jurisdiction is a very murky and indistinct one.

On a memorable occasion I heard Justice Story, whose lessons of wisdom I had the honor of listening to in my younger days—when the great commercial lawyer of Boston, Mr. Choate, was arguing a question before him of conflict of authority, Judge Story, with that amiable manner which always characterized him, interrupted the argument of the case and said to Mr. Choate, "The conflicting authorities on this subject fade into each other as undistinguishably as the colors of the rainbow;" whereupon Mr. Choate stepped backward in that peculiar way which belonged to him in jury trials, and passing his long, slender fingers through his raven-black hair, said: "Yes, may it please your honor, or may it not rather be said to be like that peculiar period of time called twilight, when no man knows whether it be day or whether it be night?" [Applause.]

So it is we have seen this conflict of authority between State courts and Federal courts. We have witnessed these questions in the history of the country, and I fear this bill, instead of limiting the evils foreseen in the adoption of the Constitution, will increase them by the increase of the Federal judges, and drawing to the Federal judiciary more and more the authority, power, and jurisdiction which it was designed and intended should be lodged in the judicial tribunals of the respective States.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BUCKALEW. My colleague [Mr. LYNCH] has prepared an amendment to this first section of the bill, and I will yield to him for the purpose of having it offered at this time.

Mr. LYNCH. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

That on the trial of the civil and criminal cases in the district courts of the United States a stenographer, to be appointed by the judges, shall be employed at a compensation not to exceed $10 per day, to be paid by the United States, whose duty it shall be to report all proceedings of the trial, including the instructions to the jury given by the judge. It shall be the duty of said stenographer to extend the said proceedings taken by him in short-hand in long-hand, or by type-writer when directed to do so by the court or a judge, and that the instructions of the judge to the jury shall be filed as a part of the record in the case.

Mr. ROGERS. I raise the point of order against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point.

Mr. ROGERS. That it is not germane to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Germane to the bill or the first section?

Mr. ROGERS. The first section.

Mr. BUCKALEW rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman wish to discuss the point of order or the amendment?

Mr. BUCKALEW. I wish to discuss both. In the first place the first section of the bill devolves upon the district courts of the United States a large amount of original jurisdiction, including the trial of civil and criminal cases, which will double the amount of business; that is, the amount of trials in those courts. The amendment proposed is to enable the judges of those courts to perform their duties within reasonable limit of time and prevent accumulation of business upon their dockets. I am opposed to increase of the jurisdiction of these courts in such manner that the business will accumulate and the judges will not be able to perform the duties we impose upon them. I am also opposed to the prospective increase of judicial districts and judicial judges which may possibly arise from the adoption of the first section. Therefore the appointment of stenographers by which the transaction of business in these courts is facilitated is indispensable, in my judgment, to the operation of the first section of the bill. But I do not propose to proceed until the Chair has determined whether, in his judgment, the amendment is or is not germane to the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Arkansas on the point of order, if he wishes to speak.

Mr. ROGERS. The first section of the bill contains nothing in the world except the transfer of the jurisdiction of the present circuit courts to the district courts. It has nothing to do with procedure or anything else, but merely the transfer of jurisdiction of the circuit courts to the district courts. I do not think it is germane.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I now desire to offer the amendment which I had read some time ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that there is now a point of order pending.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I am aware of that.

Mr. BLAND. I understand this amendment is simply to perfect the jurisdictional features of the bill, and hence must properly come in before the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, which simply goes to the practice under the bill. I understand my colleague wants to perfect this part of the bill first.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. That is the point. I wish to offer it as a proviso to the first section.

Mr. PETERS. I suppose there should first be a ruling on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is germane, and overrules the point of order.

Mr. BLAND. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry—whether or not an amendment which proposes to amend the text, or limits the section, or gives jurisdiction to the courts, is not first to be determined before action is taken upon an amendment that simply goes to the practice before the courts? The amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, as I understand it, relates to the practice, while that of my colleague affects the question of jurisdiction.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not undertake to determine the order in which gentlemen upon the floor shall offer amendments. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania, whose amendment is pending, shall see proper to withdraw it temporarily the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Missouri to offer his. Otherwise, the amendment can not now be received. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is entitled to the floor on the pending amendment.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. Chairman, there is no difficulty in having two amendments pending at the same time—the second one to the text of the bill, which would be voted upon first, and the other afterwards. That is the ordinary practice.

I will proceed now to speak to the amendment of my colleague. I hope, sir, if we are to charge the district courts of the United States with this large amount of nisi prius business—the trial of civil and criminal causes—we will make the necessary and, to my mind, indispensable provision for transacting promptly and efficiently the business thus imposed upon them. My colleague has drawn his amendment, I believe, very much from the provision of a similar character now existing in the laws of our own State, under which the practice of our courts has been most satisfactory, and the transaction of business has been much more prompt, while at the same time a large amount of public expense and the former delays of trials have been obviated. That I conceive to be the purpose and will be the effect of this amendment.

If the transaction of the business of these courts in the trial of causes submitted to them is accompanied by the employment of reporters, there will not be the delay and expense attending them which otherwise is inevitable, and, as I said before, the disposal of business will be prompt and satisfactory.

I support the amendment, therefore, as an indispensable adjunct or condition to this first section of the bill.

I will only add, sir, that I agreed to the report of this bill from the Committee on the Judiciary, reserving to myself complete freedom of action upon it; and if in the course of the consideration of the bill any amendment is presented which I regard as reasonable, judicious, and proper to limit the jurisdiction of our Federal courts, and to facilitate the transaction of the business of the courts, I shall support such amendment and vote for it cheerfully.

I only desire now to mention one practical consideration in this connection. We are told that this bill ought not to be burdened with any proposition of that description, that it might embarrass the passage of the bill. We are also told that an independent proposition limiting Federal jurisdiction will be proposed, or has been proposed, by the Judiciary Committee to this House, and that that can receive independent consideration. Let me say to gentlemen that when you send this bill to lawyers in another place for consideration, if you want any amendment, if you want any proposition like that referred to, limiting the jurisdiction of the courts, you must send it with this bill or you will get nothing. I suppose it is true that this general measure has been considered in the Senate. It is very likely that it will receive the assent of that body if sent there. Therefore those who desire the adoption of the amendment to which I refer had better have it put upon the bill before it leaves the House, and insist upon its remaining there, for in my judgment that is the only manner in which it can be secured.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLAND. I want to know whether the amendment of my colleague to the text of the bill, and also the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, can both be pending at the same time to be voted upon?

The CHAIRMAN. Two amendments can be pending at the same time to be voted upon in their proper order—that is, an amendment and an amendment to the amendment. The Chair can not, as it has already said, undertake to designate the manner in which amendments are to be offered.

Mr. BLAND. Can my colleague now offer his amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. He can at this time, as an amendment to the pending amendment.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Then I offer the amendment which I sent up to the desk some time ago and had read, to come in as a proviso at the end of the first section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that there is an amendment pending, offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, to come in at the end of the section, which will now have precedence, unless, as stated by the Chair, the gentleman from Pennsylvania shall see proper to withdraw his amendment for the purpose of allowing the gentleman from Missouri to offer his.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. But the amendment of my friend from Pennsylvania, as he will observe by examining the text of the bill, would properly come in after mine.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the question.

Mr. HOLMAN. Permit me to ask if the pending amendment is that offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the pending question. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment of Mr. LYNCH was again read.

Mr. HOLMAN rose.

Mr. BLAND. I wish to suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. LYNCH] to temporarily withdraw his amendment, with a view to the symmetry of the bill, as my colleague [Mr. STONE, of Missouri] desires to offer an amendment which goes to the text of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania afterwards if he desires to withhold his amendment at this time.

Mr. LYNCH. I prefer to have it voted on now.

Mr. HOLMAN. I offer as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "United States" and insert "by the party against whom the costs are adjudged."

Mr. HOLMAN. My amendment is to strike out "United States" where it occurs and insert the words I have sent up.

I wish to say to my friend from Pennsylvania that this amendment would completely harmonize with what is the practice, I presume, in most of the States. These, so far as I am aware, say a stenographer shall be employed, but the expense shall be paid by the party against whom the costs are adjudged. A stenographer is employed in at least those Federal courts with which I am familiar, but the costs are paid to him by the parties. It is merely a matter of cost. When you furnish the judicial system with proper officers for the administration of justice you have gone far enough.

Here would be an item of some $234,000 a year to be added to your budget for the administration of justice. In its main aspects the employment of a stenographer is a mere matter incident to the trial which ought to enter into the costs of the case.

I do not feel myself very much inclined to adopt the views expressed by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania about increasing the motives of going into the tribunals.

A MEMBER. How about criminal cases?

Mr. HOLMAN. In criminal cases that could not occur. It would be confined to civil suits. But I take it as a matter of cost there is no reason why this expense should be taken out of the national Treasury. We are enlarging in every respect this system of going to the national Treasury and diminishing the degree of State jurisdiction.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. LYNCH] offered an amendment requiring the attendance in courts of a stenographer. I understand also that an amendment to that amendment has been offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], requiring that that stenographer shall be paid by the party losing the cause. I say that amendment is in direct conflict with all the fair and honorable principles on which the theory of this Government is based, to the effect that we shall have justice made not only as expeditious but as cheap to the people as possible.

But I call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana to the fact that his amendment does not go far enough. Upon the same principle it should provide that the party losing should pay the salary of the judge; that he should pay the rent of the court; that he should pay for gas, fuel, and all that sort of thing. To have his amendment perfectly consistent, I suggest to him to include those and similar items and make justice as dear as possible instead of as cheap as possible.

Mr. CASWELL. I do not want to oppose the appointment of a stenographer in the trial of these cases in the proper way and at the proper time. But this amendment would permit the attendance of a stenographer at $10 a day from the beginning of the session to its conclusion, whether there was anything for him to do or not. Nor would it correct the difficulty if we adopted the plan suggested by the gentleman from Indiana, because it very often occurs that there is no case on trial for three or four days that requires the assistance of a stenographer. Another objection is that neither the plaintiff nor the defendant might be responsible and that neither could be compelled to pay the stenographer. Consequently the remedy would be inadequate.

Now, I appeal to this House to second the suggestion made by the gentleman from Arkansas that we do not depart from the objects of this bill. We only undertake by it to reorganize the judiciary system of the United States, and we do not wish to have this bill loaded by propositions to extend or curtail the jurisdiction of these courts as they now exist. Instead of providing for the machinery of the courts by authorizing the appointment of stenographers or other officers, we should leave the bill to stand upon its own merits in so far as it deals with the reorganization of the judiciary system. Several amendments have been proposed to the bill as it now stands, which I do not wish to antagonize; nor does the Judiciary Committee, if I understand the disposition of its members, desire to antagonize those propositions. But in almost every instance we have already reported a bill to the House, and it is now on the Calendar, to provide for those very matters. And I urge this House now when we are trying to perfect this system by improvements which have been long needed to confine itself at this time to proceeding with the one subject of reorganizing the judiciary as presented in this measure.

While it is true that this measure will enlarge the duties of the trial court, it is also true that the district courts almost everywhere through the United States are now holding the circuit courts and are discharging in the main the duties of those courts. And it is, in my judgment, a wise thing to do, to bring the trial of these cases nearer the people and confine them to one court, the district court.

And then we assign to the intervening court, the circuit court, authority to review these cases on proper appeals or writs of error, for the purpose of correcting error if it has intervened in the trial court below. In that way we relieve the calendar of the Supreme Court. It is well known that in the present condition of that calendar a case if appealed can not be reached in less than three years, which amounts practically to a denial of justice in many cases, because it often happens that if the parties undertook to go through another three years of litigation they would be utterly ruined, and therefore they abandon the case. Now, the great object of this reorganization is to relieve the Supreme Court from its present crowded condition, and to that end we have proposed this system, which is not altogether new, as it has been often under consideration in the other end of the Capitol, and has twice passed that body in substantially its present form. I appeal to the committee again to let us proceed with this bill and take this step which is demanded by the people of the whole country.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I move to strike out the last word. I trust, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Indiana will amend the proposition so as to provide that these stenographers shall be employed not in all civil causes, but only in causes in which it may be deemed by the court necessary to employ them, so as not to burden litigants with the cost of a stenographer in every case, which would in many instances amount to a great hardship.

Mr. MASON. I understand that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] is the author of the original amendment providing for the employment of stenographers.

Mr. MCMILLIN. No, sir; I am not, nor do I favor it.

Mr. MASON. At the proper time I want to ask a question of the gentleman who introduced the amendment.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, if this bill is to pass at all, its passage will not be facilitated nor made certain by the adoption of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, even as amended by the gentleman from Indiana, and I agree with my friend who has just addressed the committee that in considering this bill we ought to leave it unhampered by other questions. I sympathize with the disposition that has been manifested here to-day to lessen the jurisdiction of the Federal courts. They are expensive, they are far from the people, and they are tribunals in which the parties are as little likely to get satisfactory justice speedily as in any tribunals known to our system.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Will the gentleman allow me to call his attention to one consideration as to the cost of the employment of these stenographers? There are sixty districts, I understand from my colleague on the Judiciary Committee, and if a reporter had to attend the courts one-half of the year, and was paid the highest price provided in this amendment, the cost would amount to only $90,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. If you authorize the employment of stenographers by every judge in every court, including the circuit judges, the cost would amount to $234,000 a year.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Unquestionably that would be the result finally. I do not understand that any judge is to be precluded from the privilege of appointing a stenographer, who is to receive $10 a day.

A MEMBER. Not to exceed $10.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Well, when you fix the maximum figure you may be sure the cost will never fall below that. I do not think this amendment should form any part of this bill. If the policy of employing stenographers is to be adopted let it come up as an independent proposition, and not as a barnacle on this or any other bill. In characterizing it in that way I do not, of course, mean any disrespect to my friend from Pennsylvania, because I know that he is simply seeking to accomplish an end which he thinks it is proper to accomplish. But, Mr. Chairman, the way to reach a remedy for our Federal evils is not by increasing the Federal judicial power; not by providing more judges.

The surest and best remedy is to take away some of the jurisdiction of the Federal courts, which by construction they have filched from the States. They began with the beginning of this Government to steal out over the fields of jurisdiction, and what they did not have by constitutional right or by statute they have taken to themselves by the force of construction. There is not a more irresponsible judicial tribunal known among men in this or any other country than our Federal courts. Mr. Jefferson very truly said that the only remedy against them was impeachment, and that to them impeachment was not a scarecrow. Whoever will turn back and look at Mr. Jefferson's predictions on this subject will see that if he had been a prophet ordained by God he could not have foretold more truly than he did the encroachments that these Federal courts would make.

Do members stop to think what we have given into the hands of those courts? First, they began by construing that they had a right to allow corporations to be considered persons in contemplation of law and to bring their causes in the Federal courts. Afterwards they held that not only the defendant might carry the cause to the Federal court, but that the plaintiff in an action, after bringing his cause in a State court, tampering with its jurisdiction and wearing out his antagonist, might take it to the Federal court. The way to put a stop to these evils is to take away their jurisdiction. Why, sir, they have at last, by the process of Congressional mal-legislation, put their rapacious hands upon the ballot-box. They send deputy marshals to the polls and supervisors to the polls to beat down the freeman or seize him and carry him from the voting places. I warn men here and now that if our liberties are to be perpetuated we had better begin to cut the locks of this judicial Samson.

Mr. MASON. I wish to suggest to the author of the amendment proposing the employment of stenographers that it is not sufficiently explicit, and that if such an amendment is to be adopted it ought to be perfected in some way. The proposition is to pay a per diem not exceeding $10; but no provision is made for copying the short-hand notes. Now, an ordinary stenographer will take in an hour notes which will require four hours for transcription either with pen or with type-writer. As I understand, a stenographer is usually paid $10 a day for attendance and note-taking; but this amendment would require him, without additional compensation, to sit up through the night making his transcript. If the amendment is to be adopted it should be put in such a form that good stenographers can afford to take these appointments. No competent stenographer can afford for a per diem of $10 to take notes all day and then sit up all night making his transcript. On these terms short-hand writers competent for this class of work can not be secured.

Mr. PETERS. I wish to call attention to what seems to me to be a very peculiar phase of this bill. It is stated by members of the Committee on the Judiciary, as well as by other members of the House, that the United States circuit courts are overburdened with business, while the United States district courts are deficient in business. It is proposed by this bill to take business from the United States circuit courts and transfer it to the United States district courts. In other words, there being one judicial hopper that is full to overflowing, while the other is empty, or nearly so, this bill proposes to empty the hopper that is full into the hopper that is now empty; that is, to transfer the business of one class of courts to the other.

It would naturally be expected, if business is thus to be transferred to the district courts, that any assistance to be given to the judicial force would be given to these courts. But, remarkable as it may seem, the additional assistance is to be given by this bill to the circuit courts. This seems to me a strange proceeding; and there appears to be some motive or object at the bottom of this transfer. If this bill proposed to increase the number of United States district judges, it would be in keeping with the ostensible object of the measure. But there is to be no increase of the district judges, while the circuit judges presiding over courts from which business is to be taken are to be enlarged in number. I submit this as a criticism which it seems to me is worthy of consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] withdraw his pro forma amendment?

Mr. MCMILLIN. I do.

Mr. ROGERS. I renew the amendment. A response to the observations of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS] would probably be made more appropriately by some member of the Judiciary Committee on the other side of the House. It is my pleasure to state I do not know of any motive except that which has been stated openly on the floor, namely, to relieve the Supreme Court of its overwork, to simplify to procedure, and, in short, to do just exactly what the bill says on its face.

The trouble in all these questions in the past has been we get into some partisan discussion. I had hoped, Mr. Chairman, there would not be anything of that sort here. This is a unanimous report from the Judiciary Committee, as I understand it. Having said that much, I have no other observation to make on that point.

The observation my friend makes about the "hoppers" is perfectly easily explained. The Federal judge, to illustrate, of our circuit is running from Colorado to Arkansas. He is much of the time on the road. He is much of the time getting ready to work, and when he gets to a place he is much of the time getting ready to go away again. Half the time some of the district judges are idle, when they might be engaged in carrying on the business of the courts if they had the entire jurisdiction which this bill gives.

The argument the gentleman makes is the strongest argument in favor of the proposition. By transferring civil and criminal cases the court can dispose of more business than both can now do together. It is my belief the judge can do it easily. On the other hand, the circuit court becomes an appellate court, so to speak, with three judges. I suggest to my friend if the new judge to be appointed be a Democrat he will be in the minority, as the other two will be on the other side of the question.

Mr. PETERS. Does the gentleman from Arkansas accuse me of making a political speech? I made no political remarks while I was on the floor at all.

Mr. ROGERS. Then I withdraw the remark. I can not imagine what the gentleman means by any other motive than what appears on the face of the bill. I disclaim for one there is any other motive about it.

As I said before, this circuit court becomes correspondingly more efficient—I mean it becomes as much more efficient—and the district court becomes more efficient by having that jurisdiction placed in that way, instead of having the judge running about all over the country from Colorado to Arkansas, going backwards and forwards. All the responsibility will fall also upon this circuit court for the dispatch of its business. That court will be strengthened as to time as well as in numbers, and become a stronger court because I believe it will satisfy in most cases persons seeking this jurisdiction. I hope we may be able to have a vote on this.

Mr. BACON. I should like to know from the gentleman from Arkansas the relative number of judges of the district and circuit courts?

Mr. ROGERS. Fifty-seven and nine.

Mr. BACON. Then the hoppers which are to be filled are far in excess of the hoppers which are to be emptied.

Mr. PETERS. I wish to state, Mr. Chairman, that I did not catch the force of the political allusion in the gentleman's speech until towards the latter part of it. The point I made was simply this: Here you take the business before a United States circuit judge to the courts presided over by the United States district judges. If that be true, and it is the purpose and object of the bill, then the bill in order to be consistent should increase the number of United States district judges and not of United States circuit judges. The motive referred to might be in the fact that the United States circuit judges receive $5,000 per annum and the district judges receive $3,500, or from that to $4,000 per annum.

Mr. ROGERS. I am sorry I misapprehended my friend. As I have stated to the gentleman from New York, there are fifty-seven district judges and nine circuit judges.

Mr. LIND. More circuit business will be transacted by district judges than by the circuit judge himself.

Mr. ROGERS. That is true in a portion of the cases. The circuit court judge does not sit in many cases; I do not know how many. I know a large majority of the circuit judges' business is transacted by district judges, so that the increase of business before the district judges will be, relatively speaking, small.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to modify the amendment and ask the Clerk to read the proposition I send up.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words in the amendment "That on the trial of all civil and criminal causes in the district courts of the United States" and insert "That on the trial of all civil causes in the district courts of the United States where, in the opinion of the judge, it shall be necessary." Also, strike out in the amendment the words "United States" and insert "party against whom causes are adjudged."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the modified amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That contains two propositions, and I call for a division, one as to the appointment of a stenographer, in the discretion of the judge, and the other compelling the losing party to pay this expense.

The CHAIRMAN. The vote will be taken first upon the proposition embodied in the first part of the amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 32, noes 54.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe there is no quorum voting——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe I will not press the point. The other amendment will be unimportant, as this is voted down.

I still move to strike out the word "criminal" where it occurs, and leave the other amendment standing, namely, that the expense shall be paid as a part of the costs of the losing party. However, I will not press the amendment at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question then recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, which has been read.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 49, noes 55.

Mr. LYNCH. No quorum has voted.

Mr. ROGERS. I beg the gentleman from Pennsylvania to withhold the point until I can make a statement to the House.

Mr. LYNCH. Very well.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, it is getting late now, and being an inclement day several gentlemen have indicated to me a desire that the committee shall rise, and that we do not remain longer in session this evening, Saturday. It is manifest that we will not be able to get through with the bill this evening unless we sit all night or certainly a greater portion of it. We have pending upon the Calendar what is known as the Utah constitutional amendment, and I am exceedingly anxious that the House shall consider that measure, and also complete the consideration of the pending bill. I think I may speak for the committee also in saying that they are desirous that both of these measures shall be promptly considered. I shall therefore ask unanimous consent of the House that the Committee on the Judiciary may be given another day for these measures, and would suggest Tuesday, the 3d day of April.

Mr. BLOUNT. That can not be done in committee.

Mr. ROGERS. I had forgotten for the moment. I move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first state the condition that this bill will be left in if the committee rises. The House has just taken a vote upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and pending a division upon that vote the gentleman from Pennsylvania has made the point of order that no quorum has voted. The question on that amendment will recur the first thing when the House again resolves itself into committee for the consideration of this bill.

The gentleman from Arkansas moves that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. SPRINGER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HATCH reported that the Committee of the Whole House, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 8190, under the special order of the House, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, the House heard the request I made a few moments ago. Some gentlemen have suggested that I fix a later date. I will accordingly modify my request; and now ask unanimous consent that the provisions of the pending order in relation to business from the Committee on the Judiciary be extended to one more day, namely, the 10th day of April, for the purpose of considering the two measures to which I have referred.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will that interfere with revenue bills?

Mr. ROGERS. The order will be the same as that heretofore made

Mr. BUCHANAN. I understood the gentleman from Arkansas, when he first made his request, to name as one of the bills to be considered the Utah bill.

Mr. ROGERS. I am not authorized to state that the committee have so decided; but I think I may state without hesitation that the committee will be unanimous in that report.

Mr. BUCHANAN. To bring up the Utah bill?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey demands the regular order.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Unless it is distinctly understood that the Utah bill will not be brought up, I demand the regular order.

Mr. ROGERS. Then, Mr. Speaker, I can not speak for the Judiciary Committee, but ask that the day be granted under this order for the purpose of considering this bill only.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will have to object to that.

Mr. PARKER. I ask unanimous consent, changing the gentleman's request to the 10th day of April to dispose of this bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. Has objection been made?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood the gentleman from Indiana as objecting, but will again submit the gentleman's request.

Mr. HOLMAN. There are many propositions pending before the Committee on Rules covering future time for committees; and I think it not only important but fair and proper that this request should go to the same committee.

Mr. ROGERS. Let me address an inquiry to my friend from New Jersey—whether he thought I alluded to the measure providing for the admission of Utah as a State?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I did.

Mr. ROGERS. I did not mean that. I meant the constitutional amendment prohibiting polygamy in the United States.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Oh, I am in favor of that all the time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will again state the request of the gentleman from Arkansas. It is that the order setting apart a certain time for the business of the Judiciary Committee be extended so as to include Tuesday, April 10, with the understanding that the measures the gentleman has indicated will be taken up then.

Mr. DINGLEY. Is it requested that the Judiciary Committee shall have that day after the hour for the consideration of bills?

Mr. ROGERS. The present order gives us the whole day immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. DINGLEY. I will object to that arrangement, but I will not object to the committee being given the day named after the consideration hour.

Mr. ROGERS. I will modify my request to meet the gentleman's objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request as now modified?

Mr. HOLMAN. As I said before, I think that as a matter of fairness all such propositions should go before the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. DUNHAM, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on Commerce with amendments the bill (H. R. 3524) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the city of Oquawka, in the State of Illinois, and to establish it as a post-road; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the amendments and accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PEEL. I give notice that on Thursday next I will ask the House to take up for consideration the Indian appropriation bill.

SECTION 4009, REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. BLOUNT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8830) to amend section 4009 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

SALARIES OF JUDGES OF UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURTS.

Mr. CASWELL. I desire to report from the Committee on the Judiciary, as a substitute for the bill H. R. 1928, a bill fixing the salaries of the several judges of the United States district courts.

Mr. McMILLIN. I object to that.

RETURN OF BILLS TO SENATE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a request from the Senate to return the bill (S. 192) to provide that judges of United States circuit and district courts shall reduce their instructions to juries to writing in all States where by the laws thereof they are required so to do; and the bill (S. 788) to provide for holding terms of the United States courts at Mississippi City.

The request of the Senate was agreed to; and the Committee on the Judiciary having been discharged from the consideration of the two bills named, they were ordered to be returned to the Senate.

REPORT OF SENATE INVESTIGATING COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a Senate concurrent resolution for printing the report of the Senate select committee appointed under the resolution of March 3, 1887, to inquire into the methods of business, etc., in the Executive Departments; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN FLORIDA.

Mr. ADAMS, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 8025) to amend an act entitled "An act to extend the jurisdiction of the district and circuit courts of the United States for the southern district of Florida," approved February 3, 1879; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the amendments and accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CONSTRUCTION OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. DIBBLE, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported a bill (H. R. 8831) relating to the superintendence of public buildings; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. BARNES. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on the Territories a bill which they think was improperly referred to them.

There was no objection, and the Committee on the Territories was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7050) to create and establish United States district, Territorial, supreme, and other courts in the Indian Territory; and it was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ROGERS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

Mr. MORGAN presented a petition of citizens of Calhoun County, Alabama, praying for the repeal of the internal-revenue laws; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FARWELL presented the petition of August G. Schoenborn and others, citizens of the District of Columbia, praying for the passage of an act authorizing the commissioners of the District of Columbia to widen the alley in square 686, running from B to C street, northeast; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HISCOCK presented a petition of 275 ex-Union veterans, citizens of the State of New York, praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a memorial of 46 members of the New York State Agricultural Society, remonstrating against the passage of the Palmer cattle-commission bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of the wood-pulp industry companies of the State of New York, praying that the present duties on wood-pulp be maintained; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PLUMB presented a petition of ex-Union soldiers and sailors, citizens of Kansas, praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of 63 citizens of the Third and Fifth Congressional districts of Kansas, praying for prohibition in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of the Gun Club and citizens of White City, Kans., praying for the passage of the bill setting apart a certain tract of land lying near the headwaters of the Yellowstone River as a public park; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FRYE presented the petition of Hector McIntosh and others, citizens of Pennsylvania; the petition of M. L. Coburn and others, citizens of Pennsylvania; the petition of Clara G. Rowley and others, citizens of Pennsylvania; the petition of Joseph May and others, citizens of Pennsylvania, and the petition of D. C. Ritchie and others, citizens of Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of a bill extending protection to girlhood by raising the age of consent in females to eighteen years; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BROWN presented the petition of the executive board of the National Farmers' Alliance, praying for the establishment of a department of agriculture with a Cabinet minister at its head; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. PADDOCK presented a petition of 20 ex-soldiers, citizens of Clay County, Nebraska, and a petition of the Per Diem Rated Service-Pension Association of New York City, officially signed, praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DOLPH presented a petition of the Marion County Pomona Grange, of Oregon, praying that the work of eradicating pleuro-pneumonia be continued under the Bureau of Animal Industry; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. EVARTS presented a petition of the executive board of the National Farmers' Alliance, representing organized bodies of farmers in the United States, comprising an aggregate membership of 1,400,000 persons, praying for the enactment of a law during the present session of Congress establishing a department of agriculture with a Cabinet minister at its head; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of the Medical Society of the county of Rensselaer, N. Y., praying for the removal of import duty on all medical and surgical supplies, instruments, and appliances; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SPOONER. I present a memorial of the Turnverein, of Milwaukee, Wis., remonstrating, first, against the passage of any laws tending to make the right of immigration dependent on the personal views of the immigrant, or which may be so construed as to restrict and impede immigration; second, in favor of the laws against the importation and landing of bond slaves or laborers under contract being strictly enforced. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. I also present a petition of citizens and members of the Grange of the State of Wisconsin, praying that there be no further extension of the time for the payment of the public debt; second, that there be no extension of charters of the national banks, and no increase of the percentage of the currency to those banks on their present securities; that the duties on sugars be abolished, with a bounty to home producers; that there be restored to wool-growing the substantial protection enjoyed under the tariff of 1867, so modified as to meet the later forms of foreign competition and evasion; and praying for protection to agriculture in other indicated ways. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR.

Mr. EVARTS. If it be in order now, I would ask the attention of the Senate to the propriety of going on for to-day and to-morrow with the Calendar. On Wednesday, as we know, the Senate will not be in session, and the last two days of the week, Thursday and Friday, a certain number of Senators will be necessarily absent in attendance at the funeral of the late Chief-Justice. It seems to me that we should all feel under obligation to go through with the Calendar, and these two days might well be occupied in that way, and the general debates opened after Wednesday till they shall be completed or the Senate shall otherwise order. I would ask, if the Senate concur in this feeling, that there may be a general consent to that course to-day being continued under the same arrangement as heretofore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent that the unexecuted order of Friday for the consideration of the Calendar under Rule VIII be continued to-day and to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. MORRILL. With this exception, Mr. President: When this order was made I had previously given notice that last Tuesday I would call up the bill (H. R. 5034) to provide for the purchase of United States bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury. I desire to call up that bill this morning. I think it will take but a few moments, and after that bill is passed I shall have no objection to going on with the Calendar; but until that bill has been taken up and considered I object to anything else.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I am willing to consent that the order shall stand for to-day, as I think that was implied in the order which was made on Thursday that it should continue on Friday or the next legislative day. As we had no day on Friday for business, I think it is equitable and fair that the order should be continued for to-day; but I would not like to consent to longer than to-day.

Mr. PALMER. I think there is a special order down for 2 o'clock to-day. Although I do not wish to appear intractable in this matter, I should not like to give my consent to have that displaced or deferred without consultation with gentlemen who are here now waiting for action on that bill.

Mr. PLATT. I suppose this debate goes on by unanimous consent, and I ask permission to say a word.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business has not yet been concluded, and therefore the debate proceeds by unanimous consent.

Mr. PALMER. I ask the Chair if it requires unanimous consent to displace the special order made for to-day at 2 o'clock?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A special order can be displaced by a majority of the Senate, when it is reached.

Mr. PLATT. I think that special order ought never to have been made, for this reason: A long time ago I gave notice that upon the conclusion of the undervaluation bill I would move to take up the bill for the admission of South Dakota. I do not think that any business can be more important than that of the admission of new States. The Committee on Territories has already reported three bills for the admission of new States, and I have another on my table ready to report, and I think that the importance of those measures requires their consideration. I have, however, acceded to the general wish of the Senate that the Calendar should be proceeded with; but here comes in this special order. I do not know that I want to antagonize it, but I simply say that I do not wish to consent that this order shall run longer than to-day.

Mr. PALMER. I think that the Senator was on the floor or in the Senate at the time that special order was made.

Mr. PLATT. I was in the chair, I think.

Mr. PALMER. And it seems to me that his remarks would have been more pertinent at that time than at this in regard to the propriety of making that special order.

I would say, in regard to the comparative importance of the bills, that I regard the pleuro-pneumonia bill, so called, as of much more importance than the admission of any Territory. Dakota would not ask for admission if pleuro-pneumonia were permitted to run riot through that Territory. The people could not live there. If it did not become a desert it would be deserted. People must have cattle, must have animals, must have the domestic animals, and if pleuro-pneumonia gets across the Mississippi River it will be said of Dakota, as it was of Rome, Dakota fuit, if gentlemen will permit me a little Latin.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, whether the remarks of the Senator from Michigan are intended to be jocose or not I am unable to tell——

Mr. PALMER. In great seriousness, Mr. President.

Mr. PLATT. But I assume that made in the Senate of the United States they are serious. I think he will hardly convince the people of Dakota or of this country that his bill is of more importance than the question of the admission of a new State. The admission of a new State goes to the honor, the dignity, the power, and the glory of this whole nation. Territories add but little to the honor and glory and the strength of the nation. The nation is a system of States, and the addition of a State gives us power and standing among the nations of the earth; and I can only account for the sentiment of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, that his bill is of more importance than the question of the admission of a State, upon the theory that it comes from his committee.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, I was not in my seat when the order was obtained by which the bill to provide for the establishment of a bureau of animal industry was set for to-day. If I had been here I should have objected to making a special order of it. I never learned the fact that it was so set until Saturday. The people of the State I in part represent have perhaps a larger interest in that subject than those of any other State in the Union. The people of that State have a very deep interest in anything that relates to cattle raising and cattle transportation, and they are very earnestly opposed to the passage of this bill; and I hope it will not be taken up to-day, or until we can get time to look into the subject, which I have not yet had an opportunity to do. It is a question of great importance, and it ought to be fairly considered.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate proceeds by unanimous consent, the morning business not having been concluded.

Mr. PALMER. I ask the courtesy of the Senate to state that this is a bill of very great importance and of as much importance or more to Texas than any other State, and I hope if it shall be defeated it will not be defeated by measures of retardation or indirection. I hope that the thing will be discussed on its merits, and unless the Senate sees fit to change the special order I think, without further information from gentlemen who are here waiting in the interest of the bill, I shall ask that the special order be observed as it now stands.

Mr. VEST. I rise to morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will receive it.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1974) for the erection of a public building at Fort Worth, Tex., reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1805) for a public building at Greenville, S. C., reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 159) for a public building at Greenville, S. C., reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5062) for the erection of a public building at Birmingham, Ala., reported it without amendment.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, to whom was referred the petition of the San Diego (Cal.) Medical Society, urging that a quarantine station be established for San Diego Harbor, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. 2493) to perfect the quarantine service of the United States; which was read twice by its title.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the bill (S. 665) to establish a quarantine station at the port of San Francisco, and the bill (S. 1641) to establish a permanent quarantine station at or near Cape Charles, Virginia, reported adversely thereon, and the bills were postponed indefinitely.

Mr. PLUMB, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1782) to authorize the leasing of the school and university lands in the Territory of Wyoming, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1619) to provide for the formation and admission into the Union of the State of Montana, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. 2512) to provide for the formation and admission into the Union of the State of Montana, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. DOLPH, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2003) to grant to the city of The Dalles, in the State of Oregon, certain lands for the purposes of a public park, reported it with amendments.

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1765) to provide for the sale of the Fort Sedgwick military reservation, in the State of Colorado and Territory of Wyoming, to actual settlers, reported it with amendments.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2337) for the relief of Maria N. Abbey, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Pensions; which was agreed to.

FUNERAL OF CHIEF-JUSTICE WAITE.

Mr. ALLISON. I introduce a bill and ask unanimous consent that it may now be put on its passage. Let it be read at length for information.

The bill (S. 2494) to provide for payment of the funeral expenses of the late Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court was read the first time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to defray the expenses necessarily incurred in the funeral of Morrison R. Waite, late Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, to be disbursed by the marshal of the Supreme Court upon vouchers to be approved by the senior associate justice of said court.

The bill was read the second time by its title, and by unanimous consent considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TERRITORY OF UTAH.

Mr. CULLOM. On behalf of the Committee on Territories I report back a memorial and proposed constitution for the admission of the Territory of Utah as a State, and ask to be discharged from their further consideration, and to report resolutions which were unanimously adopted by the Committee on Territories, and I request that they be now considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions reported by the Senator from Illinois will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that new States should be admitted into the Union only upon a basis of equality with the existing States and that Congress ought not to exercise any supervision over the provisions of the constitution of any such new State further than is necessary to guaranty to every State in this Union a republican form of government.

Resolved, That the proposed constitution for the State of Utah submitted to Congress with the memorial praying for the admission of the Territory of Utah into the Union as a State, contains provisions which would deprive such proposed State, if admitted into the Union, of that equality which should exist among the different States.

Resolved further, That it is the sense of the Senate that the Territory of Utah ought not to be admitted into the Union as a State until it is certain beyond doubt that the practice of plural marriages, bigamy, or polygamy, has been entirely abandoned by the inhabitants of said Territory, and until it is likewise certain that the civil affairs of the Territory are not controlled by the priesthood of the Mormon Church.

Mr. HOAR. Let those resolutions be printed and go over. They are very important resolutions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will lie over under the rules and be printed.

Mr. BUTLER. May I inquire of the Senator from Illinois if those resolutions are accompanied by a bill sent to the committee.

Mr. CULLOM. No, sir. This report has nothing to do with the bill introduced by the Senator from South Carolina. It simply has to do with the memorial and the proposed constitution from that Territory.

Mr. BUTLER. That is what I wished to inquire about.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair also understood the Senator from Illinois to report back from the committee the memorial and draught of a constitution, and ask that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same. That order will be made, unless there be objection.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BUTLER introduced a bill (S. 2495) to equalize the pay of certain officers of the Navy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 2506) for the establishment of a light-house, fog-signal, and day beacon in the vicinity of Goose Rocks, Fox Island Thoroughfare, Maine; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 2507) granting a pension to Joseph Hicks; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. TELLER introduced a bill (S. 2508) for the relief of B. F. Rockafellow; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2509) to equalize the salaries of certain postmasters; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2510) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the citizens of Colorado, Nevada, and the Territories to fell and remove timber on the public domain for mining and domestic purposes," approved June 3, 1878; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WALTHALL introduced a bill (S. 2511) to withdraw the public lands of the United States in Mississippi from sale at ordinary private entry, and to restrict disposals thereof under general statutes to homestead settlers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SPOONER (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2513) granting a pension to Charles H. Sedgwick; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2514) granting a pension to Michael Shong; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DANIEL introduced a bill (S. 2515) to provide pneumatic gun-carriages for the War Department; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2516) to appropriate a sum of money to the Mount Vernon Avenue Association, as assignee of the State of Virginia, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2517) for the establishment of a light-ship at Bush's Bluff Shoal, Elizabeth River, Virginia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. GEORGE (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2518) providing a remedy for the retention of officers of the Navy (not retired for age or length of service) on the retired-list after the disability for which they were placed there has ceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. PALMER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1430) to forfeit certain lands heretofore granted for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 20th ultimo, a letter from the Chief of Engineers embodying a report of a board of engineers in regard to estimates for restoring quarters and buildings of Fort Moultrie for garrison of United States troops, etc.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

FISHERIES NEGOTIATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

In response to the resolution adopted by your honorable body on the 16th instant, as follows: "Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested, if in his judgment not incompatible with the public interest, to transmit to the Senate copies of the minutes and daily protocols of the meetings of the commissioners who negotiated the treaty with Great Britain, submitted by the President to the Senate on the 20th of February, 1888," I submit herewith a report of the Secretary of State, which, I hope, will satisfactorily meet the request for information embraced in said resolution.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, March 22, 1888.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6437) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

The message also returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the following bills:

A bill (S. 192) to provide that judges of the United States circuit and district courts shall reduce their instructions to juries to writing in all States wherein by the laws thereof State judges are required so to do; and

A bill (S. 788) to provide for holding terms of the United States courts at Mississippi City.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following resolutions:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, March 23, 1888.

Resolved, That the House of Representatives has heard of the death of Chief-Justice Waite, of the Supreme Court of the United States, which occurred this morning at 7 o'clock, with feelings of deep and sincere sorrow.

Resolved, That while the nation mourns the loss of one of its most useful and illustrious sons, it is fitting that the House, representing the people, express its deepest sympathy with the family of the deceased in their affliction.

Resolved, That the House will attend as a body the funeral of the late Chief-Justice, and the Speaker is requested to appoint a committee consisting of nine members to act with a committee of the Senate in any necessary action relating to the funeral.

Resolved, That as an additional mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the House do now adjourn—.

And that the Speaker had announced the appointment of Mr. KELLEY, of Pennsylvania; Mr. SENEY, of Ohio; Mr. GROSVENOR, of Ohio; Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky; Mr. CANNON, of Illinois; Mr. CARLTON, of Georgia; Mr. STEWART, of Vermont; Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa, and Mr. RUSSELL, of Connecticut, as members of the committee.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the funeral ceremonies of the late Chief-Justice Waite be held in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Wednesday, March 28, 1888, at 12 o'clock, noon, under the arrangements of the Supreme Court, and that when the House adjourn on the 27th instant it shall be until 11.30 a. m. of March 28.

Resolved, That the Clerk of this House notify the Senate and Supreme Court of the passage of these resolutions.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 1874) to change the eastern and northern judicial districts of Texas, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 4948) to amend section 988 of the Revised Statutes, regulating stays on executions in courts of the United States;

A bill (H. R. 8180) to regulate the liens of judgments and decrees of the courts of the United States; and

A bill (H. R. 8808) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for holding terms of United States courts at Vicksburg, Miss."

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 1611) for the erection of a public building at Springfield, Mo.;

A bill (H. R. 4487) to enable the Secretary of the Interior to pay certain creditors of the Pottawatomie Indians out of the funds of said Indians; and

A bill (H. R. 5728) to amend the laws relating to navigation, and for other purposes.

UNDERGROUND WIRES IN DISTRICT.

Mr. HALE. I submit, by request, two resolutions touching an inquiry into the expediency of a revised system of underground wires in the District of Columbia. Everybody knows the inconvenience to which we were all subjected last week in getting communication with the different parts of the city. These resolutions cover the subject. One should go to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and the other to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will be read separately.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds is hereby directed to report to the Senate on or before Monday, the 16th day of April, 1888, a comprehensive system of underground wire for telegraph and telephone service to connect the several Departments and bureaus of the Government in Washington City, presenting in detail the same, and an itemized estimate of the cost.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine desire action on the resolutions or their reference only? The Chair understood the Senator to say he desired one to be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and the other to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HALE. This one should be referred to the Committe on Public Buildings and Grounds; but if there is no objection to the passage of the resolutions, I ask that they be considered now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HARRIS. Let it be read again.

The resolution was read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next resolution submitted by the Senator from Maine (Mr. HALE) will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby directed to report to the Senate on or before Monday, the 16th day of April, 1888, a comprehensive system of underground wires for telegraph and telephone service for use of the District of Columbia, presenting in detail the same and an itemized estimate of the cost.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

LAND PATENT SUITS.

Mr. STEWART submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be directed to inform the Senate:

First. What suits to vacate land patents issued by the United States have been commenced by the direction of the Department of Justice, and are now pending in court, and the present status of the same.

Second. What suits he has authorized to be commenced, and which have not yet been entered in court.

Third. What suits he has been requested by the Department of the Interior to commence, but upon which requests final action has not yet been taken.

Fourth. What applications for the institution of such suits have been filed with him, and are pending before him, or on reference to the Interior Department.

Fifth. Whether any special counsel have been employed in the conduct of such suits, or in any wise authorized to represent the United States therein; and, if so, the names of such counsel, and whether the expenses of any such suits in whole or in part are paid by any parties other than the Government.

Sixth. To what extent does the Department of Justice determine whether such suits ought to be commenced, or whether they can be successfully maintained.

CONSIDERATION OF THE FISHERIES TREATY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. RIDDLEBERGER March 22, 1888, as follows:

Resolved, That so much of Rules XXXVI, XXXVII, and XXXVIII as provide for executive sessions be suspended during the consideration of the fisheries treaty when the same shall be reported to the Senate.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I believe that is a resolution I offered. I ask, without making any remarks upon it, that it may be acted on. I have heretofore said all I care to say in the way of objection to secret executive sessions. I do hope it will be the pleasure of the Senate to pass this resolution. There are two treaties which will come up for consideration pretty speedily, perhaps, and I hope will be treated like their predecessors and shelved until next December.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the resolution offered by the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SHERMAN. It seems to me that if the Committee on Foreign Relations have that treaty under consideration, it would be better not to make any order of this kind at this period of the session. It may be that the committee itself will recommend that the debate be open and public. The official report has been laid on our table; it is open to the public. But pending the consideration of the treaty by the committee, I think this order had better remain. Let it lie on the table, and it may be that the committee itself will report in favor of having the debate public. At present I am not prepared to give any opinion whether the debate may not be public or not. Let the committee act on the question. It is simply idle for the Senate to act on it now. It had better be put over until the committee report, and then it is perhaps probable that the committee may agree that the debate shall be open to the public. I think we ought not to commit ourselves now.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Mr. President, this is a resolution that does not go to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and each member of that committee acts here as a Senator as contradistinguished (if that is understood) from his relationship to the Foreign Relations Committee. This is a resolution which if it had gone to any committee would have gone to the Committee on Rules. The Committee on Foreign Relations will have performed its duty, or all that is expected of it, when it considers the treaty itself; and it has no right to consider what course of action the Senate shall pursue, whether it shall be in open or in executive session. That is a matter that I do not propose for one to let go to that graveyard of propositions like this.

Mr. President, I think this is the proper time to consider a resolution of this sort. The Senator from Ohio thinks it ought to be delayed until the committee of which he is chairman shall arrive at its conclusion on this treaty. So far as I am concerned if he will make that a condition I will agree to it, conditioned, however, that the chairman of that committee will not press the fisheries treaty in executive session before this resolution is acted upon in open session. I would not say that that Senator has any other than always a candid motive, but I have grown to believe that sometimes there is a bug under the chip. That fisheries treaty may come in here at any time and I can not discuss it. I am forbidden even to tell the truth about it, and the only way that it can be taken out of that executive or secret session is to pass a resolution during the morning hour that it shall be considered in open Senate.

It does not come before us as a political proposition entirely. I do not see how you can intelligently discuss that treaty without expressly providing that it shall be considered in open session and that the comments of Senators upon it shall be laid before the public. I have not seen an American newspaper, or, I will say, a newspaper published in the United States, that has not denounced the treaty. They say about it what I would be forbidden to say on the Senate floor. When I referred to another treaty I was told by a Senator, and had to deferentially accept it, that I was violating an oath as a Senator. I am not doing it now, sir. I would not have accepted it in any other spirit. Men may swap well-deserved reputations for cheap notoriety. I hope I shall not do it.

I am asking for the consideration of this resolution after the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations has had since last Thursday to examine it. It is a resolution, as I shall repeat, that does not properly go to his committee. I ask the Senate to consider it and not the Committee on Foreign Relations. I am reminded of what was well said on this floor by a very distinguished Senator when it was proposed by the chairman of the Judiciary Committee to refer his bill to that committee, and the Senator from Ohio reminded him that it was not debatable, and he said, "Mr. President, I do not rise to debate it. I simply want to bid farewell to my bill." I do not want to bid farewell to this resolution. I want to vote for it this morning when it comes up, and no single objection can pass it over, as it can on the day of its introduction.

I again ask the Senator from Ohio to express the same view in his vote which he has expressed repeatedly before, if I and others have an opportunity of expressing our view that America is big enough to take care of herself, and she does not require or need any treaty where she has to make concessions to those who are not manly fighting her.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator from Delaware will allow me to make a single reply to the observation of the Senator from Virginia, I wish to say that I am absolutely indifferent in regard to this matter except that I take it the Senate would not care to decide a question until it becomes important to decide it. I can not tell when the treaty will be reported to the Senate, and I say to the Senator from Virginia, and that is all I wish to say, that undoubtedly he will have ample notice. I will see myself that he has ample notice, so that he can ask for a vote of the Senate on the resolution before the treaty is considered. As a matter of course that would naturally be the case, and I give him the assurance that there is no doubt about it at all. So far as the question itself is concerned, I am indifferent except I think the Senate had better wait until the treaty is presented here for consideration.

Mr. GRAY. I merely rose to say that I thought the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio was a proper one at this time in regard to the resolution of the Senator from Virginia to consider the fisheries treaty in open session. I am not opposed to the resolution of the Senator from Virginia; in fact, I expect to vote for it. The President of the United States sent the fisheries treaty to the Senate with a request that it be made public, and it has been published. The people of the United States are fully possessed of that treaty and know all about its terms already; but I think we should act in this matter in decency and in order, and when the committee which has that treaty in charge shall have reported it, after consideration of the treaty itself, there will be time enough then for the Senate to decide whether it will consider the ratification of the treaty in open session or not.

So far as I understand the sentiment of the Senators on this side of the Chamber who sit around me, I think, unless something in the report of the committee should change their minds, and I can not conceive how that can be, they are in favor of the consideration of the treaty in open session. But I think the suggestion made by the Senator from Ohio is an eminently proper one, and that for the present the resolution should lie on the table. I make that motion now.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I will relieve the situation so far as I can by simply suggesting to the Senator from Delaware, and the Senator from Ohio, that if the Senate will consider the resolution in the morning hour, at least one day antecedent to the taking up of the fisheries treaty in executive session, with that understanding I will let the matter lie over. I do not wish to have the Senate lay the resolution on the table, for it would then require a vote to take it up.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is no objection to the course suggested by the Senator from Virginia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Delaware withdraw his motion to lay the resolution on the table?

Mr. GRAY. I will withdraw the motion if the resolution is not to be pressed at this time.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I shall not press it any further now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution lies over for consideration.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2494) to provide for payment of the funeral expenses of the late Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court.

PURCHASE OF BONDS.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5034) to provide for the purchase of United States bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length for information.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to apply the surplus money now in the Treasury, and such surplus money as may hereafter be in the Treasury, and not otherwise appropriated, or so much thereof as he may consider proper, to the purchase or redemption of United States bonds: Provided, That the bonds so purchased or redeemed shall constitute no part of the sinking fund but shall be canceled by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask to have the report read, which will explain the bill as briefly as it can be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. MORRILL March 6, 1888:

The Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5034) to provide for the purchase of United States bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury, respectfully report:

The committee unanimously believe no additional legislation is required to give the Secretary of the Treasury full and ample power to apply at any time the surplus money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, or so much thereof as he may consider proper, to the purchase or redemption of United States bonds. Section 2 of the act of March 3, 1881, nearly identical in phraseology, was reported by Mr. Bayard, chairman of the Committee on Finance, and inserted as an independent section of law with the approval of the Committee on Appropriations, and still stands unrepealed and with all of its original force on the statutes.

As the President has, however, expressed his belief that the law "is subject to the suspicion that it was intended as temporary and limited in its application, instead of conferring a continuing discretion and authority," it is likely that the Secretary of the Treasury may not feel at full liberty to exercise the power to purchase United States bonds as the public interest may seem to require. The committee, therefore, recommend the passage of the House bill, with some amendments designed to free the matter from all doubt.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was reported from the Committee on Finance with amendments which will be stated in their order.

The first amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in line 4, after the word "apply," to insert the words "from time to time;" so as to read:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to apply from time to time the surplus money now in the Treasury, and such surplus money as may hereafter be in the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 6, after the word "Treasury," to insert the words "not held for specific purposes;" so as to read:

And such surplus money as hereafter may be in the Treasury, not held for specific purposes, and not otherwise appropriated, or so much thereof as he may consider proper, to the purchase or redemption of United States bonds.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. Is it in order now to move an amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is open to amendment, the amendments of the committee having been acted upon.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to add as a separate section what I send to the desk.

Mr. STEWART. I wish to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas has been recognized, and offers an amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add as an additional section the following:

SEC. 2. That whenever the circulation of any national bank, or any portion thereof, shall be surrendered, and the same is not taken up by other national banks within thirty days thereafter, the Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon issue an equivalent amount of Treasury notes of the denominations now provided by law for national-bank notes. Said Treasury notes shall be deposited in the Treasury and paid out as other moneys kept for the discharge of the obligations of the Government. They shall be receivable for salaries and for all dues to the Government, including duties on imports; shall be a legal tender for all debts, public and private; shall be redeemable in coin, as the legal-tender notes of the United States now are; and when received into the Treasury they shall be reissued, and when mutilated or worn they shall be replaced, in the same manner as now provided by law for said legal-tender notes. The coin held in the Treasury at the date of the passage of this act for the redemption of the legal-tender notes of the Government shall also be applicable to the redemption of the Treasury notes herein provided for; and such coin reserve may, from time to time, be increased by adding thereto other sums from payments made into the Treasury, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That the total amount of said coin reserve shall never be less than 25 per cent. nor more than 30 per cent. of the total amount of legal-tender and Treasury notes outstanding. The true intent and meaning of this section being that the volume of paper money outstanding (exclusive of gold and silver certificates) shall remain as now existing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I hope that the amendment——

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator from Vermont allow me to make a suggestion before he goes on? I offered an amendment to the bill, in reference to the sinking fund, which was noted and regarded as pending. I rose about the time the Senator from Kansas offered his amendment to say that knowing this to be a measure which came from the other House, perhaps to remove a doubt, I proposed to withdraw my amendment, because this measure ought to stand by itself, and the question I sought to consider and the questions which the Senator from Kansas and others seek to consider should be placed upon other bills. But as this amendment has been thrown in I may as well let my amendment remain for a little while, and then I can withdraw it.

Mr. PLUMB. In view of the statement of the Senator from Kentucky, if he desires to offer his amendment, I will withdraw mine until he has had a chance to present his.

Mr. BECK. No, I will let it go for the time-being.

Mr. STEWART. I have an amendment to offer.

Mr. MORRILL. The amendment of the Senator from Kansas is entirely alien to the topic that is considered by the House bill. There is supposed to be an urgent necessity for the passage of the House bill with the amendments which have been made by the Committee on Finance, and agreed to by the Senate this morning. I trust that the Senator from Kansas will not press his amendment, which, if it was to be seriously discussed and considered, is one that would be likely to require a week or ten days of time for its consideration. I am sure that there is no present necessity for any action in the direction proposed by the Senator from Kansas. In order that we may get the bill through without taking much time this morning from the consideration of the Calendar, I hope that all amendments which have been proposed will be withdrawn and the bill allowed to pass.

Mr. PLUMB. Different people have different ways of manifesting haste. The bill under consideration has been on the Calendar just twenty days to-day. If there had been any great hurry about its passage, any very great emergency, I imagine the Finance Committee would have urged its passage long ago. It is not going to take ten days to dispose of this amendment, although it had better take thirty days than not have it or some such proposition adopted. It is entirely germane to the subject of the bill, just as germane as the punctuation that is in it.

This bill is for the purpose of relieving the Treasury from its surplus funds and adding to the circulation of the country, the last object being the main one I take it. The country to-day is in distress for lack of money, which the Treasury has locked up; and this is an effort on the part of Congress to induce the Secretary of the Treasury to do what he has heretofore refused to do, and that is to pay out the public money in discharge of the public debt.

But, Mr. President, this will only accomplish a partial purpose. No one can tell how many bonds will be bought under the authority of the bill if the Secretary shall choose to act under it, as he has heretofore refused to act under similar authority now on the statute-book. No one can tell how much it will add to the volume of money outstanding, because nobody can tell how many of the bonds will come from national banks now holding them as a basis for circulation. All the money that there is in the Treasury of the United States, I suppose, is in the neighborhood of $100,000,000, according to the Treasury view of it, which can be paid out in discharge of the public debt under the terms of the bill which is now pending. I think there is $160,000,000 there available for some such purpose beyond any reserve required by law or by the practice of the Department to be kept. But suppose there be only $100,000,000, and suppose the Secretary of the Treasury buys $100,000,000 of outstanding bonds of the United States with that money, it must be $100,000,000 of course minus the premium, or plus, as you may use the term. That is to say, if he buys 4 per cent. bonds at the market price to-day he would be able to take up the principal of only about $80,000,000 of bonds. If those bonds should be offered for sale by banks holding them already as a basis for their currency, there would only be 10 per cent. of that amount added to the volume of the currency outstanding, notwithstanding the disbursement by the Treasury of $100,000,000. The gain therefore would be fractional and imperceptible, and the purpose which I suppose the Finance Committee has in view would be lost. If one-half the bonds should be tendered by national banks, and one-half by outside parties, of course the gain to the outstanding circulation would be greater. While the bill itself is proper, at the same time as it stands, and by itself, it is trifling with a very great question.

For years the national-bank circulation and so the volume of money outstanding in the United States has been declining. The population has increased, business has increased, but the currency with which that business is to be transacted has diminished each year during the last five years; and yet the Finance Committee of the Senate and the similar committee in the other House, and all those whose special privilege it has heretofore seemed to be to take care of these questions have proposed nothing whatever—not one single measure for the purpose of keeping up the volume of the currency and nothing to increase it in accordance with the increasing needs of business. Here is a proposition which is put forth as something which is to relieve the existing stringency, which is to diminish the surplus in the Treasury, which is to add to the volume of the circulating medium, of which it can not be said with knowledge that it will perform one single thing of that which it is assumed on its face it will do.

Mr. President, I should like to know from the chairman of that committee what the committee propose as a substitute for the national-bank circulation, which has shrunk during the last year over $30,000,000, and which, in all human probability, during the coming year will shrink more than $30,000,000 more, and which under the operation of this bill will probably shrink at least $50,000,000. Does that committee have in view any remedy for this extraordinary state of affairs?

Mr. MORRILL. I will say to the Senator that we have several bills in the committee which have been considered, but not yet fully completed, and we propose to report upon them at the earliest practicable day.

Mr. PLUMB. But this contraction of the currency, by means of the retirement of national-bank circulation, has been going on for more than ten years, and all the committee has to say now is that it only considered some bill, but it is not yet completed. If the committee will not complete some measure, the Senate must. If the Senate will not and if the other House will not, then the country is going upon the breakers of financial disturbance. As a Senator says in my hearing, it is there now. I think it is there now. We are dealing with a question which has more to do with the welfare of the people of the United States, which is of more concern to them than any other thing that is pending in either House of Congress, or which can be pending—the volume of the circulating medium of the country, the value of its property, the difference between debt and bankruptcy, on the one hand, and freedom from debt and prosperity on the other.

It is estimated that there are in circulation, including that which is locked up in the Treasury and held in banks as a reserve fund, about sixteen hundred million dollars of all kinds of currency of the United States, gold and silver, the overplus of gold and silver certificates, greenback notes, and national-bank notes, all told, and there are more than $60,000,000,000 of property which must finally be measured by this volume of currency. It has been contracted during the last year more than 5 per cent. in addition to all that has occurred by reason of abrasion and loss. No man can tell the volume of greenbacks outstanding. Nominally it is $346,000,000 and a fraction, but that volume has been subject to all the accidents which have occurred during the past twenty-five years, whereby money has been consumed, worn out, lost, and it is doubtful if the amount is really over $300,000,000 to-day.

But saying nothing about that, the retirement of the national banking circulation during the past twelve months has been 5 per cent. of the total amount of currency outstanding. There has been during that period a phenomenal depreciation of the prices of property. There has been the greatest depreciation of the price of agricultural products the country has ever known. And yet the Finance Committee has simply incubated something that may ripen after a time, and it may not. I do not speak of this for the purpose of reflecting on the committee, but for the purpose of expressing in a feeble way my view of the gravity of the situation which Congress has yet done nothing to meet.

The contraction of the currency during the last three years has been 5 per cent. of its volume. This means the depreciation of the property of the country $3,000,000,000. Debts have not only increased but the means to pay them have diminished in proportion as the currency has been contracted. Events based upon non-legislation have proved of advantage to lenders but disastrous to borrowers.

The proposition which I have made here is simply that we shall do with reference to the volume of the national banking circulation substantially what we did in regard to the volume of the greenback circulation. We arrested the policy of the Treasury whereby the greenback circulation was being diminished, and we said that after the date of the law which we passed in 1878, known as the Fort bill—that from and after that date the volume of currency should remain exactly as it was then; that whatever dollars of greenbacks the Treasury took in it should pay out, and not destroy as it had been doing.

In 1884 I moved this amendment in substance to a then pending measure reported by the Finance Committee, providing that whatever the volume of paper money then was it should be maintained at, by giving to the Secretary of the Treasury authority to issue greenbacks to take up, to fill the void then impending, and which we have since seen would have met the subsidence of the national banking circulation. That amendment received 11 votes in this body. Since that time the national banking circulation has gone off more than $60,000,000. If such an amendment as this had been adopted at that time the paper money in circulation in the United States would now be $60,000,000 greater than it is, and a large portion of the shrinkage in the value of the property of this country, of the paralysis which rests upon its business, would have been obviated, as I believe.

It is late to propose it again, perhaps, but better late than never, and I propose it in view of the fact, as stated by the chairman of the committee, that nothing of this kind is practically pending in that committee, and that committee has no design whatever to propose any measure which shall arrest this contraction of the currency and let the country go on and on with increasing needs and yet with a diminished quantity of money for the transaction of business until the worst shall come to the worst. And that hour may not be long delayed, Mr. President. It may arrive at any time. We have deluded ourselves with the belief that because we have had an abundance of currency in the banks of New York there was an abundance of money everywhere, which is an entirely misleading state of fact. The abundance of money in New York testifies to nothing except the subsidence of stock speculation. There is a great shrinkage in the West. In all the producing regions of the country there is great lack of the money necessary to carry on business, and we have a right to look to the Finance Committee of this body to propose some measure which shall relieve this condition of things.

The measure which I propose does not add to the volume of the currency, as it ought to do. It is a conservative measure. It simply provides that whatever that volume is to-day as it relates to the paper money it shall be maintained; it shall not be diminished. It is applying the same thing in practice, although different in form, that we applied in 1878 to the greenback notes. We ought at least to do that much.

If those who guide the finances of the country, if those who by reason of their familiarity with them and their prominent relation to the subject heretofore, are prepared to offer nothing now of an affirmative character calculated to give back to the country the currency of which it has been deprived, they ought at least to be willing to say that where this contraction is now it shall stop; that is, it shall go no further.

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] the other day spoke with great feeling about the mortgaging of farms in this country. So far as that complaint relates to a general condition, to the lack and to the shortcomings of legislation, it is more nearly related to the diminished volume of currency than to any other one thing.

For my part I do not care to rest any longer under the responsibility of this condition. I at least shall "in season and out of season" and on every proper bill move amendments of this character until Congress does something better, I hope, than I propose, but at least something which if it does not provide for the expanding commerce and the increasing population of the country will at least accommodate itself to the condition of things now existing, so that the currency shall not be further diminished until some proposition which shall meet with the consent of Congress and of the President shall be adopted to dispose of this question for all time to come.

Mr. MORRILL. If the Senator from Kansas had noticed what was on the Calendar, he would have discovered that already there are two bills which have been reported, one by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], and another, Order of Business 736, by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

But without discussing at this time the merits of the proposition introduced by the Senator from Kansas—and I do not know whether I have any hostility to it or not—it does seem to me that it is more important that we shall act upon the measure that comes to us from the House of Representatives than to encumber it and embarrass it with various amendments. I therefore move to lay the amendment of the Senator from Kansas on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. FARWELL. I should like to hear the amendment read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again read if there be no objection.

The Secretary read the amendment submitted by Mr. PLUMB.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. BECK and Mr. FARWELL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. BECK. I know it is not. I only desire to ask the Senator from Vermont to withdraw the motion a moment until I can make some explanation, and then I will renew it for him.

Mr. FARWELL. I wish to say a word.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not desire to interfere with debate. My only anxiety is to have the bill acted on; but if the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Illinois desire to be heard, I withdraw the motion to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. FARWELL. I desire to make an observation or two.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognized the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK].

Mr. BECK. I had offered what I thought was an important amendment bearing upon the questions involved in this bill, quite as important, in my opinion, as the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas, and perhaps there are others quite as important as either that other Senators may present; but this is a bill that has been passed by the other House, the single purpose of which is to remove a doubt expressed in the President's message in regard to the right to buy bonds under existing law. I have no doubt about the right to purchase them under the present law myself. The second section of the act of 1881 reads thus:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury may at any time apply the surplus money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, or so much thereof as he may consider proper, to the purchase or redemption of United States bonds: Provided, That the bonds so purchased or redeemed shall constitute no part of the sinking fund, but shall be canceled.

I have always thought, and believe now, that under that provision the Secretary of the Treasury has all the authority that the pending bill gives him; yet I desire to remove all possible doubt. The President says in his message:

Heretofore the redemption of 3 per cent. bonds, which were payable at the option of the Government, has afforded a means for the disbursement of the excess of our revenues; but these bonds have all been retired, and there are no bonds outstanding the payment of which we have the right to insist upon. The contribution to the sinking fund, which furnishes the occasion for expenditure in the purchase of bonds, has been already made for the current year, so that there is no outlet in that direction.

In the present state of legislation the only pretense of any existing executive power to restore, at this time, any part of our surplus revenues to the people by its expenditure, consists in the supposition that the Secretary of the Treasury may enter the market and purchase the bonds of the Government not yet due, at a rate of premium to be agreed upon. The only provision of law from which such a power could be derived is found in an appropriation bill passed a number of years ago—and it is subject to the suspicion that it was intended as temporary and limited in its application, instead of conferring a continuing discretion and authority. No condition ought to exist which would justify the grant of power to a single official, upon his judgment of its necessity, to withhold from or release to the business of the people, in an unusual manner, money held in the Treasury, and thus affect, at his will, the financial situation of the country; and if it is deemed wise to lodge in the Secretary of the Treasury the authority in the present juncture to purchase bonds, it should be plainly vested, and provided as far as possible with such checks and limitations as will define this official's right and discretion, and at the same time relieve him from undue responsibility.

In considering the question of purchasing bonds as a means of restoring to circulation the surplus money accumulating in the Treasury it should be borne in mind that premiums must of course be paid upon such purchase, that there may be a large part of these bonds held as investments which can not be purchased at any price, and that combinations among holders who are willing to sell may unreasonably enhance the cost of such bonds to the Government.

I do not entertain the doubt which the Secretary or the President thinks may exist, but I know some good lawyers who entertain the same view as the President. I believe that this bill ought to be passed promptly unencumbered by any amendments. My amendment was offered in committee, and has been printed. It proposes to repeal the laws requiring the further maintenance of a sinking fund, which I regard as no longer useful. In fact the sinking-fund provision now is simply adding by law $50,000,000 a year to the taxation we are obliged to provide for when there is no possibility of taking up any bonds with the money thus collected without paying any premium the bondholders may see fit to ask.

We have surplus enough on hand now to pay all the bonds that mature in 1891. There are only $230,000,000 of them left. We can not pay any of the fours till 1907; yet we are required by law, under the construction given to the sinking-fund provision, to provide $50,000,000 annually more than we need for the legitimate expenditures of the Government. That simply allows the bondholders to exact any premium on their bonds that they see fit to demand. I can show by official documents we have already bought and paid for and retired and sunk in the sinking fund, or in some other way, so that our debt is reduced over $700,000,000 more than anybody pretends that the sinking-fund law requires, or under any possible construction of it ever required us to pay or sink.

But I told the chairman that I would withdraw that amendment, just as I hope the Senator from Kansas will withdraw his amendment, regardless of their merits. I hope other gentlemen who may desire to present others will withhold them, so as to allow this bill as it came from the House of Representatives to pass and become a law. We can each present our propositions when other questions come up. Let this much be done and settled, and then the Secretary, as well as the President, will have the doubt removed as to the right to buy bonds.

I do not want a proposition about which we all agree tied up between the two Houses because of a long conflict of opinion about other matters, which may so complicate things that the bill will not pass at all. While we are wrangling some emergency may arise and the Secretary will be tied up by his construction of the law and thus be unable to buy bonds at all.

However, I hope he will regard the action of the House and of the Finance Committee of the Senate, coupled with the general expression here, as authorizing him to accept our construction of the act of 1881, even if he has some doubt about it.

There are $230,000,000 of 4½ per cent. bonds that he can purchase perhaps at 6 or 8 per cent. premium. The interest at 4½ per cent. for two years would more than pay the premium. The money is lying idle now; the sooner they are bought and the interest stopped the better. The 1891 bonds are so near maturity that they certainly can be bought at a premium less than the interest saved by the purchase, as the idle money is bringing in nothing. Besides, I desire to say to the Senator from Kansas that there is a bill reported by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] which is in the direction which his amendment looks.

I think I should be very much inclined on that bill to favor what he suggests. I agree that this is one of the most important questions we have to deal with, and I further agree that the contraction of the national-bank circulation is alarming; but, as I said, there is a bill now on the Senate Calendar reported by the Senator from Ohio from the Finance Committee, the purpose of which is to relieve the contraction by purchasing bonds with the legal-tender notes that are now held as security for the national-bank circulation, which is left unprotected by bonds, as required by law. There was about $102,000,000 six weeks ago, I think about $98,000,000 now, of greenbacks held for that purpose. The Finance Committee thought that 80 per cent. of that fund can be used in the purchase of bonds, and that the interest saved will indemnify us against any possible reduction in premium if we have to sell them again.

A majority of the committee think we can afford to pay even more than they are worth, and the saving in interest between now and the time the national-bank notes come in would be a good investment for the country, and releases perhaps seventy-five or eighty millions of greenbacks now locked up for the payment of the unprotected notes issued by the banks, as the bonds on which the original issue was made have been paid. Again, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] has reported a proposition which has been up time and again to reduce the interest on the outstanding 4 per cent. bonds to 2½ per cent. That will bring up questions which I desire to discuss as well as the question which the Senator from Kansas desires to have acted on now. By passing this bill in its present form we can put ourselves in shape to guard against any possible contingency that might arise from the failure of the passage of this bill, and we shall then be prepared to discuss other questions when we are not embarrassed as we are now, in regard to a bill which we all think is right as it now stands.

While I have been a friend of the greenback always, perhaps more than most people, my own idea is that the basis of our circulation ought to be gold and silver coin, supplemented by existing legal-tender notes. I believe coin certificates, which I have contended for time and again, based on either gold or silver coin deposited in the Treasury and redeemable at the option of the Government in either coin, so as to equalize both, would be the best basis.

As the national-bank circulation goes down I would issue coin certificates on all surplus not held as a special fund. There are now $187,000,000 of silver certificates outstanding and everybody is satisfied with them; they constitute the great bulk of our currency as the national-bank circulation is being contracted and is growing rapidly less every day as bonds are called in and paid off or purchased. Of course, as the premium rises, the banks will sell their bonds in order to secure the premium; therefore a system must be devised promptly to guard against that obvious contraction. The Comptroller of the Currency, a thoroughly well-informed gentleman, writes to the Rand-McNally Bankers' Monthly, a bankers' magazine, for the present month, an able article, in which he uses this language, speaking of the national-bank circulation:

But it is important to keep in mind,

Says the Comptroller of the Currency—

But it is important to keep in mind that our national-bank notes are, strictly speaking, not bank circulation; they are Government currency, maintained in a cumbersome manner at unnecessary expense, and no longer of any advantage to the Government, the people, or the banks. Moreover, the bonds on which they are based are approaching maturity, and are growing scarcer and dearer, so that the extinguishment of this currency is now obviously only a question of time, and of not a very long time.

That is a frank confession of the folly of longer relying on the national banks to furnish the people with needed circulation. It is agreed, I believe, by all the lawyers of the country that the only essential function the national banks possess is that which enables them to keep national-bank notes in circulation. Every other function belongs to every State bank as well as to them. They can operate just as well under State charters in every regard except in circulating notes of their own. Their circulation has decreased $160,000,000 in the last four years, and is decreasing every day; every act done which appreciates their bonds induces them to sell them and contract their currency until, as the Comptroller says, the extinguishment of this currency is now obviously only a question of a very short time.

The right to issue circulating notes is really the only function for which Congress chartered or could charter them, and as that fails some substitute must be found for the system. But notwithstanding, I regard the amendment I proposed as important, and I think I could show that it ought to be adopted. Perhaps the amendment of the Senator from Kansas ought, and so in regard to any other amendment that may be offered to this bill, but they would bring about a long discussion in this body; and the amended bill would have to go to the House of Representatives and there produce discussion and delay for a long time. Therefore I think good policy requires that we should pass this bill as it came from the Senate Committee on Finance regardless of how good the amendments may be.

I desire before I cast my vote to say that it is not because of any opposition to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, and not because I do not believe he has offered a measure well worthy of consideration, and not because I do not believe in any other amendment that may be offered that I will vote to lay them on the table, but I believe this much ought to be done now in order to remove the doubt the President and the Secretary of the Treasury have as to their power to buy bonds. Let us pass this bill, and then the other questions can come up, as necessarily they will, on bills now on the Calendar.

I have introduced a bill which I hope to have discussed where it can be considered, in regard to coin certificates; and I think the question arises on that bill as well as on the bill of the Senator from Ohio or the bill of the Senator from Rhode Island. On those bills every one of these questions can be as well considered, and we shall be much safer after the President and the Secretary of the Treasury are relieved of their doubt about purchasing bonds under the authority which this bill will make clear. It was to enable me to make this explanation that I desired the Senator from Vermont to withdraw his motion to lay the amendment on the table till I could make a statement as to why I shall vote to lay all amendments on the table, my own and all others. I would rather not lay them on the table, but I feel constrained to do so. If they are not laid on the table I may vote for them, because all the questions will be opened up by the Senate.

Mr. REAGAN. Will the Senator from Vermont allow me a word?

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL] desired to make a statement and I withdraw the motion far enough to allow him to be heard.

Mr. FARWELL. Mr. President, I hope that no amendment will be made to this bill. The only one that I could suggest, if I made any, would be to require that its provisions should be mandatory and not discretionary.

The amount of money in the hands of the Treasurer to-day under control could well be applied in my judgment to the redemption of bonds. The rate of interest on money is increased because of the large amount held in the Treasury under the existing law and thus reserved from the use of the people. In my judgment very wisely the surplus has been partially applied to the redemption of Government bonds, thus adding to the circulating medium. After this had been done by the Secretary of the Treasury, I think very unwisely a question arose as to the authority under which he had done it. This bill is to solve that doubt and make the power unquestionable.

The next thing the Secretary did was also in my judgment very wise, namely, to deposit in the national banks $50,000,000 so that that money could be loaned to the business people of the country.

I say that this bill ought not to be amended except to make it mandatory. The fact that he has so many millions of dollars in the Treasury is a threat to the business of the country which in my judgment is very dangerous and very alarming. I care not what political party he belongs to, no Secretary of the Treasury should ever hold such power in his hands.

There seems to be a feeling of hostility to national banks. It is only necessary to look at our condition for a moment to realize of what benefit they have been to the country. Before the war the currency was furnished largely by State banks. When the war came, the Secretary of the Treasury needing money, asked authority to issue greenbacks. Congress gave it, established the national bank system and legislated the State banks out of existence for the purpose of getting a market for the bonds. Those bonds were taken by the national banks and the circulating medium was based thereon. That system has worked to the satisfaction of everybody in the United States. Sometimes it is called a money monopoly. The speech of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] a few days ago showed the Senate that the stock of those banks is mainly held by small investors, more than half held by people having less than $5,000 interest. So the hue and cry about the money power is simply a mistake. The banking capital is the accumulation of small sums of money in the form of the stock of the national banks.

The enhanced premium on the bonds which has accrued for some time past has made it necessary that bank directors and managers should, in taking care of small holders, dispose of their bonds. As a matter of course, the profits decrease as the period of payment of the bonds approaches. That condition of things having taken effect, the bank directors have retired within the last six years over $200,000,000 of bonds, and since 1882 over $200,000,000 circulation of banks has been withdrawn, so that to-day there are outstanding only about $160,000,000 of national-bank notes secured by a deposit of bonds. That process will go on until they are all retired.

I was foolish enough, perhaps, to introduce a bill providing a remedy for this state of things. I had the bill referred to the Finance Committee, and have since modified it, so that I think it will apply not only for to-day but next year and for all time to come. I provide in the modified bill that any existing national bank, or any new national bank may go to the Treasury and buy bonds, paying currency for them, and that those bonds may be the basis for circulation. I then direct, in another section of the bill, that the Secretary of the Treasury at the end of each month shall invest every dollar of the surplus in the purchase of bonds. If no reduction in the revenue takes place, within a very few years the national debt will be paid off. Having that in view, I provide in this bill that the national banks shall furnish other securities, these securities to be taken at 75 cents on the dollar, and they are not to be taken until they are passed upon by a committee of three, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Comptroller of the Currency, and the Treasurer of the United States. That I look upon as as much security as we can possibly have. The national banks will issue a circulation to the like amount, with the security filed, and thus circulation will be provided for.

There can be no surplus in the Treasury as long as there is a debt. There can be no reduction in the volume of the national-bank currency if my bill is passed, because as the Government bonds are paid other securities will be substituted.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask the Senator from Vermont to allow me a word.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not renew the motion if the Senator from Texas desires to be heard.

Mr. REAGAN. As I shall vote against the motion to lay the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas on the table, I desire to say that in doing so I do not concur in that part of the amendment which proposes to make the notes of the Government a legal tender for private debts. I would have the notes to be issued exactly on the basis of the national-bank notes, receivable for all taxes and public dues and redeemable in coin at the will of the holder. I desire to make that explanation because I do not wish to do anything that would favor the idea of legal-tender paper money. I shall vote against laying the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas on the table, because I think there is nothing that it is more important to preserve and perpetuate the prosperity of the country than to maintain the volume of the currency. It was stated as well by the Senator from Kentucky as by the Senator from Kansas that the redemption of the bonds will necessarily reduce the volume of currency. We have seen already the effect of a somewhat reduced currency. If we are to carry that reduction beyond what has already occurred we are to cripple the industries of the country, to reduce the value of all property and the value of labor, and I hold that it is more important to protect the country against this misfortune than to be delayed a few days or a few weeks in the passage of this bill.

The amendment, it seems to me, is mainly right; it is appropriate upon this bill; it preserves the best interests of the country by preventing a contraction of the volume of currency, and I shall be glad if the motion to lay on the table shall be voted down and the amendment adopted.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I shall be constrained, without regard to the merits of the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, to vote to lay it on the table, or any other amendment, however meritorious it may be, because I think this bill ought to pass, and pass promptly, and pass as it came from the House of Representatives.

BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the special order, being the bill (S. 2083) to provide for the establishment of a Bureau of Animal Industry, and to facilitate the exportation of live-stock and their products, to extirpate contagious pleuro-pneumonia and other diseases among domestic animals, and for other purposes.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask that the bill be temporarily laid aside until we conclude the bill we have had under consideration.

Mr. PLATT. If we can have a vote on the bill of the Senator from Vermont, I shall not object; but if there is to be further discussion I shall object.

Mr. PLUMB. I think that bill had better go over until to-morrow.

Mr. REAGAN. I hope the Senator from Michigan will allow his bill to go over for a day or two in order to allow further examination of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks unanimous consent that the special order be informally laid aside. Is there objection?

Mr. PALMER. I object.

Mr. MORRILL. Then I move to lay aside the special order for the purpose of proceeding with the bill which has been under consideration this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That motion can not be entertained by the Chair. A motion to postpone to a day certain or to postpone indefinitely can be made.

Mr. HARRIS. I move a postponement until to-morrow. That will reach the object of the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the consideration of the special order be postponed until to-morrow at 2 o'clock.

Mr. PALMER. Out of deference to the Senator from Texas I shall make no objection to that postponement.

Mr. PLATT. I object to it.

Mr. PALMER. The Senator from Connecticut objects. Under these circumstances I shall feel compelled to object. I should like to defer to the Senator from Texas on this question; but as there are a great number of parties in the city waiting for action on this bill, and as the country is urgent for it, and as it is essential that some action should be taken soon for the great cattle industry of the country, I shall object to its postponement until to-morrow.

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to accommodate both the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Connecticut, if I can. Will the Senator from Michigan consent to allow his special order to go over for the next two days, this day and to-morrow, the Senator from Connecticut waiving his motion until that time, and the Senator from Vermont, on the conclusion of the bill he has in charge, allow us to proceed with the Calendar under Rule VIII, as we have been doing for the past two or three days, by unanimous consent? I think we shall accomplish a good deal more in that way than in any other. I should certainly be very glad if the Senators would consent to the suggestion I make to proceed with the call of the Calendar to-day and to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] to postpone the consideration of the special order until to-morrow at 2 o'clock. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the special order and the bill for the admission of South Dakota be postponed for two days, and that the consideration of the bill moved by the Senator from Vermont be continued to its conclusion, and that thereafter the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Calendar under Rule VIII. Is there objection?

Mr. PLATT. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs, then, on the motion to postpone until to-morrow.

Mr. REAGAN. Only a word on that motion. The Senator from Michigan says that the country is urgent for this bill and that persons are here anxious for its passage. I am not aware of the circumstances which create the special emergency for its passage. We have a law in force to control and regulate animal industry and to protect cattle against the evil effects of pleuro-pneumonia. I do not know of the great changes between the law proposed and the one in existence which would indicate that there is a great emergency and an urgent necessity for action upon that bill. It proposes a change from the head of the Department of Agriculture and those associated with him to an independent commission. There are other changes, but that is the main point in the bill. I hope, if the Senator will allow the matter to go over, to be able to show that there is no necessity for that change.

Mr. PALMER. I think the Senator from Texas is mistaken when he says that there is no immediate necessity for the enlargement of the powers of the Department of Agriculture. This morning I saw a telegram in the papers that a new and very fatal malignant disease among cattle had broken out in Gainesville, Tex. There is a new outbreak of pleuro-pneumonia announced this morning in Cincinnati, and we are continually getting memorials urging us to do something to enlarge the powers of the Department of Agriculture and to make it more efficient in this direction. I did not hear the whole of the remarks of the Senator from Texas, but the bill which will be brought up for consideration, Senate bill 2083, is very distinct from bill 941, and it will be amended so that all those who object to detracting from the powers of the Department of Agriculture will be perfectly satisfied that it has been the intention of the committee to magnify that Department rather than to detract from it. What we contend for now, and what we can show by the concession of the Commissioner of Agriculture, as well as memorials and testimonials from other parts of the country, is that the Department of Agriculture has not sufficient power, and we want a radical bill that will enable the commissioners proposed in this bill No. 2083 to take hold of this disease and stamp it out wherever they can find it in the country.

But the bill is much more comprehensive even than its title would indicate, "for the suppression of pleuro-pneumonia." It takes up the swine plague, all communicable diseases, glanders in horses, and other diseases which are now running riot through the Northwest; and in my opinion it is one of the most important bills that has ever come up before Congress for legislation. It represents directly 35,000,000 people. It represents $2,400,000,000 in property. It indirectly represents 30,000,000 people more. It has greatly to do with our foreign trade and our interstate trade, and, in my opinion, there is no more important bill coming up this session for the consideration of Congress. For myself, I should be willing to have it postponed for a day; but if the Senator from Connecticut, who is very urgent with his Territorial bill, insists that I shall keep my place and retain my right, I can not concede the request of the Senator from Texas, which, under other circumstances, I should be very glad to do.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will not consent to the postponement of this bill, I desire to address a word to the Senate, and that word is that the motion to make this the order of the day was made when both my colleague and myself were absent from the Senate and we had no opportunity to be heard, and no chance was given for the investigation of a question which the Senator says is most important. So I shall appeal to the Senate not to require us to come to a vote on this subject before we have time to meet the arguments in favor of the bill.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I desire to be allowed to make a remark or two in regard to the importance of this bill.

It is admitted to be a very important one, and if the bill passes it ought to be passed promptly. In all my experience I have not known a bill which so plainly and so clearly contravened the interest of the people and which so obviously usurped powers which on all sides have been heretofore conceded to belong to the States and which have been decided in numerous cases by the Supreme Court of the United States to belong to the States.

Mr. PLUMB. I think the controversy about that bill will depend more upon the question of constitutionality than anything else; but outside of certain provisions which under the beliefs held by Senators on that side and some on this side are unconstitutional, there are provisions in it which ought to be enacted into law. The great interest which it represents, and the gravity of the situation ought to prevent any opposition to the bill coming up and being considered, merely because of objection to some particular provision in it. There are provisions in it which on reflection all will concede not only to be important, but to be necessary to be adopted, which are just as important to the State of Texas as to any other State in the Union. I know the Senators from that State will be glad to adopt some new features of legislation which will secure protection to one of the great industries of that State from the dangers that threaten it, if they can do so without violating the Constitution. We disagree about some provisions of the bill, but there are portions of it which no one will object to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee, to postpone the consideration of the special order until to-morrow at 2 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The further consideration of the special order is postponed until to-morrow at 2 o'clock.

LANDS IN DENVER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives non-concurring in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3300) to amend an act to enable the city of Denver to purchase certain land for cemetery purposes.

On motion of Mr. TELLER it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist on its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. PLUMB, Mr. TELLER, and Mr. COCKRELL.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 2494) to provide for the payment of the funeral expenses of the late Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court; and

A bill (H. R. 6437) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 23d instant signed the act (S. 1027) to fix the charge for passports at $1.

PURCHASE OF BONDS.

Mr. HARRIS. I now move that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the bill in charge of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection——

Mr. PLATT. I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry. If that bill is taken up now and not finished to-day, it will have precedence to-morrow of the special order, will it not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will if left as the unfinished business.

Mr. PLATT. I do not propose without the consent of the Senate to have another important matter interjected between that bill and the Dakota matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee, that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5034) to provide for the purchase of United States bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill, the pending question being on the amendment submitted by Mr. PLUMB.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I am inclined to think it would be wise to confine the debate to the pending bill and not to go into the other propositions which have been made, and if that be the desire of the Senate I shall not seek to say anything on those propositions. If, however, it is the desire of the Senate to proceed with the consideration of the financial questions growing out of the contraction of the currency, I shall desire to submit some very important figures bearing on the subject.

As to the bill that is before us, it is now the law, conceded to be so by every member of the Committee on Finance familiar with the history of the law. The language of the law of 1881 is stronger and clearer and better than the language of the bill before us. Not a single act can be done under this bill that can not be done under the existing law, and all that this bill intends is to remove, not a doubt expressed by the Secretary of the Treasury, because he never had any and never expressed any, but a doubt expressed by the President, who shows by the context of his remarks that his attention was not called to the legal question at all, and he probably did not know anything about it. Still, to remove a doubt and get on the way of putting out the money of the Treasury, I would vote for the bill, and another one like it the next day, and so on day by day until we shall have a bill compelling the exercise of the power that has necessarily existed in the Secretary of the Treasury since 1862, and a power without which that Department could not conduct the great operations intrusted to it.

I do not wish to go further into this matter, or debate the proposition of the Senator from Kansas, if he will yield to the suggestion which has been made. I ask the Senator from Kansas whether he insists on a vote upon his amendment?

Mr. PLUMB. Not only on this bill, but, if it is voted down here, on every bill to which it is appropriate and germane.

Mr. SHERMAN. If that be so, we may as well dismiss the question that is proposed of taking up the bill to admit Dakota.

Now, in order that we may exactly understand each other, I will take the liberty of renewing in a moment the motion made by the Senator from Vermont, because if the Senate shows by its affirmative vote that it is not willing to go into the general financial question to-day, into all the questions that grow out of the contraction of the currency, then by expressing its opinion by laying the amendment on the table without regard to its merits it will express its view as to whether it will go on and discuss those questions. If not, and that proposition is voted down, then I have an amendment to authorize the investment of what is called the bank fund. I also have a proposition to authorize the issue of more circulating notes to national banks. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] has a proposition to make the coinage of silver bullion free, I suppose, and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] has a perpetual and perennial proposition to attach to this or any other bill.

Before I go into a discussion of the financial subject I renew the motion of the Senator from Vermont, and I shall vote in favor of laying this amendment on the table without respect to its merits and without respect to any opinions on the general question, but simply pledging gentlemen that whenever the question can come up in the ordinary way on a bill involving these various points I will join in perfecting any measure that may be thought proper to relieve us from the really distressed condition of our finances at this moment.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Ohio to allow me to put a question. Is it not certain, in his opinion, that the exercise of this authority to purchase bonds will have some effect on the price of bonds in the markets?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think not. The money that is paid out for these bonds will enter into circulation as a matter of course.

Mr. CALL. How would it affect the national banks?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not see how it could affect the national-bank circulation. You may as well make up your minds that if the national banks can not issue circulation to something approaching the value of their bonds, they will not feel justified by the law of banking, that is the law of profit, to continue the issue of circulating notes. The 4 per cent. bonds are now worth 125 per cent. If deposited in the Treasury by the banks the latter can only get 90 per cent. of circulation on the par value of those bonds.

Mr. CALL. What I want to get at is, whether or not this authority to purchase bonds might not have the effect to produce a larger price for them.

Mr. SHERMAN. That leads me to make a remark which I would have elaborated and made more at length if there was discussion. If the Secretary of the Treasury thinks this bill compels him to go right into the market and bull the market, to use a cant phrase, and put up the price of bonds, then as a matter of course it might induce the banks, in order to get a high and unnatural price for their bonds, to sell their bonds to him, and in that way withdraw more and more bank currency. But if he does as all his predecessors have done, lets no man know when he will buy bonds, giving his order to the assistant treasurer in New York to buy a million of bonds, say to-night, watching the market, he can not only prevent the increase of the market value of the bonds, but probably so act as to produce a decrease in the price of the bonds. It depends precisely on the manner in which he exercises this authority.

I hope the Senator from Kansas now will let us have a vote on the question. I do not care how the Senate vote on it. If they vote to lay this amendment on the table on the ground that they wish to pass this bill without amendment, then I shall say no more on the subject.

Mr. PLUMB. Do the Finance Committee propose an amendment to this bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. No; the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] proposed an amendment, but does not urge it.

Mr. PLUMB. Do the committee recommend the bill as it came from the other House?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRYE in the chair). Did the Senator from Ohio renew the motion of the Senator from Vermont to lay the amendment on the table?

Mr. SHERMAN. I did.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio moves that the amendment lie on the table.

Mr. PLUMB. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask that the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be again read.

The Secretary read the amendment of Mr. PLUMB.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HISCOCK (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], but as I understand he would vote as I should, I shall record my vote on this question.

Mr. PLATT (when Mr. HAWLEY'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. HAWLEY] is absent from the Senate Chamber and is paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL]. If he were present, my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE]. Not knowing how he would vote if present, I decline to vote.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. KENNA. My colleague [Mr. FAULKNER] is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN].

Mr. COCKRELL. I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]. If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. CALL. I understand my colleague [Mr. PASCO] is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. PADDOCK. I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS].

Mr. SPOONER. My colleague [Mr. SAWYER] is necessarily absent from the city. He is paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. EVARTS (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted "yea" without noticing that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] was not in his seat. I am paired with him, and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. BROWN (after having voted in the negative). I withdraw my vote. I did not think at the moment that I was paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER].

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 22; as follows:

So the amendment was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PLUMB. I now move the same amendment, leaving out the words "public and private," leaving the Treasury notes to be issued receivable for Government dues and legal tender only between national banks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas desire to have the amendment read?

Mr. PLUMB. I do not think there is any necessity to read it. I do not ask to have it read. At all events, I shall not ask to detain the Senate for that purpose.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to lay the amendment——

Mr. PLUMB. I beg the Senator's pardon; I have the floor.

I was about to observe that this ought to be a measure of very great importance and of very great urgency in order to induce the Senate at this stage of its proceedings to resort to the only way in which debate can be cut off in this body; and yet this bill, as reported from the Finance Committee, is almost an exact copy of one already on the statute-books. There is not a member of the Finance Committee and there is not a member of the Senate who will say that one single line of this legislation is necessary or that if passed it will enable the President to do other or more than he can do under existing law. And yet it is in behalf of a bill simply designed to get the President out of a hole, and which adds nothing to what has already been enacted, that the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Ohio have sought to stifle debate in the Senate.

Mr. President, if there be urgency, it is for the passage of such a proposition as is embodied in my amendment. The urgency is, or should be, to prevent the further contraction of the currency; to secure to the people of the United States an ample supply of money with which to transact their business.

On the 26th day of December, 1873, the volume of national-bank notes outstanding was $341,320,256. It is now less than $170,000,000. In other words, about $180,000,000 of national-bank circulation has been retired, has absolutely disappeared, during the past fourteen years.

Mr. FARWELL. I beg the Senator's pardon. There are about $270,000,000 now out, but the Government of the United States has assumed to pay $100,000,000 of those notes with the money which has been deposited in the Treasury for that purpose. Therefore the amount outstanding is $100,000,000 more than the Senator has stated it, but it is not secured by any Government bonds.

Mr. PLUMB. The report of the Comptroller of the Currency states the amount outstanding on the 1st day of August, 1887, as $166,000,000. That was last August, and the amount was $166,625,658.

Mr. FARWELL. I beg pardon for one moment. That statement is not accurate. The Senator will see a further item in the report. He will find $105,000,000, or about that amount, of United States notes on deposit with the Treasurer for the purpose of redeeming a like amount of national-bank notes unredeemed.

Mr. PLUMB. That only makes it so much worse. Then there has been a contraction not only of this $180,000,000 national-bank circulation withdrawn, but there is $105,000,000 of the three hundred and forty-six nominal million dollars of national-bank notes retained in the Treasury.

Mr. FARWELL. No.

Mr. PLUMB. Greenbacks?

Mr. FARWELL. Those have been paid out.

Mr. PLUMB. They have been paid out, but they are not out now; they are not performing any office of currency at the present moment.

Mr. FARWELL. I beg pardon. On the contrary, the Government has assumed to pay the one hundred and odd million dollars because it has received the money for that purpose. This $105,000,000 has been invested in the purchase of bonds.

Mr. PLUMB. I am talking about what is out in the hands of the people. What is in the Treasury is not in the hands of the people. What is locked up is not performing any purpose of circulation.

Mr. FARWELL. That is what I desire to say to the Senator. The $100,000,000 have not been paid out now.

Mr. PLUMB. But the Comptroller of the Currency says that on the 1st day of August last there were only $166,000,000 of national-bank notes altogether outstanding.

Mr. FARWELL. No, he does not.

Mr. PLUMB. I beg your pardon. If you can read better than I can, read this statement——

Mr. FARWELL. That is not the fact.

Mr. PLUMB. I am sorry. The table on page 93 of the Comptroller's report gives the circulation on the 1st day of January, 1886, at $213,239,530, and on the 5th day of October, 1887, at $167,283,343.

Mr. FARWELL. Secured by Government bonds.

Mr. PLUMB. Secured by Government bonds.

Mr. FARWELL. That is right.

Mr. PLUMB. Is there any circulation outstanding of national-bank notes not secured by Government bonds?

Mr. FARWELL. One hundred and five million dollars.

Mr. PLUMB. Not secured by Government bonds?

Mr. FARWELL. Yes, sir; $105,000,000.

Mr. PLUMB. I will sit down very cheerfully for an hour to hear the Senator tell me just how he makes that out.

Mr. FARWELL. Certainly; I will do it in two minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. PLUMB. I do.

Mr. FARWELL. In 1882 there were $359,000,000 of national-bank notes outstanding. Since that time the national banks of the country have surrendered one way and another, by going into liquidation and voluntarily surrendering their circulation, $200,000,000 of their bonds, and they have also taken up until they have paid in that amount of money and taken their bonds out. They have paid into the Treasury $200,000,000 in money and received back in bonds more than $200,000,000.

Mr. PLUMB. That comes back to just the same thing exactly. For all purposes the amount of national-bank currency outstanding is $166,000,000 or $167,000,000, as the case may be, taking which one of these tables you please.

Mr. FARWELL. Secured by Government bonds.

Mr. PLUMB. It is in process of retirement; it is performing no office practically as currency.

Mr. FARWELL. I beg pardon; there are over $100,000,000 outstanding for which the United States has notes of equal amount.

Mr. PLUMB. That is only another way of stating the essential fact of my first statement, that there has been a diminution of the paper currency of the country since 1873 of about $180,000,000, because the Senator from Illinois is only talking about the method of book-keeping, not about the thing itself.

Mr. FARWELL. I beg the Senator's pardon, that is not correct. If you take the last statement of the Secretary of the Treasury you will find that there are only $33,000,000 to-day, or were at the beginning of this month, of United States notes in the Treasury. There were $61,000,000 of money deposited with the national banks, and that added to the $33,000,000 makes the $90,000,000 and odd of surplus.

Mr. PLUMB. I am not talking about what is in the national banks and what is in the Treasury; I am talking about the currency of the country in actual existence.

Mr. FARWELL. If the Senator will permit me, I will state that we have in circulation in the United States to-day $346,000,000 of United States notes, less $33,000,000 in the Treasury. Then add to that the silver certificates and the gold certificates and the national-bank circulation of about $270,000,000. In the debt statement the Treasurer says he has gold for $105,000,000 of national-bank notes which are outstanding, which he has received the money to redeem, and this $105,000,000 is invested in bonds, so that so far as the Government of the United States is concerned the $105,000,000 stands precisely in the same status as United States notes.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Illinois seems to think that money in the Treasury is as usefully employed as though in circulation among the people. I am talking about the volume of paper money proper, which is composed of but two kinds. I am not talking about silver certificates or gold certificates. They correspond to the amount of metallic money which has been deposited in the Treasury, the persons so depositing it merely desiring to put it into more convenient form for the transaction of their business. The volume is not changed by the process.

Mr. FARWELL. I desire to say to the Senator, if he will allow me, that the present national-bank circulation is about $270,000,000, and the greenback circulation is about $313,000,000. That is now in the hands of the people, and the report of the Secretary of the Treasury shows that to be the case.

Mr. PLUMB. I have the official report in regard to this matter, which I propose to take as the correct figure until somebody rises with something better.

Mr. PLATT. May I ask a question for information?

Mr. PLUMB. Yes, sir.

Mr. PLATT. Does the Senator know how much during the period he speaks of the silver certificates have been increased?

Mr. PLUMB. I do not know the exact amount. It is not pertinent to what I am speaking of. I come back to my first proposition, that the paper money of this country has diminished in volume since 1873 by nearly $180,000,000.

Mr. PLATT. Since 1883?

Mr. PLUMB. No, since 1873. In the last fourteen years it has diminished $180,000,000.

Mr. President, the pending bill is justified on the ground that in the event the Secretary of the Treasury should conclude to obey its mandates the surplus in the Treasury will be thereby depleted and the currency in circulation be increased in volume by the amount of the surplus thus paid out. But, as I have before said, no one can tell, not a single member of the Finance Committee will even guess—that is, he will not guess out loud so as to be responsible for his guess—as to the amount that will be added to the circulating medium of the country by the purchase of bonds which may or can be purchased under the provisions of this bill.

I am told upon what I believe to be good authority, and it is accessible in the records, that the national banks of this country hold about $60,000,000 in bonds as security for currency beyond the amount they need to hold in order to maintain their charters. For instance, many banks requiring only $25,000 in bonds to retain their charters have $50,000 and sometimes $100,000 bonds in addition, on which currency is issued and outstanding. Such banks can sell the excess of bonds above $25,000 by retiring their circulation based on such excess, or by depositing an equivalent amount of greenbacks the Treasury will retire them, which is the same thing. This contracts the volume of currency outstanding, but it may slightly increase the amount actually in circulation, that is, by 10 per cent., the difference between the face of the bonds and the currency based on them.

If this bill should become a law and the Secretary of the Treasury should act upon the theory which has heretofore controlled him, it is not probable that he would buy more than $60,000,000 of bonds, and if he did not it would be possible, if not probable, that these bonds would all come from national banks now holding them as security for circulation, and thereby there would be practically no increase of the amount of money in actual circulation by reason of the purchase of bonds by reason of the passage of the bill.

We are urged, therefore, to pass a bill as a matter of emergency which no one will say what the effect of will be, except the one effect of putting the money out of the Treasury into the hands of the holders of bonds, without any reference to the effect it may have upon the volume of the currency.

But, Mr. President, it may have another effect of an injurious kind. The Treasury Department is in active partnership with the national banks. The Secretary of the Treasury has loaned to these banks over $61,000,000 of the public funds instead of buying bonds and saving interest. He has chosen to do this, and up to date the banks have been willing to receive the money. It cost them nothing and they could loan it to the people for current rates of interest. But now the banks have got to a point where they are declining, I understand, to receive any more public money on deposit, because they believe the money liable to be called for at any time suddenly and in bulk, and those of them who have read history know that in the only other period of history when such a partnership was entered upon it proved disastrous to the banks, disastrous to the Government, and disastrous to the people. Meanwhile the Secretary has given to the banks the use of funds which have yielded them not less than $5,000,000 which the people have paid, and has failed to save to the Treasury at least half that sum, which he could have done by purchasing bonds.

Even if this bill should pass, the Secretary might decline to obey its mandates, as he has the one of the same tenor now on the statute-books. There is, therefore, grave doubt of the propriety of its passage.

But whether the bill passes or not, the great question of the volume of the currency of this country is left to take care of itself. The Administration recommends nothing and the Finance Committee does nothing.

Mr. President, if there is urgency for anything, it is for wise legislation upon the currency question. My amendment ought to be put upon this bill specially, because it is a House bill. It therefore offers an opportunity to have the House pass upon it directly, which will not come if it were put upon either of the other bills which have been mentioned here, because they are Senate bills.

But the Finance Committee, as heretofore and always, does not mean that any legislation adding to the volume of the currency, or any measure which replaces the currency which has been taken from the people, shall ever be adopted. That committee intend to obstruct and prevent everything of this kind. That committee is moved by impulses, by determinations, by theories, which are opposed to any increase in the volume of the currency and equally opposed to anything that stops its contraction.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator from Kansas, so far as I am concerned, speaks entirely out of the book. He does not know anything about it, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. PLUMB. I appeal from the word of the Senator from Vermont to the record of his committee; I appeal to the action of that committee on this floor whenever this question has been up. I say that that committee, with all the determination of its able and determined chairman, with all the determination of the former Secretary of the Treasury now a member of the committee, with all the determination of that influence which has controlled the financial policy of the country for the last thirty years and controls it yet, the control of bondholders and money-lenders, has resolved that nothing shall be done which shall operate to make the burdens of the people lighter by increasing the volume of the currency or even by preventing further contraction.

These facts are shown by the character of the opposition offered to this amendment. It is not debated upon its merits. The Senate is asked to vote it down without debate, upon the pretense that it does not belong to a bill of this kind. Mr. President, it is in order; it is germane; it is highly important; and without it the bill might just as well never be passed.

So far as I am concerned I intend, as I said before, to move this amendment, or one similar to it, to every bill which that committee proposes. I do not expect to make any impression on the indurated hide of the Finance Committee; but I do hope to arouse the Senate, I hope to arouse the country, to the non-action which has characterized Congress for the last fifteen years upon this very important subject. We have sat here for the last fourteen years and seen the volume of the currency contract by reason of the shrinkage of the national-bank currency, and the motive for such non-action is found in the remark of the Senator from Ohio a moment ago, to the effect that if more currency was wanted inducements should be offered to the national banks to supply it.

I tell that Senator, as I have often before said in my place here, that Congress will never offer to any national bank any inducement to take out or to issue any more currency than they have got now. It is after the feast entirely. The country has made up its mind that the national banks are not to furnish it with currency. They are no longer factors in that great question. The issue of currency is an act of sovereignty which the people do not mean to have delegated to any further extent than it is now, and as fast as the national-bank currency now outstanding is retired something else is to take its place. The question of the volume of the currency is not to be settled by private corporations upon the basis of their own desire for gain as against the public interest.

That is a question to be settled by Congress, and the Senator from Ohio will wait a long time before his remedy of more currency to be issued by the banks will be adopted. He will soon see what he probably prefers, a still further reduction in the volume of the currency. To this complexion it has come at last. The Secretary of the Treasury, working on the same line as the Finance Committee, preaches the issue of more national-bank currency, and in effect threatens the country—that is, that or nothing.

And thus, as we approach nearer and nearer to the financial brink and the danger becomes greater, we are admonished that the only remedy is more national-bank circulation.

No one expects relief from the Secretary of the Treasury. It has got to come from Congress. The Secretary of the Treasury has power to issue $2,000,000 a month more of silver certificates or to coin $2,000,000 more of silver dollars, which would result in that amount added of silver certificates, but he will not do that. We may be sure that the administration of the Treasury Department is inspired with the same motive that the Finance Committee is, and that is that there shall be no currency which is to come direct from the Government and no relief of any kind whatever unless it comes from the national banks by some enlargement of their power and of their profits. That is to be held before us. That is the rod which is constantly held over us.

The Senators from Vermont and from Ohio belong to the school of financiers who believe that a small and diminishing volume of currency is a blessing, and that a large volume of money is a curse. They look at the condition of the vaults in the banks of New York City and say that because money can be had there by favored ones upon collateral security which can be sold at a moment's notice therefore there is enough to supply the country, and they know nothing and apparently care nothing about the condition of the country at large, about the impoverishment of the people in the interior, because of this hide-bound policy which has characterized Congress under the leadership of the Finance Committee and which controls the Treasury Department.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I think this is an exceedingly bad time for the Government to be speculating in its bonds when the currency is contracted as it now is. I do not believe in paying the debt in any other mode than that provided by law, and when that mode is not at hand, when it can not be paid as provided by law, I do not believe in anticipating the payment.

The debt is payable in either gold or silver coin at the option of the Government. The act of July 14, 1870, distinctly provides that the bonds of the United States issued thereafter should be redeemable in coin of the then present standard value. The question has been thoroughly discussed and decided that "the present standard value" means the standard value of July 14, 1870. The Secretary of the Treasury, when issuing bonds, raised the question whether this phraseology could not be construed to mean the standard value at the time of issuing the bonds. He addressed a letter to the Attorney-General on the 21st day of April, 1877, in these words:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., April 21, 1877.

SIR: I beg leave to call your attention to, and ask your opinion upon, the following questions growing out of the refunding act of July 14, 1870, to wit:

Can I stipulate in the body of the 4 per cent. bonds about to be issued that they shall be redeemable in coin of the present standard value, that is, the standard value at the date of their issue, or must it be the date of the law?

I submit a statement, prepared by Hon. H. F. French, Assistant Secretary, having reference to the laws.

It may become important to the public interests to make the new bonds payable in coin of the present standard; that is, gold coin. Some doubts have been expressed upon whether previous bonds issued under acts passed prior to 1873 are not legally payable in silver coin. This question may become important, as any doubt upon the legal terms of a public security affects its value.

Very respectfully,

JOHN SHERMAN, Secretary.

Hon. CHARLES DEVENS,
Attorney-General.

On the 26th of that month the Attorney-General rendered his opinion, holding that "the present standard value" meant the value at the date of the act. I... ...ic give this opinion:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, April 26, 1877.

SIR: In answer to your letter of the 21st instant, requesting my opinion upon the following question growing out of the refunding act of July 14, 1870, to wit, "Can I stipulate in the body of the 4 per cent. bonds about to be issued that they shall be redeemable in coin of the present value, that is, the standard value at the date of their issue, or must it be the date of the law?" I have the honor to reply:

The act provides for the issue of bonds "redeemable in coin of the present standard value." The word "present" undoubtedly refers as a matter of date to the time when the act was passed, and not to the time when the bonds were thereafter issued. It contemplated that a long period would elapse before it would finally be carried into effect, and that changes in the coinage of the country might occur during that period.

Whatever changes in the coinage should occur, these bonds were, however, to be redeemed in coin of the standard value as it existed at the date of the act. By this provision the holder was guarded against any depreciation that might take place in the value of the coin, and the Government would not be compelled to pay the additional value should the coinage be appreciated. All the bonds issued under the act were to stand alike, no matter what was the date when such bonds were issued. Each was to be redeemable in coin which was included in the authorized coinage of the country at the date referred to, it being of the standard value as it then existed. Since the law was passed no change has taken place in the standard value of the coin. It is understood that there has been a certain change in the coinage of the country, and that silver dollars have now ceased to exist practically as coin.

It has been further provided by the statute of February 12, 1873 (Revised Statutes, sections 3585, 3586), that "the silver coins of the United States shall be a legal tender at their nominal value for any amount not exceeding $5 in any one payment."

Notwithstanding this practical change in the coinage of the country and the passage of this act in regard to legal-tenders, the form of bond to be issued by you should not be changed so far as the mode in which it is to be redeemed is concerned. It was not intended that this should be varied according to the changes which might be made in the coinage, because a definite rule was given by reference to the coin of a particular date. That which will pay the bonds heretofore issued under this act will pay the bonds which you may hereafter issue.

It can not be authoritatively said that the words "payable in coin" or "payable in gold" are equivalent to the words used by the statute. Even if this leaves open for discussion the question whether bonds issued under this act are or are not redeemable in silver coin of the character and standard which existed July 14, 1870, it is not a doubt which it is in your power to remedy by the use of words in the bond other than those which this statute provides.

While I comprehend the difficulty suggested in your letter, and the convenience that there might be in removing any question on this matter, I am, therefore, of opinion that it would not be safe to issue the bonds, except as redeemable in coin of the standard value of July 14, 1870.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHARLES DEVENS, Attorney-General.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN,
Secretary of the Treasury.

That was not entirely satisfactory to all. The question was further agitated and finally passed upon by a vote of this body and of the other House, more than a two-thirds vote in each House holding that every dollar of bonds issued by the United States was payable in silver. That is the opinion of every lawyer; that is the language of the law, and that is the option of the United States. If the United States might pay in either gold or silver at its option, was it not the duty of the executive officers to so exercise that option as to save all they could to the Government? Suppose one of you were an agent for an estate, and you had to deliver under a contract either a thousand bushels of oats or a thousand bushels of barley at a given date, and when that date came barley was scarce and worth three times as much as oats, would you expect to retain your place and be regarded as an honest man if you should pay in barley at treble the price that you would have to pay in oats? Would it not be necessary for you to exercise in favor of your principal that option which would benefit him most?

I will show you, if the Treasury Department had exercised that option, what the result would have been. I have some figures here which may be interesting to show how much has been lost already by the failure to comply with that option and obey the law. The following amounts have been paid on the bonded debt since 1879, when the Government commenced to coin the silver dollar under the act of 1878:

Principal of the public debt, $924,723,960.

Interest on the public debt since that time, $501,802,000.

Total, $1,426,525,960.

The average price of silver bullion from 1879 to October, 1887, was 84 cents on the dollar as compared with gold. If the money paid on the principal and interest of the bonded debt had been paid on a silver basis, there would have been a saving of $229,824,154, and at that time a law had been passed allowing the Secretary of the Treasury to buy and coin $4,000,000 silver bullion monthly in order to take advantage of this option, and one month before the passage of the law of 1878 both Houses of Congress had by more than a two-thirds vote declared that the bonds were payable in silver, and provided by law a means of paying them in that way.

The present bonded debt is $1,027,615,662. The interest, at 4½ per cent. and 4 per cent. and interest on the Pacific Railroad bonds at 6 per cent., in the aggregate, when they all come to maturity, will be $670,107,445. This, added to the principal, will make an aggregate, which must be paid by the Government, of $1,697,723,107. That amount must be paid to liquidate the present bonded indebtedness and interest. The average price of silver bullion in 1887 was 74 cents on the dollar as compared with gold. If that price remains the same until the maturity of the bonds there would be a saving of $451,408,008 in the payment of the existing bonded indebtedness and interest with silver. Add the money already paid out and lost on the principal and interest, namely, $264,141,994, to what will be lost if the policy of paying in the dearer metal is pursued, namely, $451,408,008, and it gives a total loss of $715,550,002. This amount the Government will lose if it continues to pay its bonded indebtedness in gold, provided the price of silver remains stationary and does not advance.

It can not be said that it would be inequitable to pay in silver for two very obvious reasons. First, the bondholder contracted to take silver, and there is no more reason why he should not be bound by the contract than other people. Wealth ought not to exonerate any class of men in the United States from complying with their contracts. The Government never pays its poor creditors beyond the letter of the law and denies them interest, and usually demands a compromise of a part of the principal. Almost every relief bill has a compromise of that kind in it.

Second, silver will buy more property to-day than it would when the contract was made. It has not gone down. We should not be paying the bondholders in depreciated currency. The average farm value of wheat in the United States in 1879, when the Government commenced coining silver dollars, was $1.04 per bushel on a gold basis. The farm value of wheat in 1887 was 68 cents per bushel, a fall in the price of wheat of more than 34 per cent., whereas the decline in the price of silver has been only 26 per cent., making an excess in the decline of the price of wheat over that of silver of 8 per cent. The same is true of the general range of commodities. Consequently the bondholder has nothing to complain of, either in law or equity, if the United States insists upon the terms of the contract.

Silver has not gone down, but the coining of gold and the action of various governments of the world in using gold alone has sent gold up and enhanced the value of the bonds. Legislation sought after the contract and the action of the Treasury Department has done this, and there has been a loss of over $700,000,000 on our debt by the officers having the administration of the Government declining to do what any honest agent for a private party would be compelled to do, and would be prosecuted if he did not do it.

I do not believe that any bill should be passed to buy more bonds and pay for them in a contracted currency at an enormous price, because you say it will only take such a percentage, and now it takes more wheat to pay for them, it takes more cotton, more products. The 4 per cent. bonds are at 25 per cent. premium, and the other bonds are at a premium almost equal to the interest that has not become due. I say that to go into the market and buy them now, without providing the currency in which to buy them, without giving the people something that will stop this contraction and let property go up, is unfair and unjust, and I will not vote to buy a dollar of bonds unless there is ample provision made for the use of silver.

I have several propositions. I have one that I intended to offer as an amendment to this bill which I will read but shall not offer at present, because there seems to be a disposition now to pass the bill in a hurry without considering amendments. The amendment that I had intended to offer to this particular bill, to go with it as an antidote, is as follows:

To secure to the United States the benefits of the option contained in the acts of Congress under which the bonds of the United States were issued, to pay the same in either gold or silver of the standard value of July 14, 1870, and to furnish silver coin sufficient for that purpose, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase from time to time silver bullion, at the market price thereof, not less than $4,000,000 worth per month nor more than $8,000,000 per month, and cause the same to be coined monthly, as fast as purchased, into silver coin of the denominations, weight, and fineness now provided by law.

The Secretary of the Treasury ought to have done that. If he were doing it now there would be some relief to the people. I agree that the amendment of the Senator from Kansas is in the right direction. It is in a proper direction, but I should like something better. I should like to adopt what has been the world's money and was the world's money for two thousand years before the hands of speculators struck it down by legislation. There was no reason in 1873 for depriving the world of the use of silver as money and bringing on this contraction. I think it is the crime of the nineteenth century to have done this, and the world is feeling it, and the people of this country are feeling it; and while we are enduring these evils on a gold basis, and practically discarding silver, I am opposed to going into the market and paying this debt, for I believe that before it becomes due the conscience of this country will be aroused to do justice to the people as well as to the bondholders, and hold the bondholders to their contracts as well as the people.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. President, the bill before the Senate is prompted by this language on the part of the President of the United States:

In the present state of legislation the only pretense of any existing executive power to restore at this time any part of our surplus revenues to the people by its expenditure consists in the supposition that the Secretary of the Treasury may enter the market and purchase the bonds of the Government not yet due at a rate of premium to be agreed upon. The only provision of law from which such a power could be derived is found in an appropriation bill passed a number of years ago; and it is subject to the suspicion that it was intended as temporary and limited in its application, instead of conferring a continuing discretion and authority.

The President does not deny that the Secretary of the Treasury has the power to purchase bonds under the act of 1881, but he seems to doubt the propriety of making the purchase on account of the provision having been enacted into a law upon a general appropriation bill. This bill, therefore, has been passed by the other House and has been reported to the Senate for the purpose of relieving the mind of the Executive upon that question and enabling him to get out of the Treasury the rapidly-accumulating surplus there.

This has been made the occasion for the offering of an amendment by the Senator from Kansas, providing for the issuing of Treasury notes by the Treasury Department. It has been made the occasion for an attack upon the Finance Committee for not providing any way to relieve the Treasury from the surplus which is there now and which is rapidly-accumulating.

I wish the Senator from Kansas were here to respond to the question which I shall propound, and that is, how will his amendment get any money out of the Treasury? How will it relieve us of the surplus already in the Treasury? How will it provide for paying out that already in the Treasury? We have more money there now than is necessary to pay the current expenses of the Government. We have more there than is necessary to pay the interest upon the bonded indebtedness of the Government. The surplus is rapidly accumulating, and why on this bill should we provide for increasing the currency when there is no possible way to relieve the Treasury of that currency when it is put there?

Suppose we add the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas to this bill, how do you propose to get the money out of the Treasury? What are you to pay it out upon? Is the Finance Committee subject to the charge which has been made against it? There is no way to get the surplus already in the Treasury or accumulating there out of the Treasury unless you pay it upon the indebtedness of the Government or purchase the outstanding indebtedness of the Government. Is there any object in connection with this bill to provide for printing more Treasury notes and piling them up in the Treasury Department? I might go further than that. Is there any necessity, if you wish to expand the currency, to coin more silver or gold for the purpose of enlarging the currency?

However the currency may be contracted to-day by the retirement of national-bank notes, whatever its volume, is there no means or method to get out of the Treasury that which is there. There is but one way in which that can be done, and that is by the reduction of taxation. I do not propose to discuss that question here and now. The sources from which money is pouring into the Treasury must be cut off; the fountains must be dried up from which the money is flowing into the Treasury to-day; and we are not relieving the people from a contraction of the currency by either coining more silver or by making more treasury notes.

The Committee on Finance may report and bring in here the proposition advocated by the Senator from Kansas and numerous other propositions which have been suggested, and the only possible effect of them if enacted into law is to make more paper and pile it up in the Treasury Department, or coin more silver or gold and pile that up in the Treasury Department.

We come in here with a simple proposition, providing a way in which money can be got out of the Treasury, in which the surplus that is there may be paid out and put into circulation among the people of the United States. Why encumber it, I ask, with these propositions to make more currency at this particular time, when it is made a cause of offense on the part of the Administration? Why encumber it with the propositions which are made here to increase our circulation?

I concede many of the ills which are complained of in reference to the contraction of the currency. I am prepared to support any bill which may be brought in looking to relief upon that question which is proper in its terms; but any and all bills and all provisions which are brought here are ineffectual, and must be ineffectual unless some way shall be provided to pay the money out and take it to the people.

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator from New York permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. PLUMB. What would the Senator say to a proposition to simply extinguish some more of the nation's debt with it? There are nearly a thousand million dollars of the public debt outstanding.

Mr. HISCOCK. If the Senator desires to inquire of me whether I have any purpose or intention or care to support or defend the national banking system, I say to him, no, sir; I do not.

Mr. PLUMB. I am not speaking of that. I am addressing myself to the Senator's proposition, that if we issue these additional Treasury notes we should have them piled up in the Treasury, with no way of getting them out. I want to suggest to him whether we could not pay the national debt with them. What would be the objection to that method of getting them out?

Mr. HISCOCK. On the one hand the Senator asks me that question and a moment ago he made the argument that the more bonds were purchased the more it was probable, or likely, or possible at least, that the currency would be contracted by reason of the national banks selling their bonds and thereby being compelled to surrender their circulation.

Mr. PLUMB. But my proposition goes beyond that.

Mr. HISCOCK. I say to the Senator very frankly that I am not at the present time disposed to enter into the question whether it is best now to purchase of the national banks the bonds at such price as they may see fit to ask for them, looking to the retirement of the bonds and our putting out in place of them Treasury notes. If that is the question the Senator asks me, I say that upon this bill I do not propose to discuss that question. It would then make it a question as between the national banks and the Government, whether the banks can make more money by selling their bonds to the Government and giving up the circulation which they received in place of them, and using the notes they receive as the circulation of the banks.

I say that upon this bill there is no propriety in discussing that question. The proposition comes here independent of any proposition to reduce revenue, providing one means, one method, by which the money which is now piled up in the vaults of the Government may be gotten out to the people. If we were prepared to add to this bill another measure which looked to the reduction of the revenues or which provided some other method to relieve the Government of the amount of money which it has now on hand, then the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas would be properly here for discussion. But it seems to me that I have answered all of the proprieties of the case in reference to that amendment and kindred propositions when I make it manifest that by such a law it would be utterly impossible to relieve the Treasury of a single dollar of the surplus which has accumulated there; it would be practically impossible to add a dollar to the circulating medium now in use by the people.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. MORRILL. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President, following the advice of the committee when this amendment substantially was pending before, and without careful consideration I voted to lay it on the table. I am satisfied from an examination of it that it represents every conviction that I hold upon this question, and I want to make this statement before the yeas and nays are taken.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BROWN (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER]. If he were present, I should vote "nay" and I presume he would vote "yea."

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE], but I am told that if he were present he would vote "yea." I therefore vote. I vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. FAULKNER. I have transferred my pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] to the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO]. I therefore vote "nay."

Mr. BLACKBURN (after having voted in the negative). I am informed at the desk that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] has not voted on this question, and as I am paired generally with him I ask leave to withdraw my vote. [A pause.] I am informed that the Senator from Nebraska voted "nay" before. So I will let my vote stand.

Mr. PADDOCK. I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. Not knowing how he would vote, I refrain from voting.

Mr. EVARTS. I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. I should vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]. If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. PAYNE (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]. I ask leave to withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio withdraws his vote.

Mr. KENNA. The Senator from Ohio is paired on this particular vote with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON].

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—24.

Allison,	Farwell,	Hoar,	Sherman,
Beck,	Frye,	Ingalls,	Spooner,
Chandler,	Hale,	Jones of Arkansas,	Stanford,
Cullom,	Hampton,	Morrill,	Stockbridge,

Brown,	Eustis,	McPherson,	Quay,
Butler,	Evarts,	Manderson,	Riddleberger,
Chace,	Gibson,	Morgan,	Sawyer.

So the motion to lay the amendment on the table was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BECK. Let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again read.

The SECRETARY. The amendment is to add to the bill:

That whenever the circulation of any national bank, or any portion thereof, shall be surrendered, and the same is not taken up by other national banks within thirty days thereafter, the Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon issue an equivalent amount of Treasury notes of the denominations now provided by law for national-bank notes. Said Treasury notes shall be deposited in the Treasury and paid out as other moneys kept for the discharge of the obligations of the Government. They shall be receivable for salaries and for all dues to the Government, including duties on imports; shall be a legal-tender between national banks, and for all debts due to any national bank; shall be redeemable in coin, as the legal-tender notes of the United States now are; and when received into the Treasury they shall be reissued; and when mutilated or worn they shall be replaced in the same manner as now provided by law for said legal-tender notes. The coin held in the Treasury at the date of the passage of this act for the redemption of the legal-tender notes of the Government shall also be applicable to the redemption of the Treasury notes herein provided for; and such coin reserve may, from time to time, be increased by adding thereto other sums from payments made into the Treasury, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That the total amount of said coin reserve shall never be less than 25 per cent. nor more than 30 per cent. of the total amount of legal-tender and Treasury notes outstanding, the true intent and meaning of this section being that the volume of paper money outstanding (exclusive of gold and silver certificates) shall remain as now existing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the question of agreeing to this amendment the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COCKRELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]. If he were present, I presume he would vote "nay" and I should certainly vote "yea."

Mr. EVARTS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. In his absence I can not vote.

Mr. HISCOCK (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], but as I know he would vote against this amendment if present, I vote "nay."

Mr. PADDOCK (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. I do not know how he would vote if present, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. PAYNE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). My colleague [Mr. HAWLEY] is absent, paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL]. If my colleague were here, he would vote "nay."

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I should vote "yea," but that I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

Mr. SPOONER (when Mr. SAWYER'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. SAWYER], as I stated some time ago, is absent from the city and paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE], but as he would vote "nay," I vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded:

Mr. KENNA. I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CALL. My colleague [Mr. PASCO] is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. COCKRELL. I was paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] and so announced; but I transfer the pair to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN], who is absent. If the Senator from Colorado were here, he would vote "yea" and the Senator from Connecticut would vote "nay." I vote "yea."

Mr. KENNA. I understand that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN], with whom I am paired, is in favor of the amendment. So I vote "yea."

Mr. BROWN. I am paired with the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER]. I should vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. FRYE. I notice for the first time that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] is absent, and in his absence I am generally paired with him. I do not know how he would vote on this amendment if present, but it is a very important amendment, and as I am ignorant of his position in relation to it, I shall refrain from voting. I should vote against the amendment if not paired.

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—28.

Bate,	Cockrell,	Jones of Nevada,	Stewart,
Beck,	Coke,	Kenna,	Teller,
Berry,	Daniel,	Mitchell,	Turpie,

Colquitt,	Hawley,	Payne,

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. I offer an amendment as additional sections to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add as additional sections the following:

SEC. —. That any person may deposit at any mint or assay office of the United States either gold or silver bullion, or both, in quantities of not less than 5 ounces of gold or 80 ounces of silver, and demand and receive coin certificates therefor The price to be paid for gold bullion, in exchange for certificates, shall be at the rate of $1 for 25.8 grains of gold, nine-tenths fine; the price to be paid for silver bullion, in exchange for certificates, shall be stated by the Secretary of the Treasury on the 1st and 15th day of each calendar month, and when either of these days shall fall on Sunday, or any other holiday, such statement shall be made on the following secular day, and the price so stated shall be equal to the average quotations of silver in the New York City market during the fifteen days next preceding such statement: Provided, That the price stated by the Secretary of the Treasury shall not exceed $1 for 412½ grains of silver, nine-tenths fine. Bullion below the standard value deposited under the provisions of this section may be reduced to the required fineness at the several mints and assay offices of the United States, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, at the same cost to the depositor as is now charged for reducing gold bullion to the standard required for coinage.

SEC. —. The coin certificates issued under the provisions of this act shall be of such denominations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: Provided, That they shall not be of less denomination than $1, or more than $1,000, and that one-half of the amount issued shall be of denominations less than $50, and shall be redeemable in gold or silver coin at the option of the United States. And the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be coined from time to time such portion of the bullion deposited under the provisions of this act as may be necessary to enable him to furnish coin for the redemption of such certificates. All coin certificates issued under the provisions of this act shall be a legal tender at their nominal value for all dues, public and private, except where otherwise expressly stipulated in contracts heretofore made.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask for the yeas and nays on that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to explain the exact provisions of the amendment. This amendment simply provides that persons having either gold or silver bullion may deposit it in the several mints and assay offices of the Unites States and receive therefor coin certificates? The price fixed upon gold is the standard price of $1 for 25.8 grains of standard gold. The price fixed upon silver is the market price. Persons are to deposit it and receive the market price. That market price is to be ascertained by the New York quotations during the preceding fifteen days. The certificates to be issued for it are to be in denominations not less than one dollar nor more than a thousand dollars; but one-half of the amount of the certificates must be in denominations less than fifty dollars. When bullion is deposited it is provided that it shall be reduced to the proper fineness at the assay office where deposited at the same charges that are now made on gold for preparing it for coinage. The certificates are redeemable in the same manner that the gold and silver certificates now issued are redeemable.

I have now stated the substance of the amendment. It does not put up silver. It simply allows it to be used as money at its market value. I think that if this amendment can be adopted we shall have prosperity in this country. It will stop the contraction that is now going on. It will not produce inflation beyond the actual amount of bullion produced. Bullion has been used for a thousand years; and the avowed object of demonetizing part of it was to limit the currency. In 1873 Congress demonetized silver, and it has gone down. I recognize that fact; I take the situation as it now is, and provide for taking silver at its market value.

Mr. PLATT. Does not this amendment oblige the Government to coin all the silver that anybody chooses to bring?

Mr. STEWART. No, it requires the Government to purchase nothing. There is no element of that kind in it. It simply exchanges coin certificates for silver bullion at its market value. Do you say you purchase gold when you allow it to be coined? Was it a purchase of gold or silver from the beginning when each had that privilege which had been extended through all ages to exchange it on a known basis? Was that regarded as a purchase? No; it is but a means of furnishing circulation; it costs the Government nothing; it bases the circulation on the bullion. You might as well say it was purchasing gold when you allow it to go to the mints to be coined.

Mr. PLATT. If it is not a purchase, it has this effect at any rate, to oblige the Government to take all the silver in the country and issue certificates for it if all the silver should be offered.

Mr. STEWART. Certainly, the same as it takes all the gold now, and to make these certificates a legal tender. We treat silver at its market price. You have depreciated its market price by legislation. We accept that; but we now say treat it as a money metal and have prosperity, and be able to pay your debts according to the contract, and give the people some chance for prosperity or for relief.

See how this compares with your scheme of national banks. You say that the national-bank notes are good money. Why? Because the bonds they deposit are security for the notes. Very well, the bond is put into the Treasury as security for the note. My colleague has well asked, Why not keep the bond in the Treasury and save the 2 per cent.? Why put it out and pay 2 per cent. more, and then put it back in the Treasury as security?

I propose the old-fashioned way of having money. It avoids your schemes; it avoids tinkering with the money of the country; it avoids going to Wall street and asking the speculators there to make some arrangement whereby a little can be doled out. It lets the people know the basis on which money is issued, and it returns as far as practicable (recognizing what has already been done) to the double standard, allowing the producer of bullion to bring it to the mints and receive certificates for it at its market value.

It is suggested that we confine the provision to what is produced in this country. That is unnecessary, and I want to say right here that there is no danger of the Treasury being flooded with silver under this provision. There is not $5,000,000 of silver bullion in Europe and America. I know what is the operation here. It is shipped by every steamer. With the disposition to demonetize it the producers do not know what may happen, and it is unsafe property to keep. So in England; she has sent the bullion to Asia, and it has never returned and it will not return.

Then we are told that Europe will demonetize her silver and send it here. That can not be done. She has none that she can afford to demonetize and send here. If we should coin it and rate it at 16 to 1 she could not send any here. Her silver is circulating on a par with gold at a relation of 15½ to 1. If brought here, and we paid 16 to 1 for it—if we paid par for it, they could not bring it here then, because they would have to put another half-ounce of silver in each dollar's worth before they could make it 16 to 1. But there is no danger of any coming from Europe. Europe is not going to take her silver legal tender and send it to us, her legal money that is circulating among the people; she is not going to send it here at 25 or 26 per cent. discount. It is dollar for dollar there, and a part of her legal-tender money that circulates on a par with gold, and to send it here she would have to pay par for it and sell it here at a discount.

There is very little that can come from Mexico. It is circulating there. They have use for their silver there, and have none to send to us. I tell you there is no danger whatever. The only difficulty will be that we shall not get enough. We shall have a basis that the people will know; we shall have a currency that the people will know how it is circulated and by whom; and we shall return to allowing our exchanges to be regulated by silver as well as gold. It is a step in the right direction. Pass this measure, and my word for it you will have prosperity.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, I would ask the Senator from Nevada whether his confidence in the result of this amendment is not undertaking a responsibility quite in advance of the general judgment of the community, although that judgment may greatly desire a step in the right direction to the rehabilitation of silver? For myself, adhering firmly to the proposition that the two precious metals should form the basis of circulation and of the support of credits in common, I have not been able to see that any movement could be made forward in the absence of some convention with Europe on the subject that should extend the opening of our mints on any condition beyond the product of this country.

The Senator from Nevada would undoubtedly regard that as a step forward, but not so great a step forward as he would desire, and upon his horoscope of the future he would be responsible that all the movements of silver from Europe, now stagnant and paralyzed to a certain extent, and the immense production of new silver from the mines of Mexico and the now tendency of our silver outward to obtain a good market in India, would all be so unaffected by this new movement, which he considers a prodigious movement, so great a movement that it makes a difference between prosperity to this great nation and a lack of prosperity—that this agitation will all tend to nothing but this rehabilitation of the value of silver and its enlargement as a part of our currency.

Mr. President, a step backward in this direction can not be easily taken. If this movement were confined in its present shape, which I agree does not enhance the measure of our coinage given to the silver thus introduced, if it could be limited to the silver produced in this country, we should have an experiment of great interest, of great value, and containing no serious threat to the influence upon the currency and values in common of this country. But with all my desire that by convention, if possible, and in an accurate measure of convention with Europe, we should establish a system of our own, I can not see any wisdom in the very precipitate movement that is forced upon the country in this sideway amendment of a measure with which it has no connection; nor do I believe that the public mind, whether it favors the enlargement of silver currency or not, has at all meditated upon this measure. If the Senator from Nevada has done so, he has the great distinction of being more alert than the rest of the country. In measures of this kind it is not wise to go in advance of the public judgment as deliberately formed in matters that concern in a most intimate sense all that touches the currency and the values in common of this country. I must therefore vote against this measure, because I believe it will not accomplish and may endanger what I desire—a sound and sure movement towards the rehabilitation of silver.

Mr. STEWART. Every movement has to be begun. The movement to demonetize silver had a beginning. Movement after movement to restore silver to currency has been made. We are making no experiment when we go back to a thousand years' experience. It was a mistake to demonetize silver. But we do not seek to remedy that mistake altogether; we only propose a step in that direction.

My bill provided that silver bullion should be received by the Treasury Department at 412½ grains for a dollar, received at par; but it was objected that it was already at a lower price than that. Then I say receive it at its market price and use it as a basis of currency. That is the pending amendment.

This talk about getting the consent of Europe is all bosh. You can not do that. They have a deliberate policy there which this would destroy entirely. I believe the sentiment of this country, having seen the experiment, is overwhelmingly in favor of the use of silver as well as gold as a basis of circulation. I believe it is overwhelmingly in favor of such an extension of currency as may be made by the use of both metals and that the country wants no arbitrary limitation. I believe that the thousand millions of mortgages on the value of property are made heavier by our contraction policy. I believe this continual contraction of the currency will ruin the debtors. I do not believe I shall have any opportunity to get an expression of opinion on the subject unless I offer it as an amendment to a bill which is likely to become a law. If I could see any other way I should not offer it as an amendment here.

I offered my bill early in the session. I sent amendments to it to the committee, and I have heard nothing from them. There is no way to bring the subject before the Senate except by an amendment when a bill is pending. No report is made upon it, no reason has been assigned by the Finance Committee why silver should not be received, and we have gone on for fifteen years, and during those fifteen years the value of all commodities has shrunk over 33⅓ per cent., business has been paralyzed, and it has been said here to-day that the country was trembling on the brink of ruin. Something must be done. You struck at the basis of its prosperity and one-half the foundation of its currency. Now it is trembling. We get no report from the Finance Committee, no consideration of this great question. They promise to do it in the future. That has been the talk. You may promise forever. We want performance in this line, and if we can not have the benefit of the consideration of a committee on so important a question I say the Senate is bound to consider it, discuss it and vote upon it. I believe that every Senator, if he will examine the question carefully, will feel conscientiously bound to let the people have silver as money on the old basis.

The idea of letting Europeans run our finances and not taking care of ourselves has not worked well. We do not want them. Why should we not provide for ourselves?

I ask to have a reasonable amount of circulation based upon the precious metals, so that the people may do business, so that they shall not be compelled to sell their wheat for nothing. Wheat is lower than it has been for one hundred years. Why? It is a plain proposition. We can buy wheat here on a gold basis and you have to sell it in England on a gold basis. They can buy silver here for 26 per cent. discount to-day, take that silver to India, and sell it at par for wheat. There is no part of the world where wheat is grown that has prospered in the last ten years and has developed its resources except India, where they have had a silver basis. The silver-basis countries are prosperous because they have abundant currency by getting our cheap silver. When the merchant who has bought wheat on a silver basis in India comes in competition with the merchant who has bought wheat on a gold basis in the United States he can undersell him, and this cuts off our foreign market. The same is true of cotton.

When there is a question affecting the people as this does, if it is not considered in committee, the whole Senate should convert itself into a Committee of the Whole and examine the subject, and see if there is any relief for the farmers and for the mechanics and for the laboring men of this country, or whether we shall go on contracting.

We are told by Mr. Wells that it does not make any difference how much money we have. He says the values are short as much as the money is short, and they will accommodate themselves to it. That is true. If you destroy one-half of the world's money, if you reduce the money you have now one-half, values will shrink correspondingly, and they will continually shrink. That is an argument, he says, why we do not need any more money. We draw it down, and so reduce the debts of the people and decrease the value of property, which shrinks to accommodate itself to the volume of money. Will you let this go on? If it is not worthy of discussion in open Senate, it has to be discussed elsewhere.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, the Senator from Nevada mixes with this discussion very large and important considerations which do not seem to bear upon the question before us. I will agree with him from the bottom of my heart that the capital error, the stupendous blunder, of European statesmanship has been the demonetization of silver. I will agree that we have suffered under that demonetization, but Germany and England have suffered much more. The lack of prosperity may grow out of this disturbance between the united current of the two precious metals which have built up and on which are sustained the credit of the world, but which are now made to war against one another. Every depreciation of the value of either of them or the enhancement of one at the expense of the other is a mischief to commerce. All this I will agree with. No doubt the demonstration has been marked step by step in the history of Europe and of this country, till now we seem to be reduced really to a practical, and, for the time at least, a permanent, reduction of the silver values in the currency of the world by one-quarter of the nominal rate of silver. But the Senator does not propose to redress that mischief and to restore that parity by opening our mints to silver; by no means. He does not open the mints to silver, for the mints are never opened to silver unless they are opened to coin the silver as coin at the value at which the dollar is rated.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator will allow me. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to coin a certain amount per month. Does the Senator prefer another amendment which I have, providing that any one could put in silver on the same terms as gold at the ratio of 16 to 1, that is, the ratio of 412½ grains of standard silver to 25.8 grains of standard gold, and receive it free at the mint the same as gold? Are you prepared for that? That is free coinage.

Mr. EVARTS. I have stated that in redress of the mischiefs which the Senator complains of, and justly, from the demonetization of silver by the action of Germany, I did not propose at one bound to open our mints to the coinage of the silver of the world.

Mr. STEWART. To what does the Senator refer?

Mr. EVARTS. I am talking about the proposition of our friends here. Nobody will venture to say that that proposition is taking any proper step to what we desire, a restoration of parity between silver and gold at a proper measure. I said it might perhaps experimentally be introduced as undertaking to have better care for the silver produced in our own mines, leaving out the rest of commerce, Europe and the South American nations, to take care of their silver and see that it does not fall too much on their hands, while we were taking care of our own.

It is to me, therefore, a question of prudence and of what steps are to bring us most safely and without relapse and disaster to the final object. The risk we recognize is that the steady, historical, uniform co-ordination of the two metals in sustaining the commerce and credits of the world has been interrupted; but it does not follow that if one limb has been broken you can afford to dance with it instead of nursing it so as to secure the restoration of the bruised limb. Whether I would or would not introduce a measure, I can only say that this measure, as it appears in my judgment, is not the wisest and the best, nor does it carry us as much forward in what we might expect to gain as one would that was limited to our own silver. I certainly should not propose to open the mints to coinage for all the silver of Europe. I venture to say that a great deal of European silver not now in the shape of coin would come here if they could put it into different forms. You open our mints for all the silver of the world to come here and take out our silver dollars that are a legal tender here, and see whether they will not lose 3 per cent. and 5 per cent. and 10 per cent., to the detriment of our silver standard which was created for us.

But I have hoped that a judicious measure might be framed in the interest of our silver product, which we can count and measure, and whatever benefit was done to it was done within our own territory and for our own product, by which we might escape a resort to the public market as a measure of silver. But the Senator from Nevada still adheres to the market. I had hoped that at some measure between par and 75 per cent. we might give to our silver a recognition of free coinage here at a measure say of 87½ cents, and which would be a movement towards elevating the value of our silver and of forcing upon Europe the necessity of looking out for a disastrous effect upon its own silver.

Mr. STEWART. If you said silver should not go above a certain figure, then you would fix a new ratio.

Mr. EVARTS. I would attempt to deal with the problem as a wise physician or surgeon would, by such prudent remedies as the condition of the patient seemed to require. If he had but one leg, I would try to fix up the other.

Mr. STEWART. So would I; and not cut off the head at once.

Mr. EVARTS. I was talking of legs, not heads. Let us stick to the metaphor.

Now, a grave discussion on a proposition of that kind would be necessary before the public mind, before the Senate, before the House of Representatives could wisely undertake such a measure. This pending proposition exposes us as now proposed to a combination on the part of all those who have silver to part with at a better rate than they can get otherwise, to raid the market of silver in the city of New York for the purposes of an average to be made. But the principal, and I suppose final, answer to the adoption of this measure as an amendment to a necessary bill, with which it has no connection, is reason enough for voting against it.

Now, if the Finance Committee, against whose slowness of movement the Senator from Nevada has spoken, will meditate on what is the best measure forward towards our financial aim in rehabilitating silver, I certainly shall give it a candid support with a readiness to go as far as the farthest in what may be rational and involving no menace of too rapid and serious interference with the basis of things now existing.

Mr. STEWART. I think there is a misapprehension as to the amendment that is before the Senate. The amendment as printed has been very much changed, and for the information of the Senate I should like to have it reread, that Senators may know just what it is.

Mr. PLATT. I shall be glad to have it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add as new sections:

SEC. —. That any person may deposit at any mint or assay office of the United States either gold or silver bullion, or both, in quantities of not less than five ounces of gold or eighty ounces of silver, and demand and receive coin certificates therefor. The price to be paid for gold bullion, in exchange for certificates, shall be at the rate of $1 for 25.8 grains of gold, nine-tenths fine; the price to be paid for silver bullion, in exchange for certificates, shall be stated by the Secretary of the Treasury on the 1st and 15th day of each calendar month, and when either of these days shall fall on Sunday, or any other holiday, such statement shall be made on the following secular day, and the price so stated shall be equal to the average quotations of silver in the New York City market during the fifteen days next preceding such statement: Provided, That the price stated by the Secretary of the Treasury shall not exceed $1 for 412½ grains of silver, nine-tenths fine. Bullion below the standard value deposited under the provisions of this section may be reduced to the required fineness at the several mints and assay offices of the United States, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, at the same cost to the depositor as is now charged for reducing gold bullion to the standard required for coinage.

SEC. —. The coin certificates issued under the provisions of this act shall be of such denominations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: Provided, That they shall not be of less denomination than $1, or more than $1,000, and that one-half of the amount issued shall be of denominations less than $50, and shall be redeemable in gold or silver coin at the option of the United States. And the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be coined from time to time such portion of the bullion deposited under the provisions of this act as may be necessary to enable him to furnish coin for the redemption of such certificates. All coin certificates issued under the provisions of this act shall be a legal tender at their nominal value for all dues, public and private, except where otherwise expressly stipulated in contracts heretofore made.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, the reading of the proposed amendment shows the inadvisability of acting upon a proposition of this kind in this hurried manner. In very important particulars it differs from the amendment of which we have had notice, and which has been before the Senate only since March 1, 1888. Any one reading the amendment of which we have had notice and voting for the amendment which has been proposed to-day might be mistaken, or if he understood the amendment of to-day would vote hastily upon first impression upon a matter of the greatest importance.

I had expected to hear from the Finance Committee on this proposition. I know that they are much better equipped for this discussion than I am. I do not intend to discuss it at any length, but before a vote is taken I think I ought to say that it seems to me we are launching our ship upon an unknown sea; whither it will sail no man can tell.

There has been a great deal said here to-day about the contraction of the currency in the past few years. I had been of the impression that the currency of the country had not been contracted within the past few years; that, taking the gold and silver coin, the greenbacks or legal-tender notes, the national-bank notes, our currency had been increased rather than diminished within the past few years. I think I am right. Whether our currency is equal in volume to the necessities and requirements of trade and population is another thing; but that there has been by reason of the retirement of the national-bank notes any absolute decrease in the currency, the circulating medium of the country, I think is not true.

I have seen no returns for the past few months; but a few months ago I know that it was not true, but that on the other hand there had been an absolute increase in the volume of our circulating medium. Possibly there may have been some diminution since the last statement which I saw, but I apprehend that when the facts are brought to our knowledge, when the figures are before us, as they are not now—no one has given any figures to-day—it will be found that there has been no actual decrease, that the coinage of the silver dollar has more than made up for the retirement of national-bank notes. Yet we are told to-day that there has been such contraction that prosperity has gone, that ruin stares us in the face.

Mr. President, if we should believe all that has been said within the last half hour we should believe that this was not a prosperous country, that it was a country from which prosperity had fled. We were told by the Senator from Nevada within the last five minutes that in the past ten years there had been no prosperity in the world except in India.

Mr. STEWART. Oh, no.

Mr. PLATT. The RECORD will show what the language of the Senator was. He said there was no prosperity in the world except in India, where silver was used. Mr. President, has not this country been prosperous for the last ten years? Has there ever been such prosperity on the face of the earth as this country has enjoyed in the last ten years? Why should it be thought necessary to run down our own country in order to pass an amendment of this sort? Whatever may be in question as to whether there has been contraction or not, if this amendment should pass we should have unlimited inflation. No man can now compute the amount of inflation which would occur under this measure.

The Senator from Nevada asks me why? I will endeavor to answer him. If I understand the reason for the decline of silver, when you have taken out all other elements that enter the determination of that question, silver has declined as all other things decline, because there has been an overproduction of it in the world, because there has been more silver than was required for coinage and other uses, including manufacturing and the arts, more than the people desired to use. That has been the reason for the decline in silver. Other things I know have entered in, but that universal law of supply and demand has not been without its effect upon the decline in silver.

What does this amendment propose to do? It proposes that there shall be no overproduction of silver in the world.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I wish to ask the Senator a question. If there has been such a great overproduction of silver in the world, and the cause for its decline, as the Senator has stated, is this overproduction, if the uses for it did not demand the whole of it, why is it that the same amount of silver will buy more of land and labor and all the commodities that enter into our daily life than it would before its demonetization?

Mr. PLATT. I am not going into that question. I am going to stand by this until somebody shows me that I am wrong, that silver has declined because there has been more produced of it than could be coined under the demonetization of silver in Europe, under our laws for coinage, and than could be used in the arts and manufactures. In other words, more silver was produced than there was use for. I think that will not be denied.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say that I will take occasion to deny it if I can get the floor, and I think I can show that there is not the slightest foundation for that statement.

Mr. PLATT. Very well. If that be true, silver is different from any other commodity on earth. When there is a full demand for a commodity the price increases; when there is not a sufficient demand for the production the price decreases; and I shall look with interest to facts and figures which overthrow this universal law with regard to prices.

But I was going to remark that if this bill passes the Senator from Nevada may well say there will be prosperity. There will, but it will be the prosperity which comes with inflation, to be followed at last by worse adversity. The history of the world has shown that when a government begins, upon the demand for more money, to increase its paper money, there is no end to that increase and inflation except absolute bankruptcy and financial ruin.

To be sure, this is not exactly the inflation of a mere paper currency, but it is an inflation which no man knows where it will stop. And why? Because if there be not now an overproduction of silver in the world, there will be an increased production of silver the moment this measure goes into operation. When any man owning a silver mine knows that he can take all his surplus silver to the United States Government and receive for it coin certificates, the business will be good and it will be pursued with renewed and redoubled energy, and the production will be increased.

I heard the Senator from Nevada say sotto voce that this bill would put silver at par. And why? Because it will furnish a customer for all the silver that can be mined in the whole world. And what will be the effect of that? Simply that mining will be more profitable, will attract new capital, will enlist new enterprise, and the more it is produced the more the Government must take of it and issue the coin certificates therefor, and this not only in the United States but throughout the world. There is nothing to prevent the bringing of silver to this country, and there is nothing to prevent any foreigner, anybody on the whole face of the wide globe, from bringing all his surplus silver to the Treasury of the United States and taking the coin certificates of this Government for it.

The very first words in the amendment—and they have not been changed—are that "any person," no matter whether he is mining silver in South America, Mexico, in Canada, in the Himalaya Mountains, can bring his silver in bullion to the United States Treasury and take coin certificates therefor. If the mining of silver is profitable now when silver is worth 70 cents on the gold dollar, will it not be very much more profitable when, by reason of having a market for every ounce of silver that can be mined in the whole globe—will it not be so much more profitable that the output of silver will be immensely increased? And that process is to go on? The Government is to take all the surplus silver there is now, be it $5,000,000 or $50,000,000, and when that is gone it is to take all that can be produced in the future.

Mr. President, while I would be entirely willing to consider the question of whether we have circulation enough now, whether our circulating medium is sufficient for our wants, and to adopt wise measures to increase that circulation if it be not sufficient for our wants, I am unwilling to enter upon any such unexplored sea as this proposed increase of our circulating medium.

I regret, Mr. President, that a measure of this importance should have been thus suddenly thrust upon the Senate—all the surplus silver of the world to be issued in coin certificates of the United States, and the coinage of gold and silver to cease except as the Secretary of the Treasury may order it to be done. I think that is in the amendment.

"No gold or silver shall be hereafter coined"——

Mr. STEWART. That is not the amendment.

Mr. PLATT. "Except what may be necessary in payment of the obligations of the United States expressly made payable in coin," etc.

The Senator says that has been stricken out.

Mr. STEWART. That is not the amendment. It is another amendment.

Mr. PLATT. It was the amendment which the Senator proposed to offer. If in this respect at least he has seen the unwisdom of his proposition and withdrawn that portion of his amendment, I am thankful for it.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRIS. As the whole financial question has been precipitated upon us in debate, I hardly think the Senate will find it convenient to continue the discussion longer to-day. In view of this fact I move that the Senate do now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. STEWART. I ask for an order that the amendment be printed as modified.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made if there be no objection. Before putting the question on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee the Chair will lay before the Senate sundry bills from the House of Representatives for reference.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills, received from the House of Representatives, were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

A bill (H. R. 1874) to change the eastern and northern judicial districts of Texas, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 4948) to amend section 988 of the Revised Statutes, regulating stays on executions in courts of the United States;

A bill (H. R. 8180) to regulate the liens of judgments and decrees of the courts of the United States; and

A bill (H. R. 8808) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for holding terms of United States courts at Vicksburg, Miss."

CLAIMS UNDER EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

Mr. DAWES submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to communicate to the Senate in detail and by the different classes therein named the amount allowed and disallowed of accounts for services of laborers, workmen, and mechanics under the second section of chapter 172 of the statutes of 1872, making appropriations to supply deficiencies, etc., and for other purposes.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CHARLOTTE, N. C.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask the Senator from Tennessee to yield to permit me to ask unanimous consent to call up a public-building bill which I think will elicit no discussion.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator can obtain unanimous consent, I shall not object.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 408, being Senate bill 907, to provide for the erection of a public building at Charlotte, N. C.

Mr. VANCE. I hope the Senate will proceed to the consideration of that bill.

By unanimous consent the bill (S. 907) to provide for the erection of a public building at Charlotte, N. C., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments, in section 1, line 3, after the word "of," to strike out "two hundred" and insert "one hundred and seventy-five;" in line 12, after the word "of," to strike out "two hundred" and insert "one hundred and seventy-five;" in line 15, after the word "of," to strike out "two hundred" and insert "one hundred and seventy-five;" and in line 19, after the word "alleys," to insert:

And that no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site to said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of North Carolina shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein. The Secretary of the Treasury may acquire said site by purchase, or by condemnation proceedings in the name of the United States.

So as to read:

That the sum of $175,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of erecting a United States court-house and post-office in the city of Charlotte, N. C., to be expended under the direction of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department. The site, and building thereon, when completed upon plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed in cost the sum of $175,000; and no plan for said building shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $175,000 for said building; and the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet, including streets and alleys. And that no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site to said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of North Carolina shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein. The Secretary of the Treasury may acquire said site by purchase, or by condemnation proceedings in the name of the United States.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. I offer the following amendment: After the word "of," in the sixth line, insert:

Purchasing or acquiring by condemnation proceedings or otherwise a site and of.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. Also after the word "erecting," in the sixth line, I move to insert the word "thereon."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. I move to strike out all after the word "Treasury," in the twenty-seventh line, and insert:

If in his judgment the public interest will be better subserved, may direct the location of said building on ground belonging to the United States situated in said city, a part of which is now occupied by the United States mint.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 1528) to reward the Esquimaux natives of the Asiatic coast of the Arctic Ocean for acts of humanity to shipwrecked seamen;

A bill (H. R. 1589) to provide for holding terms of the United States courts at Mississippi City;

A bill (H. R. 5373) to change the location of a certain alley in the city of Washington; and

A bill (H. R. 5723) to amend section 461 of the Revised Statutes, regulating fees for exemplifications of land patents, and for other purposes.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair first lays before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill (H. R. 5034) to provide for the purchase of United States bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury. The Senator from Tennessee moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 53 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, March 27, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate the 26th day of March, 1888.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, March 26, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. J. H. CUTHBERT, D. D., of Washington.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. ANDERSON, of Mississippi, for two days, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. WILKINS, for ten days, on account of business.

To Mr. SIMMONS, for six days, on account of important business.

FUNERAL CEREMONIES OF CHIEF-JUSTICE WAITE.

Mr. GROSVENOR, by unanimous consent, offered the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the funeral ceremonies of the late Chief-Justice Waite be held in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Wednesday, March 28, at 12 o'clock noon, under the arrangement of the Supreme Court, and that when the House adjourns on the 27th instant it shall be until 11.30 a. m. March 28.

Resolved, That the Clerk of this House notify the Senate and the Supreme Court of the passage of these resolutions.

The resolutions were adopted.

BUSINESS FROM THE COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE.

Mr. CLARDY. Mr. Speaker, Tuesday and Wednesday of this week have been set apart for the consideration of bills reported by the Committee on Commerce. In view of the unlooked-for and very sad event which deprives us of the use of Wednesday, I ask unanimous consent that the corresponding days of next week be allotted for the consideration of that business.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Mr. Speaker, I do not object, but I want to give notice that to-morrow morning, immediately after the morning hour, I shall call up the contested-election case of Worthington against Post.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, is the order which the chairman of the Committee on Commerce asks to have made to be on the same condition as the one for which it is to be substituted?

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understands.

Mr. CLARDY. Yes; after the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. After the hour for the consideration of bills.

Mr. O'FERRALL. I wish to add, Mr. Speaker, that I suppose the case of Worthington against Post will consume only a few moments of the time of the House. The report in the case is a unanimous one from the Committee on Elections, and I suppose there will be no discussion whatever.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARDY]?

Mr. WEAVER. I shall have to object for the present.

Mr. CLARDY. I trust the gentleman will not object. Unless we can have this order we shall lose both days.

Mr. WEAVER. I am willing to let the matter lie over until I can have a consultation with some other gentlemen. The proposed order would interfere with business in which I am greatly interested, and which I think equally as important as that of the Committee on Commerce. I do not wish to object unless I am compelled to——

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman objects for the present. This being Monday, the regular order is the call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions.

MINERAL LANDS, MONTANA.

Mr. TOOLE. Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from citizens of Montana with respect to the mineral lands of that Territory, and I ask unanimous consent that the body of the petition be printed in the RECORD, the petition itself being referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The petition is as follows:

To His Excellency the President of the United States and to the Senators and Representatives in Congress assembled:

Your petitioners most respectfully submit that they are all citizens of the United States, or have declared their intention to become such, and are all residents of the Territory of Montana.

That they are all interested in the protection and development of the mineral resources of said Territory.

That the Northern Pacific Railroad Company claim nearly all the odd-numbered sections of the surveyed portion of the mineral lands of said Territory, being gold, silver, lead, or copper, and has already caused the same to be certified to itself for patent by the United States land officers in said Territory.

That said certification has been based upon certain plats made by the deputy United States surveyors, and now on file in the respective United States land offices in said Territory, showing these lands so certified to be non-mineral in their character; which said plats are erroneous, in that they designate large quantities of mineral land as agricultural, mountainous timber lands.

That under the present acts of Congress, and the various decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States construing such acts, there is little, if any, hope of correcting the existing errors and of preventing said railroad company from acquiring titles to these lands.

That only within a few years has quartz mining proved to be a paying industry in Montana, and therefore the lands bearing the precious metals are to a large extent undeveloped.

That millions of dollars are now invested and are being invested in the development of such resources, the benefit of which will inure to the said railroad company if it is permitted to acquire title to the lands already certified to and to which it is not entitled.

That unless relief is granted said railroad company will soon acquire the absolute title to nearly one-half of the mineral land of this Territory.

That the acquirement of title to these lands by the said railroad company would not only work irreparable injury to the industries of the Territory of Montana and materially retard its progress, but would deprive all citizens of the United States of the right given them by the statutes to locate and appropriate our mineral lands, and would create one of the most colossal monopolies that ever existed.

Now, therefore, we most respectfully and earnestly pray that such legislation be had as will preserve the mineral lands of the Territory of Montana bearing the precious metals to the citizens of the United States and prevent the Northern Pacific Railroad Company from acquiring any lands to which it is not clearly entitled under its grant.

ARSENAL ON OR NEAR THE TENNESSEE RIVER.

Mr. WHEELER introduced a bill (H. R. 8832) to construct and establish an arsenal on or near the bank of the Tennessee River; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CHICAGO, BURLINGTON AND QUINCY RAILROAD.

Mr. LAWLER sent to the desk a paper; which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the locomotive engineers and firemen of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy road wish to call the attention of Congress and the public to the facts of the trouble now existing on the lines of the aforesaid railroad, and present the accompanying statement, to be referred to the Committee on Commerce, and that the same be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. This is not in order during the call of the States and Territories for the introduction of bills and resolutions.

Mr. LAWLER. I offer this as a resolution, the object being to get it before the committee and have it published.

The SPEAKER. It will go to the committee, if sent there as petitions usually are.

Mr. LAWLER. But, Mr. Speaker, is there any objection to the publication of this statement in the RECORD?

The SPEAKER. This is not the time to ask unanimous consent for that purpose. The Chair is now calling the States and Territories for the introduction of bills and resolutions for reference to the appropriate committees.

PAY OF NAVAL OFFICERS.

Mr. JACKSON. At the request of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. THOMAS], who is unable to be present, I introduce the bill which I send to the desk.

ADMISSION OF STATES.

Mr. SPRINGER submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That there be compiled, under the direction of the Committee on the Territories, a history of the several acts relating to the admission of States into the Union and the organization of the several Territories by acts of Congress, particularly with reference to the debates thereon, as shown by the Annals of Congress, Congressional Debates, or Congressional Globe, or RECORD; and the necessary expense attending the execution of this order shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on the approval of the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask to have it referred to the Committee on the Territories.

The SPEAKER. All matters relating to expenditures out of the contingent fund go to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to have it referred to the Committee on the Territories, that that committee may determine whether this expenditure should be recommended or not. In the event of a favorable report it can afterwards be referred to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. SOWDEN. I object.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Territories?

Mr. SPRINGER. I care nothing about it. Let it go to the Committee on Accounts.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Accounts.

WITHDRAWN LAND-GRANT LANDS.

Mr. SYMES introduced a bill (H. R. 8875) to protect purchasers of lands withdrawn by the executive department of the Government as lying within the limits of land grants in aid of the construction of railroads and afterwards held to lie without the limits of such grants; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

CLAIMS OF WORKMEN UNDER THE EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

Mr. ROCKWELL. Mr. Speaker, I have a petition of citizens of seventy localities throughout the Union which I desire to present. It is a petition for the settlement of the claims of workmen arising under the eight-hour law. I ask that the body of the petition, which is short, may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Let the petition be referred in the manner required by the rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas objects.

Mr. SMITH, of Wisconsin. I have here a memorial of citizens of Milwaukee in regard to foreign immigration, which I would like to have printed in the RECORD.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Let the memorial be referred in the usual way.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BOWDEN. I ask unanimous consent to present a report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] demands the regular order, which cuts off all requests for unanimous consent. The regular order is the consideration of business reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

SECTION 4693, REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, introduced a bill (H. R. 8876) to amend subsection 4 of section 4693 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to present a report at this time?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Is there no call for that business to-day?

The SPEAKER. There is not. This day, after the call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions, is assigned for the consideration of business reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

CHAPTER 20, REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. BURNETT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8877) to amend chapter 20 of the Revised Statutes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LAWLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask consent——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] has demanded the regular order. Unless that demand is withdrawn the Chair can not recognize any request.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I withdraw the demand for a moment, as the gentleman [Mr. LAWLER] was on the floor at the time I demanded the regular order.

The SPEAKER. What is the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. LAWLER. I have a statement of the locomotive engineers and firemen of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy lines of road which they desire presented for the information and consideration of Congress. I ask that the statement be read and be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

Resolved, That the locomotive engineers and firemen of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy lines of road present for the consideration of Congress and the public a statement of the causes which led to the strike now in existence on the aforesaid railroad, and that said statement be referred to the Committee on Commerce, and for the information of the members of Congress the same be printed in the RECORD.

THE FACTS AS THEY EXIST.

CHICAGO, March 17, 1888.

To the public:

The officers of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad Company have circulated throughout the country what we shall show to be a very misleading statement of the matters in issue between the engineers and firemen formerly employed on that road and themselves. For the purpose of more effectively misleading the public the circular is addressed to the engineers and firemen. Of course it is intended for the public.

We shall not resort to the trick of addressing the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy road, but address the public, for whom this is intended, directly.

In the road's circular referred to, which is under date of February 22, appears the following:

"The important changes which your committee suggest are as follows: 'First. Pay to be governed solely by the miles run, without regard to other conditions or circumstances.

"'Secondly. A large average increase in existing rates of pay.

"'Third. The abolition of any classification based upon length of service, age, or experience.'"

In relation to the first statement we reply that we have requested our compensation to be fixed by the mile, because that is the method upon which compensation is based on nine-tenths of the railroads in operation in the United States. It is misleading to say that this compensation is sought to be fixed "without regard to other conditions or circumstances."

True there are some runs on branches of the "Q" road where the engineer's responsibility appears to be less than that on the main lines, because he has to haul a smaller number of cars. But the road carefully conceals the fact that on all of these branches where the engineer has a smaller number of cars to care for he is compelled, at the end of his trip, to take care of his engine by performing the work known to engineers as that of a "hostler." The imposition of this labor upon him saves the company the expense of employing a man at this work. On the main lines the engineer's work is ended when his train is taken in to its point of destination, and the work of the hostler is done in the round-houses by an extra man employed for that purpose. It will, therefore, be seen by the public that the men who are supposed to have easy runs under the present system are compelled to do extra work in addition to those easy runs, and are so worked as to save the company the wages of a hostler.

While it is correctly stated that we ask our pay to be based upon the number of miles run, it must also be understood that we care very little about the terms used by the road. They can continue to pay by the trip in place of paying by the mile if they prefer that system, providing, however, that they pay us as much as other roads pay for trips of the same length. The fact is that it is as broad as it is long how the wages are computed, whether by mile or by trip. If the desire is to pay men honestly and fairly, without throwing any dust in their eyes, or in the eyes of the public, at the same rates as other roads, it will be seen that it is immaterial whether the compensation is termed by the trip or by the mile. To illustrate: If a man runs 100 miles on a passenger train we say he should be paid $3.50. This rate is paid by the Rock Island road, the Santa Fé road, the Wabash system, and other roads too numerous to mention. The "Q" road, not desiring to pay upon the basis which would enable a fair comparison of its wages to be made with those of other companies, abandons the mile scheme and simply says: "We will pay you $3 for the trip," which means, in other words, 3 cents per mile for what other roads pay 3½ cents for. We think this pretense is too transparent to need very much discussion.

Second. It is true that we demand a large average increase in existing rates of pay. But the public must not be misled into the supposition that we are demanding a large increase from the "Q" over what is paid by its rivals. If the "Q" gives to us the large increase which we demand, it will only then place us on a footing with the employés of other roads, and it will only then be called upon to pay precisely what its neighbors and rivals pay and have paid for years. If it is a fact that it will require a large average increase of our wages to be made before we are placed on an equality with the employés of other roads—and we concede that it is a fact—this only proves that for many years the "Q" has had the advantage of shaving from its employés a large portion of the wages which it should have paid them. Although in justice we ought to ask it to make restitution for the past, we do not do so. We only ask it to deal fairly with us in the future.

In answer to the third point made by the road, namely: That we ask the abolition of any classification based upon length of service, age, or experience, we have to say that that statement is also misleading. Our position is this: If an engineer be competent to take charge of the best train on the "Q" road, then he ought to get the best pay, and it is immaterial whether he is thirty or ninety years old. When the "Q" road places a man in charge of one of its great express trains, and intrusts to him the precious lives of its patrons, by that act it certifies that he is a first-class engineer, and he ought to receive pay on the road's own certificate.

Our position is: That a man who does the work of a first-class engineer ought to receive the pay of a first-class engineer.

The "Q's" position is this: It places a man in a position which requires at his hands the skill and ability of a first-class engineer. The first year he is in that position it pays him much less than a first-class engineer's wages. The second year it slightly advances his wages, but still keeps them less than the first-class engineers. The third year he is paid their highest wages for an engineer. The result is that it is constantly gaining from the men who are only serving in their first and second year a large discount of wages. It also gains all the percentages in this transaction, because a number of men who work the first or second year do not stay in the company's employ long enough to be entitled to the first-class wages that are given to the man who has served his third year. These first and second year men who happen to leave to engage in other occupations are replaced by other first and second year men, and so the road manages to keep a large percentage of employés at under rates. We have no objection to its paying those who have been a long time on the road any extra gratuity it wishes. Nor will we ever complain if in its generosity it desires to pension men who have served it faithfully for a great many years. But we do insist that one of two things must be true: Either, first, that the engineers are first-class men and entitled to first-class pay; or, second, that the public is deceived when it is asked to travel on trains run by men who are entitled only to second or third-class compensation.

What is said in relation to the engineer applies also to the case of the fireman, because on all the roads the fireman's wages are based upon those of the engineer, and the fireman receives from 55 to 60 per cent. of what the engineer's wages are. Therefore, a shaving down of the engineer's wages means a shaving down of the fireman's wages, so that on all sides the peculiar system adopted by the "Q" road manages to punish its workingmen and enlarge its treasury.

But have we just cause of complaint? Are the engineers and firemen of the "Q" road seeking to take any advantage of that corporation? Have they just cause of complaint? Are they paid now as well as employés performing like services on rival roads?

We invite the attention of the public to the following comparisons: On the "Q" road there is a round trip between Rockford and Aurora which is made twenty-six times a month by the engineer.

On the Northwestern road there is a round trip between Rockford and Chicago which is also made twenty-six times per month.

The Northwestern round trip is 22 miles greater than the "Q" round trip. The Northwestern engineer travels 572 miles per month more than the "Q's" engineer.

At the rate of compensation asked by the engineers namely, 3½ cents per mile, the Northwestern road should only pay $20.02 per month to the engineer on the Rockford-to-Chicago trip greater than that paid to the "Q" engineer who runs on the Rockford-to-Aurora trip. But the fact is that the "Q" road pays its engineer only $104 per month, while the Northwestern pays its engineer $175. The "Q" engineer holds just as responsible a position as the engineer on the Northwestern. He has to cross three intersecting roads in the making of his trip, and in addition to his work as an engineer the labor of hostlering, or caring for the engine, is imposed upon him, while the engineer for the Northwestern is not obliged to care for his engine. The latter's work begins when he jumps on the engine at one end of the trip and ceases when he delivers it at the other end.

On the Pan Handle road the freight engineer who runs from Indianapolis to Bradford, a distance of 105 miles, receives $4.25 for the trip; his fireman receives $2.15.

On the "Q" road the round trip run from Galesburgh to Peoria is 105 miles, for which the engineer receives $3.60 and the fireman $2.10.

From Quincy to Colchester the round trip is 107 miles. The "Q" road pays its engineer for that trip $3.75, and its fireman $2.15.

For runs of 100 miles on the Union Pacific road the engineer on passenger trains receives $3.85. The "Q" road is a competitor of the Union Pacific, and for a long distance travels over parallel lines through country of precisely the same character. Yet we have only asked $3.50 per 100 miles for a passenger engineer on the "Q" road.

The engineer on the Sterling Branch run draws $34.10 for 90 miles. He stops in Rock Falls six hours, and takes care of his own engine. The engineer that runs the Batavia and Geneva accommodation receives $87.10. And the Chicago and Northwestern pays for like runs $96.20, the distance being 2 miles greater on the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy.

The reason we ask more pay for the branch runs is to compensate the men for the extra work done on account of the engineers having to do the work of a machinist.

The engineer on the Rockford way freight runs nightly (twenty-six nights constituting one month), for which he receives $56. Fireman, $35 per month.

The engineers on the fast mail, Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, 125 miles per day, receive $97.50 for twenty-six days' time. The engineers on the Chicago and Northwestern, for the same services, receive $120.

The runs on the main line of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, 125 miles per day thirty-five days per month, amount received, $131. On the trunk lines out of Chicago for the same service the engineers receive $161.

The engineers on the Buda and Vermont Branch of the "Q" line, 188.3 miles per day, twenty-six days constituting one month, receive for same $125.50. The Chicago and Northwestern Railroad pays for like service $181.

We desire further to state that no first-class engineer on the Chicago and Northwestern receives less than $96.20 for twenty-six days' work, if ready for duty

The Rock Island road pays its engineers on all of its passenger trains $3.60 and its firemen $2.15 for the 100-mile run from Galesburgh to Quincy.

The Quincy road only pays $3.50 for this same run to the engineers on a few of its heaviest trains—like the Kansas City one—and on all other trains it pays only $3.37½. It only pays its fireman $2 when with the engineer who is paid $3.50, and $1.90 when with the engineer who receives $3.37½.

The Rock Island road pays $4.15 for a run of 100 miles to its freight engineers, and does not require them to act as hostlers for their engines.

The Quincy road pays its freight engineer on the 101-mile run from Galva to New Boston $3.75. This run is on a branch road, and the engineer is compelled to do hostler's duty for his engine at both ends of his run.

Let us compare two short runs: The first is on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul road. The round trip between Chicago and Elgin is 74 miles, for which the engineer is paid $3.70. The engineer has full control of his time every second day and has not to act as hostler for his engine. The second is on the "Q" road. The round trip between Chicago and Aurora is 77 miles. The engineer is paid $3.35. He has to "hostler" his engine, and his entire time belongs to the road. Some days he has to be under orders for eighteen hours per day.

Complaint is made in the road's circular because we asked that "Galesburgh Division engineers and firemen be not required to run east of Aurora." The idea sought to be conveyed by the company is that this request is unreasonable and calculated to impose greater expense on the road. The fact is that compliance with this request will not impose one cent of extra expense on the road. No objection has been offered to running the engines through from Galesburgh to Chicago. The change of crews—engineers and firemen—at Aurora will not increase the company's outlay. There are about three hundred of the engineers and firemen who live in Aurora. Many of these men own their homes; some of these homes, however, are not entirely paid for. If they are compelled to run from Galesburgh to Chicago and return, they would have to sacrifice their property and remove either to Galesburgh or to Chicago. They ask that the crews be made to run on the one end of the route only, from Chicago and Aurora and return, and on the other end only from Galesburgh to Aurora and return. If we were paid on the mile system, the change of crews would not cost the road one cent.

It is also complained that we asked that some arrangement be made in relation to passing Brotherhood men on the "Q" trains. We make no demand in this regard. Our purpose in making this request was to get some uniform rule put in force on this road the same as prevails on other roads. We have no right to demand this. We did not demand it. Our desire was, while we were negotiating to get this question, now unsettled, so determined that the conductors would hereafter know precisely what to do, and thus be able to avoid conflicts. The company can decide this as it pleases. It does not stand in the road of a settlement.

S. E. HOGE,
Chairman Committee.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its secretaries, announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 2494) to provide for the payment of the funeral expenses of the late Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that that bill be now considered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was about to lay it before the House. The Chair lays before the House the bill just received from the Senate, which will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 2494) to provide for the payment of the funeral expenses of the late Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court.

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to defray the expenses necessarily incurred in the funeral of Morrison R. Waite, late Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States; to be disbursed by the marshal of the Supreme Court upon vouchers to be approved by the senior associate justice of said court.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with consideration of this bill in the Committee of the Whole, and that it be now considered in the House.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon ordering the bill to be read a third time.

Mr. TAULBEE. I believe the House has heretofore adopted a resolution providing for the payment of certain of these expenses out of the contingent fund of the House. I presume this bill will operate in lieu of that resolution.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COX moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GOVERNMENT FOR ALASKA.

Mr. SPRINGER, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on the Territories, as a substitute for House bill 6555, a bill (H. R. 8878) to provide for the organization of the Territory of Alaska; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

House bill 6555 was, by unanimous consent, laid on the table.

NATURALIZATION.

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8879) to amend the naturalization laws of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

ANATOMICAL SCIENCE IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I demand the regular order, and call up the bill which was undisposed of when the House adjourned on the last District day—House bill No. 5040—for the promotion of anatomical science and to prevent the desecration of graves in the District of Columbia.

Mr. GROUT. The pending question is on the motion to lay this bill upon the table, which is not debatable. I ask unanimous consent to make a brief statement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TAULBEE. Not if the same length of time be allowed to the other side of the question.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. That is fair.

Mr. TAULBEE. If the gentleman from Vermont desires to discuss only the question of laying the bill on the table, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. That is the only question before the House, but of course it involves the merits of the bill.

Mr. GROUT. I trust the gentleman from Kentucky will not object to a brief statement on my part. He occupied an hour the other day, and at the close of his speech moved to lay the bill on the table. There has been no chance for any one to be heard in reply to him.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont asks unanimous consent to make a brief statement. Is there objection?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. In connection with that request I ask that the same time be allowed to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] to make a statement.

Mr. TAULBEE. I hope the gentleman from Kansas will withdraw that request. I do not know that I shall want any further time.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Very well, I withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont? The Chair hears none. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, on the last District day, when this bill was under consideration, and after all the funny men of the House had had their little joke concerning it, as a member of the committee reporting it I tried to get recognition for the purpose of showing how little all that had been said in opposition to it really touched the question whether or not it was wholesome legislation for this District. And here let me say, in passing, that I expect the "fathers" foresaw the necessity that gentlemen who should occupy these seats should be kept somewhat familiar with small things, and accordingly they wrote in the Constitution that Congress should have exclusive legislation over such District, not exceeding ten miles square, as should be ceded, etc., and as the result the 250,000 people of this District bring all their public matters, small though some of them be, to the attention of Congress; and in the organization of the House the humble duty is assigned to the Committee on the District of Columbia of recommending such legislation as in their opinion the wants of this people require. Now, all that this committee ask, all they can ask, is that when these measures are brought in gentlemen will for a time come down from the lofty heights where they are accustomed to consider questions involving national and international topics and give to these local matters a respectful consideration.

When I requested the other day to be heard, I was asked whether twenty minutes would satisfy me. Now, I did not wish to occupy half that time, and do not now; but I was unwilling to capitulate to these frolicsome gentlemen in the mood in which they then were, which it seemed to me had become, for a subject so grave, exceedingly gay—so gay as to deny what common courtesy would accord to the committee reporting a bill, namely, the privilege of being heard in their own time under the rules of the House in reply to an attack as remarkable as that made upon this bill.

But enough. Now, this is what I then wanted to say: First, that when the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] admitted, as he did, and as the House will remember, that the purpose of his amendment was to defeat the object of the bill, he put himself in the attitude of attacking the bill indirectly, covertly, if you please, instead of stating in a frank, straight forward manner his objections to the bill.

I wanted also to say to him that if he had read the bill carefully, as I trust members have done since it was last under consideration, he would not have turned the brilliant period that he did about the bodies of the poor being turned over to college professors for display in some medical museum; for the bill in express terms provides that after a body has been used for purposes of anatomical dissection the remains shall be decently buried.

For another thing, I wanted to say to gentlemen, if they had been disposed to consider this bill fairly and upon its merits they would not have become so sentimental, nor would they have shed big tears over the misfortunes of the poor, especially after they are dead. We all know that all first-class statesmen lie awake nights thinking of the poor while they are alive; but this devotion to the dead, such as was shown by gentlemen the other day, is a pitch of enthusiasm to which few can rise.

Let me not, however, be understood as saying anything disrespectful of the poor, living or dead. Their misfortunes and sufferings should command the sympathy and assistance of all men. The poor, it is said, we have with us always. But I think the best time to help them is while they are alive, and not wait till after they are dead.

I wish also to remind the gentleman from Kentucky that this bill in terms provides for the bodies of those who die in hospital, prison, almshouse, jail, or asylum, and that sometimes rich men have been found in jails and prisons; and according to the philosophy of the gentleman more still should be found there. What, then, becomes of the argument that the provisions of this bill apply to the poor alone?

Mr. TAULBEE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. GROUT. Certainly.

Mr. TAULBEE. In that connection what explanation do you put on that provision that only those who are buried at the public expense shall be included?

Mr. GROUT. It does not say only those buried at the public expense. The word only is not used——

Mr. TAULBEE. Read that part of the bill in this connection.

Mr. GROUT. It says:

> The bodies of such deceased persons as are required to be buried at the public expense.

Mr. TAULBEE. Does the bill cover any whose remains are not buried at the public expense?

Mr. GROUT. Perhaps not; it does not exclude those not buried at the public expense.

There is one other point to which I wish to call attention, and that is in reference to the veto message of the President of a similar bill in the last Congress, which the gentleman has caused to be read as a part of his remarks. The President said in that message:

> The purpose of this bill is to permit the delivery of certain dead bodies to the medical colleges located in the District of Columbia for dissection.
> Such disposition of the bodies of unknown and pauper dead is only excused by the necessity of acquiring by this means proper and useful anatomical knowledge, and the laws by which it is permitted should, in deference to a decent and universal sentiment, carefully guard against abuse and needless offense.

From the above it appears that the President is not opposed to the principle of the bill, but is really in favor of it. And I am obliged to the gentleman for having brought in the veto.

And I say so far the opinion of the President is an argument in favor of this bill, inasmuch as all his objections to the former bill have been carefully obviated in this draught. But without further following gentlemen in their groping about to discover what some one else may think of the bill, let us, like men, say what we think of it ourselves. Now, one moment as to the merits of the bill. Everybody knows that without a complete and thorough knowledge of anatomy the physician or surgeon is not fit to practice his profession. Everybody knows also that the only way in which the surgeon can acquire a practical knowledge of anatomy is by the dissection of the cadaver. The medical colleges of the country are constantly turning out an army of young practitioners to take the places of those who are passing off the stage. A medical college in this city only the other day—in fact since the last District day—graduated twenty-four of them.

Now, tell me what sort of ministers to the physical ills that flesh is heir to would these young men be without an intimate and thorough knowledge of the anatomy of the human body, which knowledge can only be acquired by a minute and careful dissection of every part of it, and how are these young men to make this dissection without subjects for that purpose? They must have them—they will have them. The experience of the world shows that it is absolutely necessary. Now, how shall this demand be supplied? That is the question. Shall it be by the present ghoulish practice of body-snatching, and under which it is said from one to two hundred bodies have been resurrected in this city within the last year?

Does any one ask why not supply the demand in that way? Then I answer, because in the first place it is a scandalous and demoralizing business to those engaged in it. In the second place, it is a standing terror to mourning friends who have just buried their dead. Now, the provisions of this bill are intended for the living and not for the dead, as the gentleman seemed to understand, or rather misunderstood, the other day. It is intended for the benefit of the living friends of the dead, and if adopted it will quiet all apprehension on the part of the friends of those dying outside the institutions named in the bill, as against the work of the Washington resurrectionist.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. GROUT. Certainly.

Mr. MILLIKEN. What effect will this bill have upon the feelings of a man who knows he has got to die in the poor-house, and can not get out of it?

Mr. GROUT. He may request that his body shall be interred in the usual way, and in that event, under the provisions of this bill, that request must be regarded.

Mr. TAULBEE. Suppose he dies of apoplexy?

Mr. GROUT. If he had not in advance of such a misfortune made such a request, I should say it would be too late after he was dead of apoplexy.

Mr. TAULBEE. In that case he would not have had an opportunity during his last illness to have acted as directed by this bill to save his body from that fate.

Mr. GROUT. As a gentleman on my right suggests, he would not then have had occasion to worry about it.

Mr. TAULBEE. But his friends might, perhaps.

Mr. GROUT. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, this bill is for the benefit of the living; and if it be adopted it will quiet the apprehensions of those who are outside of these institutions; and at the same time the bill carefully respects the wishes of the friends of those dying within the institutions named in the bill. It allows any relation by birth or marriage or any friend to request the burial of any person of this last class, and such request must be respected.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Let me interrupt the gentleman again to ask: Do I understand he is going to make a distinction against people who do not happen to have friends?

Mr. GROUT. The bill only does what the gentleman's own State has done. But to answer the gentleman more to his satisfaction perhaps, I will say that the bill goes upon the idea that a person dying in any of these institutions without friends to claim his body had better be turned over to the medical schools than that the dead in the churchyards, whose friends are still living in the vicinity, should be disturbed.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I am not discussing what my State has done or may do, but what the gentleman's bill is intending to do.

Mr. GROUT. Again I repeat, this bill is for the benefit of the living, and the living friends of those who may die both in these institutions and outside of them.

But, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Kentucky admitted the other day, on an inquiry addressed to him by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE]—and I take it that he is a recognized authority upon theological questions—whether it would make any difference in the great Resurrection whether a body had been dissected or not, that it would not.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Why, then, do you make any distinction between the poor and the rich?

Mr. GROUT. There is no distinction whatever; it applies equally to all. It is for the benefit of all alike.

Mr. SOWDEN. Do I understand the gentleman to say that there are enough people dying in these institutions to supply the demand of which he speaks in this city?

Mr. GROUT. I understand so. I understand that the supply would be ample for the requirements of the local medical institutions.

So we see, Mr. Speaker, that this bill provides for this supply in the way I have shown, giving no offense, no needless offense, in the guarded language of the President, to any one. It supplies a demand that is absolutely necessary and will be met from some source. It will also tend to break up this nefarious, this ghastly and criminal business of robbing grave-yards in the District of Columbia, by means of which that supply is now made.

Mr. SOWDEN. What assurance can the gentleman give the House upon that subject?

Mr. GROUT. Only the assurance which arises from the very nature of things.

Mr. SOWDEN. Suppose all of these people who die in these institutions file a protest that they want to be buried.

Mr. GROUT. That is a mere supposition.

Mr. SOWDEN. It is at least a decent supposition.

Mr. GROUT. To be sure, but it is hardly a reasonable supposition. Such a result would at least be quite improbable.

I said a moment ago that this business of grave-robbing was a criminal one. Have you ever thought how unfair it is to the medical profession, and how inconsistent also, for the law to hold them to a strict accountability, as it does, for any carelessness or error in their surgical work, oftentimes bringing them into court and assessing them in damages for not doing that work correctly, and yet not only not providing them with the means of information which would enable them to do well their work—I say not only does the law do this, but it does more; it forbids the obtaining that necessary information under heavy penalties, such as exist for the disturbance of the dead after they are buried.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman permit a further question?

Mr. GROUT. To be sure.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Then, if I understand this bill, it provides that if a man is poor and dies in an asylum or in a poor-house, in order to save his body from going to the dissecting-table he has got to make a request that after he is deceased he is to be buried; while if he was placed in better circumstances and dies in his own home his body will not go, no matter whether he makes the request or not. Why, therefore, do you make this distinction against the poor fellow? He has got to go to the doctors for dissection unless he makes this special request, while everybody else will go to the church-yard for interment.

Mr. GROUT. I apprehend that the gentleman from Maine has not made a careful study of this bill, as he seems to have imbibed some of the strange sentiments in reference to it that animate others.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I am waiting an explanation from the gentleman himself.

Mr. GROUT. I am afraid I shall be unable to make the gentleman understand this bill as I would like to have him.

Mr. Speaker, when interrupted I was addressing myself to the inconsistency of the law, where a medical practitioner is held to a strict accountability in the practice of his profession, an accountability which he can not avoid, while on the other hand you make criminal the means whereby he alone can acquire that thorough knowledge of his profession which the law supposes him to have. Just think of this proposition for a moment. Can it be that a civilized people will long tolerate such contradiction in their legal system? And yet that is the law in the District of Columbia to-day—here where stands the Capitol of this great American people.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman from Vermont allow me to interrupt him again?

Mr. GROUT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLIKEN. This is the objection I make: that to save doctors from the necessity of body-snatching you provide for that difficulty by taking the bodies of the poor. Why do you make any distinction? Why should not the man who is worth a hundred million dollars and who has not filed his protest against his body being used in that way, why should not his body be assigned to the doctors as well as that of the poor devil who dies in a poor-house?

Mr. GROUT. I leave the gentleman from Maine to study out an answer to that question for himself. And now, to resume my statement, this bill, as we have shown, will cure this glaring inconsistency in the law, and will at the same time supply this reasonable and necessary demand of the medical profession. Nor is it a new thing in legislation. Most if not all the older and more advanced States of the Union have adopted this principle, including the State of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN] and the State of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN]. England also, from whence came the fabric of our jurisprudence, long since enacted such a law, the pioneer act in the history of this kind of legislation.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. GROUT. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. As I understand the position of the gentleman from Vermont it is this, that when any man dies, whether he is poor or rich, it makes no difference to the dead man whether he goes on the dissecting-table or not. But it does make a difference as regards the feelings of the living. Now, in the class of cases provided for in this bill where the man himself does not object to it, where he does not make his objection known, and where there is no living relative or friend who makes the objection, I understand the body of such a man goes on the dissecting-table upon the theory that the feelings of the living are not outraged.

Mr. GROUT. Precisely so. The gentleman has the correct conception of the bill. It must be remembered also that the use of subjects for dissection is of absolute necessity, and that they must either be provided by law or they must be obtained in contravention of law, and no legal system is in keeping with high civilization that does not provide in a legitimate and legal manner for furnishing means of information in this way to doctors with a view to a successful practice of their profession.

Mr. MASON. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. GROUT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MASON. As a matter of fact in those States which have adopted this law is it not true that the habit of grave-robbing has been substantially broken up?

Mr. GROUT. That is true, as I understand it.

Mr. MILLIKEN. But who can tell whether in those States they have stopped snatching bodies or not. That is not a thing that is done in the light.

Mr. GROUT. But in those States we do not hear of cases of grave-robbing.

Mr. MILLIKEN. You do not hear much of them in any community.

Mr. GROUT. Oh, yes; Washington papers are full of such cases. If the gentleman reads those newspapers, every now and then he will find a sickening and disgusting account of dragging from its last resting place some corpse for dissection.

Mr. Speaker, I have said all that I wanted and much more than I intended, but have been led on by interruptions. I will only add that the Committee on the District of Columbia are unanimously of the opinion that this bill ought to become a law; and should the House refuse to agree to the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] that the bill be ordered to lie on the table, and it should seem necessary, other members of the committee will have something to say upon it. I thank the House for the courtesy extended in listening to this statement.

Mr. HEMPHILL. If the House shall vote down the motion to lay the bill on the table, I should like to be heard in discussion of it. I think I can give some information which may assist the House in understanding the necessity for this bill.

Mr. TAULBEE. If I am permitted to do so, I will withdraw for the time being the motion to lay the bill on the table, so that the chairman of the committee may have such time as he desires in support of the bill and that the matter may be open to discussion on either side. I made an effort two weeks ago to obtain unanimous consent to let the committee have the time allowed under the rules for debate, but I was not recognized for that purpose in consequence of an objection being made. That was my purpose then and is my purpose now.

The SPEAKER. The motion to lay on the table having been withdrawn, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] is recognized.

Mr. HEMPHILL. When this bill was up for discussion the other day the committee had not an opportunity to present its views. I desire now to make a few suggestions in addition to what has been said by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON] and this morning by the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GROUT].

There can be no question there is a necessity, with a view to the investigations of science, that there should be some human bodies furnished to the medical students of this country; and it is only the question as to how that shall be done which is proposed to be settled by this bill.

It is not worth while to argue the question of the necessity of that kind of knowledge. It is required by the medical board of the Army, it is required by the medical board of the Navy, it is required by the Marine Corps, that every man, before he can enter the medical service of the Army or Navy or Marine Corps, shall demonstrate on the human body what he knows of its anatomy.

Now, gentlemen, the only question is whether this shall be done in a legitimate, regular way, or whether it shall be done in violation of law and in defiance of decency. A good deal has been said here about this bill being aimed at the poor people and intended for the protection of the rich. Mr. Speaker, I do not pose here as a special friend of any particular class of people. I think that every man in these United States who is an honest, upright, patriotic citizen is entitled to as much consideration as anybody else, whether he be rich or whether he be poor. But is this bill aimed at the poor people? Is it not rather framed for their benefit? We all know, sir, that the rich people of this country and of all other countries are perfectly able by the use of money to take care of themselves while living and to take care of their dead when they are laid in their last resting place.

The rich are able to build tombs of marble, and to surround them with walls of iron and stone which the "resurrectionists" can not break through, and therefore it is of no particular importance to them whether this bill or any other for a similar purpose passes here or not. But there are a great many people in this District, worthy, upright, and respectable citizens, men who fight the battles of the country, who pay its taxes; people who are entitled to protection at the hands of the law when living, and it is our duty to give their dead protection when it can be done in a proper and legitimate way. It is a well-known fact that since the 1st of January last there have been several cases reported in the newspapers of this District where bodies of people entirely respectable, but in moderate circumstances, have been "snatched" from their graves and carried to the dissecting-tables of the medical colleges. Now, how is that to be regulated? It is impossible to prevent the medical students from getting bodies for dissection.

They always have got them and they always will get them. But how are you going to prevent it? What does this bill provide? It provides, in the first place, that where people die in the almshouses, hospitals, jails, or asylums, etc., of this District who do not make any request to be buried, whose bodies have lain there unclaimed by any person, either white or black, relative or friend, for the period of forty-eight hours, cases in which no relative either by blood or by marriage comes to claim that the body shall be buried, where no person claiming to stand in even the very indefinite relation of a friend comes and asks that the body shall be buried—when these conditions exist, and when, in addition, it meets with the approval of the health officer of the District, a sworn responsible official, whose duty it is under this bill to look after these matters—when all these contingencies concur, then the body may be delivered for the use of the medical colleges, and not until then.

Mr. LYNCH. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. LYNCH. Is there any provision made for giving public notice of these deaths?

Mr. HEMPHILL. There is no provision made in this bill, but if the House sees fit to adopt an amendment requiring an advertisement to be published, I have no objection.

There is no purpose on the part of the committee to do anything but what is entirely fair and proper in the matter.

Mr. TAULBEE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. TAULBEE. In enumerating the conditions provided for in the bill as antecedent to the delivery of a body to the medical colleges the gentleman mentioned the death of the person in the jail, the hospital, or the asylum, and the fact that the body must have remained forty-eight hours unclaimed by friend or relative, but I believe he omitted one very important condition which the bill sets forth and to which I would like to have him direct his attention, namely, the provision that the person must be buried at the public expense. I would like to hear the gentleman on that point.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will come to that presently, Mr. Speaker. The gentleman is exceedingly apprehensive upon that subject. As I have already said, the rich are able to take care of themselves while they are living and their friends are able to take care of them when they are dead. There is another very large class of people who, though not rich, have as many friends and as many relations as the rich, and whose bodies are just as well protected by this bill as those of rich people or of anybody else. The law of this District now is that if a body is not claimed by a friend or relative, it is the duty of the District authorities to bury it, whether it be the body of a rich person or the body of a poor person, and I think it will hardly be maintained by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] that the poor people of this District are so inhuman, or that their relatives are so forgetful of the ties that bind them to their own blood kin, that they will not go and ask to be allowed to bury them. This bill does not say a poor man, it does not say a rich man, it says a man who is buried at the public expense; that is, a man who has no friends who take enough interest in him to ask that he shall be buried. No man whose friends or relations will take the trouble to ask that he be buried, no matter whether he be rich or poor, will be so forgotten as to be buried at the public expense.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in addition to that, there are, unfortunately, in any community embracing so large a population as this city, a considerable number of women who by lives of shame have cut themselves off from all ties which might bind them to their blood relations, and there are men whose conduct has been such that their relatives and those who may once have been their friends would not recognize them when living or mourn for them when dead. It is this class of people whose bodies this bill proposes to operate upon, with the view of saving the living, whether poor or rich, from the harassing experience of having their loved ones snatched from their last resting place.

This bill is not aimed at the poor any more than at the rich. It is intended to protect those people who, when burying their dead, are now obliged to leave them to the mercy of the grave-digger and the body-snatcher.

I know that in the view of some persons it looks like a rather severe measure to provide by law that certain bodies shall be taken to the dissecting-table. But, Mr. Speaker, we can do the dead no good and we can do them no harm. This bill, like all other bills, should be framed for the protection of the living; and it is with the view of saving living persons from having their minds harassed with uncertainty as to what has been done with the bodies of their beloved dead that the House is asked to pass this bill.

Mr. WEAVER. But we impose upon certain classes named by the gentleman a certainty that their bodies are to be dealt with in this way——

Mr. HEMPHILL. No, sir.

Mr. WEAVER. And that would be harassing to them.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will state very distinctly my position on this question. I think that when persons have so conducted themselves while living as to forfeit the respect of society, have led such lives of shame that after their death no friend or relative can be found to take interest enough in them to ask that their bodies shall be buried even at public expense, it would be no great hardship if we allow the bodies of such persons to be taken for dissection, provided they do not before death request otherwise, and provided that the health officer of the District of Columbia says that they are proper subjects for anatomical study.

Mr. WEAVER. I do not subscribe to any such doctrine as that. It would be far better for the Government to institute houses of correction and to adopt other reformatory measures for the creatures referred to by the gentleman than to notify them before they die that as a penalty for the character of their lives they shall after death be laid upon the dissecting-table and cut to pieces.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not indulge in any such sickly sentimentalism as that.

Mr. WEAVER. Oh, yes; it is "sickly." Anything in favor of humanity is "sickly" in the estimation of men who will bring in a bill of this kind.

Mr. HEMPHILL. It is "sickly" to be indulging in appeals of that kind.

Mr. WEAVER. The gentleman has no right to impugn my motives. I have as much right to express my views here without having my motives impugned as he has; and I say my views are just as much in accord with humanity and good government—yes, more so—than the views he has expressed here, which ought to send a thrill of horror throughout this House and the whole country.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will come to that. I am not going to report here any bill which I am not willing to stand by. I have as much respect for any class of people who are honest, patriotic, law-abiding, as any man in this House, and I do not care whether they be rich or poor. But I do say that it is the duty of the Government to legislate for the benefit of those citizens who are honest, upright, straightforward; who support the institutions of the country; who are patriotic in their desires; who fight its battles and make the country worth living in. And when the question is presented whether in our legislation we shall look to those who have forfeited all respect, who have led disgraceful lives, who have cut themselves off from all the tenderest ties of humanity by their own willful misconduct, or whether we shall regard the sentiment of the upright, honest, law-abiding people of the country, I will not hesitate to make my decision in favor of the more worthy class; and I am not afraid to announce it on this floor.

Mr. WEAVER. Let me ask the gentleman this question: Under this bill can not the body of a soldier who fought in the Union Army be sent to the dissecting-table as well as that of a man who has led a "life of shame?" As I understand, there is no exception in favor of the Union soldier.

Mr. HEMPHILL. A gentleman on the other side proposed the other day an amendment to protect that class of citizens by directing that notice should be given in any such case to the Grand Army post of the District; and, so far as I am concerned, I will vote for that amendment.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I ask the gentleman how his description about leading a "life of shame" applies to persons who happen to die in the hospital or the poor-house or whose bodies are taken to the morgue? May not such persons have lived as honest lives as the gentleman from South Carolina or myself or anybody else, and may they not have died under these circumstances on account of mere misfortune?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Exactly; and the body of any man dying under such circumstances of misfortune can not be taken for dissection unless with the approval of the health officer of the District, and unless he has no friends or relatives to ask that his body be buried.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Why do you not apply the same provision to everybody else?

Mr. HEMPHILL. It is applied to everybody.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Oh, no; it is not.

Mr. WEAVER. Why not apply the provisions of the bill to rich men who have led "lives of shame?"

Mr. HEMPHILL. I say, Mr. Speaker, that the bill makes no discrimination between the rich and the poor. The gentleman from Kentucky the other day, when he slipped the bridle and galloped all over this House without restraint, undertook to say that this measure is an insult, an indignity offered to the poor people of this country. Let us see whether members of this House who are going to vote for this bill, as I trust many of them will, will violate in so doing the best sentiment of the country. I have taken some pains to look into this matter a little, and find that according to the law of the State of Connecticut bodies to be used for dissection are defined as those "which shall not have been buried within twenty-four hours after death, nor claimed for burial by any relative or friend; but the body of no person known to have relatives or friends shall be so delivered without their consent." This is almost the exact language of the present bill.

The great State of Iowa, from which, I think, my friend has the honor to come, and which, judging from its representative, is a tender-hearted country, provides that a coroner or undertaker in any county of the State of Iowa, or of any city where the inhabitants exceed 1,000, may deliver to any college or any physician in the State of Iowa the body or remains of any deceased person, except where such body has been interred or dressed for interment, or bodies of those known to have relatives or friends. That is in the State of Iowa, where we have the right to presume there is civilization. That State provides that any coroner or undertaker, any man who sets himself up to bury others, may give the body of any deceased person to any medical college or physician, except where such body has been interred or dressed for interment or of those known to have relatives or friends. It is not provided this shall be done under the supervision of the health officer, as I recall the statute; but whenever the coroner or undertaker shall deem it fit to do so, he can turn over the bodies of any such persons to any college or to any one having a sheep-skin for the purpose of cutting them up.

When my friend from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] was talking the other day about the Scriptures and about the potter's field, and charging this committee with having offered an indignity to the poor people of this country, the good people of his own State of Kentucky, assembled by their representatives at the capital of that State, were considering a bill to deliver unclaimed bodies of people over to the medical men of any institution of that State. And that bill has passed the house since then, and is now being considered in the senate, and according to the best information I have been able to procure, the law will pass that body. So that Kentucky is coming into line amongst the civilized States of the Union, and is opposed to body-snatching and in favor of the regulation of this business by some legitimate means.

Mr. TAULBEE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Certainly.

Mr. TAULBEE. I wish to ask whether the State from which he comes has a law similar to the one which he presents to this House? If it has not I would like to know from him why it has not; I would like to know why his State has not come up to the line of civilization, as he terms it?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Anybody who knows anything of the civilization of this country never doubted South Carolina in that regard. I do not think it is necessary she should pass a law of this kind in order to prove her civilization.

Now, in addition to what I have already said, I desire to state that I have gone over the statutes of the States of this Union to some extent, and I find there are thirty-one of the States and Territories, including the District of Columbia, where there are medical colleges. In eighteen, including the State of Tennessee, which is somewhat peculiar, there are laws like unto the one here proposed, some of which are much broader, and very few of which are as well guarded as this. In Connecticut, Missouri, Arkansas, Indiana, Illinois, Oregon, Iowa, Colorado, Maryland, New Hampshire, Ohio, Michigan, New York, Pennsylvania, Minnesota, and Nebraska statutes of this character are in existence, and one with similar provisions is being enacted in the State of Kentucky.

Mr. Speaker, in all those States there is a provision that unclaimed bodies shall be given over to medical colleges, and in some that they shall be given over to any physician desiring them for dissection. It is especially provided in a number of the States that the unclaimed bodies shall be those which are buried at the public expense, and that is the phraseology which is used in this bill.

The State of Maryland, which lies in juxtaposition to this District, has a law almost identical in phraseology to this bill, some changes having been made in the pending bill for the purpose of meeting the objection urged by the President in his veto message.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it looks like a pretty hard thing to be legislating about matters of this kind. We have to legislate about a good many things which are not very pleasant. It is a hard thing to say that a man for doing a certain thing shall be incarcerated in prison, or shall be hung between heaven and earth, but these things experience has proved are necessary for the protection of society and for the preservation of decency and good order.

This District has a number of medical colleges, which require from seventy to eighty bodies every year for the purpose of instructing their students in anatomy, in order that they may go out into the world and practice for the cure of the living. Now, for a number of years the practice of body-snatching has been going on in this District as it has been going on in other places throughout the Union where they have not enacted a law similar to the one now pending. The question at last comes down to this: Whether or not we will do something toward giving to the people of this District the same protection which the majority of the States of the Union have already given to their people by providing, as is done in this bill, that unclaimed bodies buried at the public expense, whether rich or poor, shall be turned over to the medical colleges which may require them for dissection by their students.

And I say if there is a man in this House who believes that the violation and contempt of the laws of this District should be permitted to go on unchecked, and thinks that the business of the resurrectionist, the business of the man who robs the graves of our people at midnight, should be unmolested, then let him vote against the bill. But if there are people who believe that this business, which is a necessity, which is known and recognized and winked at by the police and other authorities of the District, ought to be regulated in some fair way, then they ought to vote for the bill, for that is what the bill seeks to do. That is the question submitted to them.

It is not a question whether or not we are going to stop the resurrectionist, but whether we will regulate this business in some way, and save the people of the District from the uncertainty and distress of wondering whether or not the body of the friend or relative they have interred in one of the grave-yards of the city is lying there, or whether it has been dragged up at midnight with a rope around its neck and sold in secret to somebody for fifteen or twenty dollars to hack over.

Mr. JACKSON. Let me ask the gentleman from South Carolina if it is not a fact that there is no provision whatever in this bill making it an offense and providing a punishment for openly violating in any way any one of the provisions referred to here—that is to say, that any one having charge of the bodies of persons dying under such circumstances, the bodies of strangers dying here, might give the bodies away without reference to the request of the deceased, or dispose of them in less than forty-eight hours, and do this without the incurrence of any penalty whatever? I ask the gentleman from South Carolina if it is not an omission from the bill which provides no penalties whatever.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The existing law is only changed in a few particulars in this bill; and if there be other offenses committed the law as it now stands attaches to them, and the party who violates the law must suffer the consequences.

Mr. JACKSON. Yes, but that does not meet the question. This bill makes provision for the burial of the remains that have been dissected, and provides penalties for such and such things, among the rest for removing bodies from their graves. It specifies what shall be done with the bodies of these deceased persons.

But if the party whose duty it is to comply with the law in this respect violates it, what I say is that this bill makes no provision for a penalty. Here, for instance, you recognize a class of persons whose bodies are to be disposed of in a certain manner—what is to prevent the custodian from giving those bodies away, from speculating upon them, or doing anything else with them in violation of the law?

Mr. HEMPHILL. The object of this bill is to meet what we believe to be an exigency; and if the gentleman has any modifications which he will suggest I am satisfied the committee would cheerfully accord him a patient hearing.

Mr. JACKSON. But I want the gentleman himself to say if this bill is not very objectionable and incomplete?

Mr. HEMPHILL. No, sir.

Mr. JACKSON. Then how does the gentleman explain this omission?

Mr. HEMPHILL. By the simple reason that if there is a law upon the subject already to regulate this business, which law makes no exception, a person who violates that law knowingly must suffer the consequences of it.

Mr. JACKSON. But certainly the gentleman does not pretend that there is any law in existence upon these subjects to which I have referred in the District of Columbia?

Mr. HEMPHILL. So far as I know there is no law regulating body-snatching at all.

Mr. JACKSON. Yes, but I am calling the attention of the gentleman to the traffic that may go on under the features of this bill in this District without the incurrence of any penalty on the part of the person who violates the law. There is no provision attaching the slightest penalty. It gives a license to any individual who may have charge of the unfortunates who may happen to come here—and as we all know many come who are disabled and infirm, and die here friendless and unknown—to speculate and traffic in their bodies.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Is that a question?

Mr. JACKSON. It is a question, if you can explain how it makes provision for the care of the bodies of people dying under such circumstances, and provides no punishment for an infraction of the law.

Mr. ATKINSON. It is already provided for by law.

Mr. HEMPHILL. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will submit a question I will take pleasure in responding, but I can not undertake to answer a long speech. Or if the gentleman will submit an amendment to the bill providing penalties for a violation of any of its provisions, I shall be very glad to consider it.

Mr. JACKSON. The only amendment that I should offer would be one to strike out all after the enacting clause.

Mr. HEMPHILL. And that of course we would not consider.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Certainly.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. In the fourteenth line of the bill the proviso reads:

> That if the deceased person during his last illness, of his own accord, requested to be buried, etc.

What is the object of inserting these words, "of his own accord?"

Mr. HEMPHILL. For the simple reason, I suppose, that he might not be persuaded into it. If he desires to give his body or does not desire it he can express that wish. But if the gentleman desires it the words might be inserted "of his own free will."

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Would it not be better to strike that out as surplusage?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I have no objection. The use of the language "of his own free will" would amount to the same thing.

Of course there are people who have given their bodies to be buried, and some who have given their bodies to be cremated, and others who have given their bodies for scientific purposes. And after all, Mr. Speaker, there is not so much difference in being cut up after death and buried afterwards, and being buried and cut up afterwards. For under this bill all bodies that are dissected are to be buried decently thereafter, and in order, by the people who have the use of the body for scientific purposes.

We all know that our bodies are not preserved after death, but by nature decay; and when we remember these things and know that it does not make much difference—really makes no difference to the dead whatever—when we remember these things it can not be a matter of so much concern, except as a mere sentiment in the living; and it is for the purpose of protecting the people of this District and saving those sentiments which we all recognize as noble and worthy of encouragement that we have undertaken to make some provision which will give the medical students of this District something which is necessary for their education, and which they now get in violation of law, and to the utter abhorrence of the sentiment of the people who are not able to put their dead behind steel bars, but are compelled to leave them, as most of them do, buried under the earth, where these people go and snatch them out at night.

Mr. WARNER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. WARNER. As medical students may not be able properly to distinguish between a man who dies and has to be buried at the public expense and one who has lived a life of luxury and can pay for his funeral, I suggest to the gentleman from South Carolina why not strike out the words "as are required to be buried at the public expense;" so it would include the rich and poor?

Mr. HEMPHILL. I have no objection to that. I have no desire to legislate for one set of people more than another.

Mr. LYNCH. I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amend the first section by adding the following:
> "Provided further, That public notice of the death and a brief description of the deceased be given in two newspapers published daily in the city of Washington for two consecutive days before the body is delivered as aforesaid."

Mr. HEMPHILL. I have no objection to that.

Mr. WARNER. As the gentleman from South Carolina says he has no objection to the suggestion I have made, I will move to strike out the words I have indicated in the tenth line.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I suggest to the gentleman to wait till amendments are in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HATCH). When this bill was last under consideration a large number of amendments were presented at the time the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] was on the floor, and can not under the rule be considered as pending amendments any more than the amendment just proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. LYNCH] which has just been read, the Chair supposes, for information. At the proper time these amendments which have accumulated in such number will have to be taken up under the rule.

Mr. HEMPHILL. A number of those amendments were offered when the House was in a specially good humor. I think it important to go on with the business. I believe the House now understands the bill, and unless gentlemen desire that it shall be further discussed I would like the House to go to the consideration of the bill by sections.

Mr. COX. Those amendments which were offered when the bill was under discussion were offered in the hour of the gentleman from Kentucky. They were read for information, as the RECORD will show, and are not pending.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Kentucky had offered an amendment which was pending. One amendment to the bill had been offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] and had been adopted by the House. Thereupon the gentleman from Kentucky offered an amendment; and after the time occupied by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON] in debate the gentleman from Kentucky took the floor in support of his amendment; and during the time he was on the floor these other amendments were offered by the yielding from time to time of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. COX. The gentleman from Kentucky concluded by moving to lay the bill on the table, the amendments having been read for information.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is a correct statement of what took place. But the gentleman from Kentucky this morning withdrew the motion to lay on the table.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I desire to ask the gentleman from South Carolina a question. As I understand, he has no objection to the amendment as to members of the Grand Army of the Republic?

Mr. HEMPHILL. No, sir.

Mr. COX. But it has to be voted upon.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I would like to make a suggestion to the gentleman in charge of the measure. When the bill was last under consideration a motion to lay on the table had been made. That motion this morning has been withdrawn. The committee have been heard now in extenso; and under the circumstances I would suggest to the gentleman having charge of the bill the propriety of allowing further debate.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I do not desire to cut off debate unnecessarily. We have other business, and we would like to go on with it as rapidly as we can consistently with a fair consideration of the measure now pending. I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has twenty-three minutes remaining.

[Mr. TAULBEE withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words in opposition to this bill. In my judgment it ought not to pass. I do not think the country is suffering for want of this sort of legislation, and I think the time of the House could be spent in a better way. Neither am I opposed to it from any sentimentality; not at all. I do not believe the opposition to the bill is inspired by anything of that kind. It does make the sending of bodies to the dissecting-table depend upon the poverty of the person. It is in the nature of a penalty upon poverty. So far as it applies to criminals it is in the nature of a penalty or punishment after death.

One other thing. I had hoped the gentleman would have spared the House and the country the recital of the secrets of the charnel-house. It was unnecessary to the discussion of the bill, and I hope he will strike out the horrible picture which he drew in that respect. I hope he will strike it from the RECORD; if it must be published, let it be published in the Police Gazette.

I look upon the bodies of all human beings as sacred, and that they ought not to be mutilated after death, except in case of necessity and with the consent of the dying person. And inasmuch as the committee have incorporated into this bill a feature looking to the consent of the dying person, and to the effect that his body shall not be given up to the dissecting-table if he requests otherwise, why not put into this bill a provision that his body shall not be so disposed of unless he had requested it? Just reverse the conditions of the bill. Give him the right to request or to decide the matter before death; and if he does not, touch not his remains.

I have nothing further to say upon the subject.

Mr. TAULBEE. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO].

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this bill might very well be entitled "A measure to send the Jerry Crunchers from the grave-yards into the hospitals."

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are a great many things about our daily lives, a great many evils that afflict society, which are entirely outside of the pale of the law; and it has been argued by many social reformers that it is better to license such evils rather than to know that they exist as against the law, which is unable in some instances to control or regulate them.

I, for one, am opposed to such a theory. To give legislative sanctity to seemingly irrepressible, and even apparently necessary, evils will, I am afraid, dignify, make respectable, and encourage wrong. The ghoul of the grave-yard is by this act dignified into the legalized "body-snatcher" of the hospital. Science, in a utilitarian age, selects its victims by reason of their poverty.

I agree with all that has been said about the horrors of this business of the resurrectionist, so far as it lacerates the feelings of the survivors and friends of the dead; but I do not wish, either by my vote or voice here, to add to the terrors which already surround the death-beds of the poor in our public hospitals and almshouses.

Many persons who find themselves dying in hospitals and almshouses are not the victims of their own evil ways. They are often good, honest, upright people, brought there by misfortunes, and the only crime of which they have been guilty is that unpardonable one in modern society, the crime of poverty.

Now, why add to the terrors of death by increasing the suffering of the poor fellow in the hospital or the almshouse by the knowledge that after death his body is to be appropriated to the dissecting-table, to be ruthlessly and brutally used for scientific purposes? This bill, with a sort of refinement of cruelty, prescribes that persons dying in the almshouses or asylums, unless of their own accord they request the privileges of Christian burial, shall be handed over to the savage, soulless science of the medical schools. Imagine for a moment a poor, homeless, friendless, suffering man in the very throes of dissolution, his faculties deserting him, eternity with its awful possibilities before him, the earth and its ties receding, and just as he is about to penetrate the veil of the tremendous future, he is obliged, in order to preserve his body, the temple of his soul, from a dissecting-table, to collect his thoughts and cite to the attendants, if any there be, an act of Congress passed for the district of Columbia, dated the 26th of March, 1888—probably sending for the statutes—asking that his body may not be handed over to the surgeons to be mutilated after his death.

Every poor waif of humanity who wants the benefit of this act must spend his last moments arguing law to the hospital or conventionally cold-hearted almshouse attendants. Money, which can not happily buy heaven, yet to the very last secures special privileges on this faithless earth. Even in the grave there is a one nice distinction.

I think, sir, the proper way would be to provide that where a man is willing that his body should be handed over to the dissecting-table for scientific dissection that he shall subscribe his wish to that effect in the presence of two or three witnesses, and thus dispose of his body after death. Never enact a law such as that proposed here, and put the burden upon him of saving his body by insisting upon its preservation from the dissecting-table. Let the contrary be the practice in such cases. If the friends of this measure want to aid surgical knowledge, let them enjoin that their bodies shall be devoted to scientific research. Let us not be generous to science solely at the expense of the poor and needy.

Mr. GROUT. Let me ask the gentleman if he recognizes the necessity for subjects by medical colleges for dissecting purposes.

Mr. MCADOO. Well, I do not know. They have dissected so many and for so long a time, and there have been made such perfect charts and casts showing the whole science of anatomy, that it would seem scarcely necessary that this process of dissecting bodies should continue. It seems to me, not being a medical man, that where bodies have been dissected and charts and casts have been prepared, and animals are to be had showing the organization, arteries, veins, and tissues of the body, there is no necessity for further advancing the medical science by exhuming and dissecting human cadavers. I pretend in this field, however, no special knowledge. We have certainly no right to give them the bodies of poor unfortunates.

Mr. GROUT. I mean for medical students alone to dissect. You do not admit that position, do you?

Mr. MCADOO. I can only repeat that so many years this practice has gone on and so many bodies have been dissected that from an unprofessional view I do not see the necessity for continuing it further.

Mr. GROUT. Are you aware of the fact that the medical men all over the world differ with you very materially on that point?

Mr. MCADOO. I am not aware of the fact, and do not profess to have any scientific information upon the subject. Science will find means to disseminate itself.

But, Mr. Speaker, apropos of this subject of resurrectionists and the prevalence of this business in all countries and at all times, I ask the Clerk to read an extract from the "Tale of Two Cities," a conversation between Mr. Jerry Cruncher and his precocious boy. By this bill you send Cruncher, as I said in the beginning, from the grave-yard to the pauper's bedside.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Father," said young Jerry, as they walked along, taking care to keep at arm's-length and to have the stool well between them, "what's a resurrection-man?"

Mr. Cruncher came to a stop on the pavement before he answered, "How should I know?"

"I thought you knowed everything, father," said the artless boy.

"Hem! Well," returned Mr. Cruncher, going on again, and lifting off his hat to give his spikes free play, "he's a tradesman."

"What's his goods, father?" asked the brisk young Jerry.

"His goods," said Mr. Cruncher, after turning it over in his mind, "is a branch of scientific goods."

"Persons' bodies, ain't it, father?" asked the lively boy.

"I believe it is something of that sort," observed Mr. Cruncher.

"Oh, father, I should so like to be a resurrection-man when I'm quite growed up."

Mr. Cruncher was soothed, but shook his head in a dubious and moral way. "It depends upon how you develop your talents. Be careful to develop your talents and never to say no more than you can help to nobody; and there's no telling at the present time what you may come to be fit for." As young Jerry, thus encouraged, went on a few yards in advance, to plant the stool in the shadow of the bar, Mr. Cruncher added to himself: "Jerry, you honest tradesman, there's hopes wot that boy will yet be a blessing to you, and a recompense to you for his mother!"

Mr. TAULBEE. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. When this bill was under consideration the other day I offered the following amendment, which I shall endeavor to offer again as a substitute for the bill, unless it shall be held that the amendment is already pending. It is this:

Strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and amend it so that it will read:

"Be it enacted, etc., That whoever shall sell or buy the body or bodies of a deceased person or persons, or in any way traffic in the same, or who shall disturb or remove bodies from graves in which they have been buried, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction, be imprisoned for a term of not less than two nor more than three years at hard labor in the jail of said District."

That proposition I am ready to support, because it looks to the correction of an unquestionable and horrible crime, that of robbing graves. And I would dislike to see the bill laid on the, table for the reason that to do so would prevent the enactment of such a law as this; for, as I understand it, there is no such law to-day in this District——

Mr. GROUT. Oh, yes; there is.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Not a law certainly which provides a penalty such as is called for by the nature of the crime. This city to a large extent is an aggregation of strangers, and therefore in it more than in other cities there is need for a stringent and effective law which shall prevent ghouls from desecrating graves.

There has been interjected into this debate the idea that the Committee on the District of Columbia was not treated with proper courtesy the other day. I am sure we are all willing to extend to the committee the fullest courtesy, and have done so by again opening the debate. It is alleged also that the committee having examined this subject, and having concluded to recommend favorably the bill before us, that this fact in itself is a reason why the House should pass this bill.

Mr. GROUT. Nobody claims that. We claim that that fact should entitle it to respectful consideration.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Now I, in common with every gentleman on the floor of the House, have the highest opinion of the sagacity, the wisdom, the integrity, and the ability of every gentleman on that committee, and if a proposition were pending here that we should enact this opinion into a law I personally would vote for it. But that is not the proposition at all. The merits of that committee, like "the flowers that bloom in the spring," have nothing to do with the merits of the case.

What is the exact proposition that we are asked to enact into a law? It is that when any persons die in any of the charitable or criminal institutions of this District the bodies of such deceased persons as are required to be buried at the public expense may be delivered to the medical colleges; provided, however, that if the deceased person during his last illness, of his own accord, requested to be buried, etc., then his body shall not be so disposed of.

My first objection to the bill is that it throws the burden of securing his body from dissection upon the person about to die. Who, ordinarily, is that person? Some one who is in the poor-house or in an insane asylum or hospital in this city, belonging to the class not ordinarily in the habit of reading the newspapers, usually not knowing what the laws of the District of Columbia may be; not knowing that there is such a law as this, if it becomes law, which he must obey if he would have his body buried.

Then consider the circumstances in which that person is at the time: weak, in pain, the mind beginning to grasp the idea of an approach to the mysterious confines of eternity and to all the vast possibilities and realities beyond; a man ignorant, poor, emaciated, in a hospital or in a jail about to meet his God. And by this bill it is made his duty to remember, at such a time and under those circumstances, that the Fiftieth Congress enacted that his body should be carved by a lot of deputy sawbones unless he, "of his own accord," without the suggestion from a surgeon, nurse, or anybody else—unless he "of his own accord" said he desired to have buried the body given to him by the Great Creator who made this world and made human bodies, and who vested in each man the right and title to his own body. Was it the pauper or the patrician whom that same God most loved when He walked the fields of Palestine so many centuries ago, His eye sympathizing with and kindling at the sight of whom? Of the Scribe? Of the Pharisee? Of the ruler? Of the senator or congressman of that government? Oh, no! Of the poor, the lame, the blind, the sick. Unlike this bill, He preferred Lazarus, whose sores the street dogs licked, to the rich man.

My objection is that by this measure that very spirit of pity and care for the weak is sought to be invaded and overthrown by singling out a pauper, dying, agonized, perhaps a veteran soldier, and calling upon him to be aware of the fact that this august body, the Fiftieth Congress, had seen fit to enact a law that he, to save his body from going to the dissecting-table, "of his own accord," must say that he did not want to be cut up for the benefit of a lot of sawbones. It is simply, in my judgment—and I say it with the highest respect for the committee and every member of it—a gross violation of that great spirit and heart of the God who is love, and who most loves the poor and the weak, the helpless and forsaken.

Now, if you want to pass a law to carve the body of a railroad president for the benefit of medical science, I will vote for it. [Laughter.] These men will know what the law is and act accordingly. If you wish to pass a bill under similar conditions as here proposed to dissect Jay Gould's remains, I will vote for it in a minute. [Laughter.] He would be able to take care of himself. But, gentlemen—and I am in earnest about this—I do not propose by my vote to put upon the statute-book a law which, as I see it, violates the vested rights of humanity and Christianity.

It is assumed by gentleman that we must provide "stiffs" for the medical students; that we are somehow under obligation to do it. That is the basis of their whole argument. Why must we do so? For one, I deny the obligation in toto. Why should this American Congress suspend the consideration of more important measures and come to a dead stop in order to enact a law of this character, violating, as I hold it does, the organic rights of men, the inalienable right of every man to his own body, be he poor or rich, sane or insane, merely for the purpose of providing subjects for medical students. What right have we to another man's corpse? Think of it, gentlemen! And yet we are called upon to turn aside from important and needed legislation to grapple with this great and crying demand that the American Congress shall provide "subjects" for the students of the medical colleges in the District of Columbia at the sole expense of the poor and friendless.

Now, I insist upon it that this Congress does not have to do any such thing. For one I am perfectly ready to pass a bill to punish severely any ghoul who desecrates a grave. I am ready to vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, which strikes out the existing provision from the bill and puts upon the dying man the burden of directing affirmatively that his body may be used for dissection. I will vote for that amendment, but I prefer to strike out the whole bill and substitute my amendment.

Mr. TAULBEE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words in opposition to this bill, because in my judgment it is a measure that ought not to pass. It is legislation in favor of the rich and against the poor. Should this bill pass there is not a member of this House, there is not the head of a family in this great nation, who may not suffer from its provisions. Suppose that any member of this body or any head of a family has a wayward child, either a son or a daughter, who leaves home, perhaps through some distaste for its surroundings, but without any unkind feeling towards the parents. In such a case the child will be likely to try to conceal his or her locality from those at home. Now suppose that the wanderer should straggle down to this city of Washington and here, through misfortune, should become poor and sick and be compelled to go to a hospital. Suppose that there the poor patient gets worse instead of better, what will be his feelings when he sees death staring him in the face to know that his body will be unrecognized and will be handed over to be cut up under the provisions of this bill?

Mr. HEMPHILL. In the gentleman's own State, Indiana, they have a similar law with reference to bodies that are liable to be buried at the public expense. Will the gentleman reconcile the view he is expressing with that law of his own State?

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. If they have such a law it is just as outrageous and infamous as the one we are considering here, and I would condemn it just as severely. Mr. Speaker, in the case I was supposing, the poor stray sheep dies with the seal of secrecy on his lips and comes under the operation of the provisions of this bill. But in the mean time some casual acquaintance, who knew that he is in the hospital but had not kept track of him in the mean time, discovers that he is dead, and knowing the residence of his parents and knowing that they would give half their fortune, or perhaps the whole of it, to discover even the body of their child, he writes or telegraphs to them, and they come here as fast as steam will carry them to reclaim the body of the unfortunate one. But do they find it? Not if this bill becomes a law. If you pass this bill you will make a law which will strike terror into families in every part of the country; no family in any part of this great nation will be safe against its provisions. Gentlemen know the feelings of parents in such cases. I know people in my own district who, even at this late day, if it were possible for them to visit the Southern battlefields and identify the places where their soldier-boy lies buried, would give their last dollar to go down there and reclaim that body and carry it home and bury it in the little village grave-yard. I hope that this bill will not pass.

Mr. TAULBEE. With the consent of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL], I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN], who desires to offer an amendment.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 13 of section 1, after the word "students," insert: "That none of the said officers in charge of the institutions hereinbefore enumerated, nor the institutions they represent, shall be at any expense by reason of the delivery or distribution of the said bodies to any of the medical colleges in the District of Columbia; but all the expenses attending the delivery and distribution shall be paid by the college receiving them, in such manner as may be specified by the party making the delivery, and in no event shall the officer or officers, whether directors, trustees, superintendents, wardens, or managers, having lawful custody of said bodies, make any charge or receive any pay on account of, or by reason of, the delivery and distribution thereof except the actual expenses attending the delivery and distribution of the same. And any violation hereof shall be punished as provided for any violation of this enactment in section 2."

Also, strike out the words "Provided, however," in line 13 of section 1, and insert after the preceding amendment the words "Provided further."

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, we have had Mr. Gould dragged in here several times upon this floor, with other railroad presidents, but this is the first time that gentlemen have had a chance to have him "dissected" at the desk. [Laughter.] I desire, sir, to address myself to the merits of this bill, allowing that sort of "rot" to take its place where, in my judgment, it belongs.

The United States Government requires, in regard to those who enter its service as physicians, certain things, one of which is that they shall have had practical experience by the dissection of a dead body; yet that law, in the absence of some such legislation as the bill now under discussion, places the physician in such a position that in order to comply with the requirements of the Government he must rob the graves of people who are buried in this District. In other words, the refusal to pass a bill like this invites—nay, it absolutely forces—the medical fraternity to violate other laws of the community.

Mr. TAULBEE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MASON. I can not if it is to come out of my time.

Mr. TAULBEE. I will consent that it come out of my time. I would like the gentleman to cite the law to which he refers. I want to introduce a bill to repeal it; and I wish to know where I can find it.

Mr. MASON. I understand that there is a law in force in this District making it a misdemeanor to rob a grave. I am so informed. And I say that to refuse to pass a law giving the unclaimed pauper dead to the proper medical authorities as subjects for dissection invites, and in fact compels, the medical fraternity to steal dead bodies in order that physicians may comply with that law which requires that before they can be accepted by the Government as surgeons in the Army or Navy they shall have dissected a body.

Now, all this talk about drawing distinctions between the rich and the poor by a bill of this kind is the merest nonsense. This bill will operate upon one person in the same way as upon another.

Mr. TAULBEE. The law to which I asked the gentleman to direct my attention was the law requiring a physician to have such practical knowledge in surgery as is gained from the dissection of a body. Where is the law requiring a physician to have dissected a body? I want to know where to find that law.

Mr. MASON. Why, sir, every State of the Union, as well as the District of Columbia, according to my information, requires that a man, before being admitted to practice medicine, must have graduated at a medical college and received a regular diploma, which must show a certain course of study, including practice in the dissecting-room.

Mr. TAULBEE. There is no such law in Kentucky, nor do I think there is such a law in the District of Columbia. If so, I would like to know where it is.

Mr. MASON. I will find the law for the gentleman; but I wish now to finish my remarks on this branch of the subject.

Mr. Speaker, there is one view of this question which I have not heard any one refer to except the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], who alluded to it in a question which I thought the House did not hear. The only shock or damage from the desecration of a grave comes to the living, not to the dead. If you or I die leaving no friends who care enough for us to bury us, there can be no injury from allowing our bodies to go to the dissecting-table, for it is certainly no injury to the dead. Throwing aside all the mock sentiment that has been indulged in here about the rich and the poor, I say that when a man who has been supported by the Government as a pauper dies he dies in debt to society. The man who requires money to be taken out of the public Treasury for his burial, who has never done enough in the way of kind words or deeds to inspire any person to take an interest in his burial, dies in debt to society to that extent——

Mr. TAULBEE. And the gentleman proposes to provide in this bill for a foreclosure of the mortgage.

Mr. MASON. I most emphatically do.

Mr. TAULBEE. I am glad that the gentleman is candid enough to make the avowal.

Mr. MASON. It is a square issue on this point. I say the man who, with all the opportunities that this country with its free institutions affords, dies without having made one friend who takes any interest in his burial does not deserve one; and when he dies in debt to the Government, when the Government has to provide for his burial, when he leaves no friends whose feelings can be shocked by the dissection of his body, it should go to the dissecting-table for the benefit of science.

When the State which I represent in part on this floor had no such law as is now proposed here for the District of Columbia, graves were robbed day after day and night after night, although there was a statute against grave-robbing. But the moment a law of this sort came into effect so that the physicians could get subjects in a legitimate way without wounding the feelings of any living human being, grave-robbing in the State of Illinois was effectually stopped. I would like to know whether the gentleman from Kentucky is familiar with State legislation on this subject.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MASON. I remind the Chair that the gentleman from Kentucky occupied one minute of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HATCH). The Chair has made allowance for that.

Mr. TAULBEE. I do not require the foreclosure of any mortgage in order to recover the time which the gentleman occupied. I yield for the question which I understand he was about to ask.

Mr. MASON. I wish simply to ask whether the gentleman is familiar with the legislation——

Mr. TAULBEE. Of your State?

Mr. MASON. Not only of Illinois, but of Indiana and several other States where laws similar to this bill have been passed. I can inform the gentleman that such legislation has operated for the good of science, without injury to the feelings of any human being, because an unclaimed pauper who has to be buried at the public expense leaves no friends to be concerned over the fact that his body is dissected. If the gentleman will study this question he will find that legislation of this kind has operated not only to furnish legitimate dissecting material for the medical colleges, but has directly operated to protect the cemeteries or grave-yards from desecration.

Mr. TAULBEE. I am not familiar with the legislation to which the gentleman refers, but I must confess I am surprised that it should have had any such effect.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will yield for eight minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CUTCHEON).

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Speaker, this is an unpleasant subject in any aspect we can look at it, and yet we are not permitted to turn aside from duty because it is unpleasant. It has been my fortune to confront this question before in my life, when, for a number of years, as regent of the University of Michigan, having included with it the largest medical college in the United States, we had to meet and solve, so far as we could, this question. We found that in that part of the State of Michigan near to our medical college something analogous to a reign of terror prevailed amongst people who were called upon to bury their dead; that there was a feeling that no grave was sacred, and there was no assurance the dead would rest where they had been laid. We found frequently the friends and relatives of the deceased discovering the removal of the remains and following them to the dissecting-room and reclaiming them. And to meet this state of things the State of Michigan enacted a law very similar to, almost identical with, the bill now before the House. I can speak, I think, without question as to the effect of the law, that grave desecration in the State of Michigan since the enactment of that law has almost entirely ceased, and that complaint of the law has ceased on every hand. People now lay the bodies of their relatives and friends in the grave with the most absolute assurance they will repose where they are laid.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we are in this situation: In the first place, we must have medical men. We are all in the hands of the doctors. Sooner or later we go to them for help, and no conscientious physician can or will or dare stand by the bedside of suffering humanity until he has qualified himself for the discharge of the duties of physician or surgeon by the amplest dissection of the cadaver. No physician as a matter of fact does, and it is a fact that is known to every man of common sense that anatomical material must be had and will be had, either legitimately and lawfully, or will be had clandestinely, illegitimately, and unlawfully.

Now, there is the grave situation we confront, either the graves of every one of your States will be ground for plunder of the grave-robber or you must provide your medical colleges with legitimate anatomical material. Here is a choice of evils. It is not pleasant to say that certain bodies shall be dedicated to the dissecting-table, but we must either say that certain medical material shall be placed at the disposition of the medical colleges or we must say to the people of the country every one of your homes shall be liable to the invasion of the grave-robber. We must take our choice between these two.

Now, if anatomical material is to be provided for medical colleges where are we to look for it? Mr. Speaker, I have no difficulty whatever about this talk about the rich and the poor. Ninety-nine per cent. of the poor in the District of Columbia die at home in their beds and their remains are as sacred as the remains of the millionaire; but more than that, it is not one case in ten thousand that a man dies not only so poor in purse, but so poor in reputation, and so poor in affection that there is not some one to claim his body for burial in the grave. There is no aristocracy in the grave. There is no rich or poor, no bond or free. In the grave there is neither purity nor impurity. The grave is the great leveler of humanity.

This, Mr. Speaker, is not a question of rich or poor; it is a question of the preservation of the homes of the District of Columbia from the desecrating touch of the grave-robber, and we are now to choose here to-day whether every home shall be invaded by terror and the shadow of the resurrectionist, or we will provide the medical colleges necessary to civilization with the proper supply of legitimate anatomical material. And when it comes to that I will be ready to give my vote. I say we should go to the prisons and jails and almshouses, to the unknown and friendless man, who has not upon the face of the broad earth one friend who cares enough for him to ask his body shall be buried, rather than allow bodies to be taken from the grave-yards and terror to possess the firesides and homes of this District.

Mr. Speaker, this is a common-sense question. It is a question which comes home to every one of us. It is a question of common sense that if anatomical material must be provided it should be provided legitimately; and we can provide it legitimately by going to the prisons, jails, and almshouses, where men are dying unknown, without any friend whose feelings can be injured by their dedication to the dissecting-table.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina has ten minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] has given me five minutes of his time; and I desire to yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I do not think, sir, that I have any inordinate sensibility as to the human body and its disposition after death. I believe in something beyond and better than the mere corporate entity. It is impossible for us long to preserve our frail bodies in life unless we study them in death. The best use which can be made of some of our bodies doubtless is to consign them after death to the high and ennobling purposes of science and humanity.

This bill properly selects for this District that portion of the dead whose friends or friendlessness, whose crimes or condition, make them fit subjects for this object.

During the progress of time our bodies molder and decay in the ground. They return unto dust, unless they are strangely preserved and immortalized like those of the ancient Egyptians. On our earth they mix with the soil, and if in another element, they

> Suffer a sea-change
> Into something rich and strange.

Through the processes of chemical action they are so changed that they enter into other forms and even develop into food for animals and vegetation.

Why, it is said, sir, that where the largest battalions fell at Waterloo there were found the richest wheat fields; and it is within my observation that the tallest, finest cypresses that grow in the city where I recently resided are those that spring out of the old Ottoman grave-yards from the bone and sinew of the tough Saljukian Turk. It is even said that from the skull of Roger Williams, discovered in Providence some years ago, a splendid apple-tree root had become embedded—rare fruitage from the brain that conceived religious liberty.

To understand why these mutations take place in our anatomy requires scientific research and study; and they teach us that we should not too highly prize the transient in decay.

Let us not, however, fail to defer to scientists in another more important direction. May I not say, sir, that it is impossible to study the science of anatomy, with a view to the practice of surgery and medicine, without having the human body, with its wonderful machinery, as the object lesson? It is in itself a microcosm. It has every force of mechanism, from the pulley to the wheel, and every form of matter known to nature. We are fearfully and wonderfully made, and the study of its parts with a view to health and longevity is insurmountable without the lessons taught in the dissecting-room. It may be cruel to the sentimentalist, but the forceps and the scalpel have their humane utilities. All the refinements that belong to that great and elder school of medicine must be taught under such conditions.

This bill is in the interest of humanity and science in many senses; and for one who has labored here in our legislation with care and zeal for the safety of human life, and who has advocated every project on this floor for its safeguard and preservation on land and sea, now, for the same reason, sir, I would advocate the passage of this bill. It not only will preserve human life in the larger sense by adding to the stock of human intelligence as to our bodies, but it will save the sensibilities of our friends from being racked through the work of these human hyenas, who for filthy lucre despoil the grave where affection has planted her sweetest flowers.

I remember a few years ago that the body of a son of a President of the United States was found in a vat in a dissecting-room in Cincinnati. I remember, too, that in a cemetery in Ohio, to which my body may go, the graves were torn open ruthlessly and bodies taken to the dissecting-room. Ex necessitate the professors and students had to have their subjects. It was in the interest of science. But public opinion was aroused and outraged in that State. A law not unlike this was enacted. It gave them the bodies taken from the hospitals, penitentiaries, jails, and asylums, under proper regulations and restrictions, and the outrages ceased. Thus science, through the medium of death, gave its aid to human life.

I favor the passage of this bill earnestly. I favor it in the interest of the living more than in the interest of the dead. I favor it because, sir, amid the changes that take place in our mortal sphere, the body, which is the mere shell of the life, is of little consequence compared with that life.

I am not insensible to the preservation of the form itself. Who that is human could be otherwise? If, then, we would preserve the memory of our dear and dead friends, with their features in a deathless picture, and since we can not have them in marble and only in dust, let their health and safety in life be our chief anxiety in legislation even as in our homes.

Let us care for them in such a mode by law that they may be long with us here, assured that they have a "life beyond life—an immortality rather than a life." [Applause.]

Mr. TAULBEE. Will the gentleman from New York permit me to ask if he is willing that his own body shall be so disposed of?

Mr. COX. I would have to ask my wife about that. [Great laughter and applause.]

Mr. HEMPHILL. I had intended, Mr. Speaker, to close this debate by adding a few words to what I have already said; but it has been so protracted and the discussion has brought out all perhaps that can be said, that I will not further occupy the time of the House, but ask an immediate vote upon the question. If there are amendments that gentlemen desire to offer, I hope we can have a vote upon them without delay. I yield now, according to promise, to the gentleman from Kentucky to present the motion again which was pending when this subject came up to-day.

Mr. TAULBEE. When the gentleman from South Carolina is through I desire to move to lay the bill and amendments on the table.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I shall not occupy the attention of the House further.

Mr. TAULBEE. Then I make that motion.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. TAULBEE; and there were—ayes 38, noes 84.

Mr. TAULBEE. There is no quorum voting. I desire now to call for the yeas and nays, so as not to consume time unnecessarily in a further division.

The yeas and nays were refused, there being 29 voting in favor thereof and 135 in opposition.

Mr. TAULBEE. I renew the point that no quorum has voted.

Mr. FARQUHAR. The vote just taken discloses the fact that a quorum is present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the point of order the gentleman makes is that no quorum voted upon the motion to lay on the table the amendments and the bill.

Several MEMBERS. Too late.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that before he declared the result of the vote the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] demanded the yeas and nays, and the yeas and nays have been refused. The gentleman now makes the point that no quorum has voted. The Chair thinks the point is made in time, and will appoint as tellers the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE].

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 48, noes 116.

So the motion to lay the bill on the table was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I move the previous question on the bill and amendments.

Mr. GROSVENOR. What amendments does that motion include?

Mr. TAULBEE. I ask whether it is considered that all the amendments which have been read are pending?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] is the first amendment pending. The Chair is not prepared now to say whether the others are pending or not.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I have no desire to cut off reasonable amendments which may be offered. There were a number of amendments offered the other day that I suppose gentlemen do not propose to have voted on.

Mr. SOWDEN. I desire to have mine voted on.

Mr. TAULBEE. If the last remark of the gentleman from South Carolina was intended to refer to my amendment, I beg to say the gentleman is mistaken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That amendment is pending.

Mr. WEAVER. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WEAVER. This bill consists of more than one section and has never been considered by sections.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. We are proceeding with the consideration of this bill in the House; and the gentleman in charge of the bill has the right at any time to move the previous question.

Mr. HEMPHILL. As I understand, all the amendments have been offered which gentlemen desire to offer.

Mr. MILLIKEN. No, sir; there are other amendments to be offered if the opportunity is presented.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Is the amendment I proposed considered as pending?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state the situation to the House, and when the Chair has done so the gentleman from South Carolina can so frame his motion as to cover what he intends. If the House shall vote the previous question on the bill and pending amendments that have been offered, then all the amendments offered will be put before the House in their proper order. The gentleman from South Carolina is entitled to the floor.

Mr. WARNER. I asked the gentleman from South Carolina a question while he was on the floor, and I indicated the purpose to offer an amendment striking out certain words in the tenth and eleventh lines, to which amendment the gentleman said he had no objection. If there is an amendment already pending which covers that purpose, I do not ask to offer it. If there is not, I desire to offer it.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I agree that that amendment shall be offered. I submit this proposition, that the Clerk read the amendments offered to this bill, that it may be seen which amendments gentlemen desire to be regarded as pending.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman allow me to offer an amendment?

Mr. HEMPHILL. As soon as we get through with making this arrangement. I think gentlemen who offered amendments should indicate whether they desire to have them voted on or not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] was on the floor and entitled to the floor, and the amendment which he offered was pending. While he was on the floor numerous gentlemen offered amendments and he yielded to them, saying he accepted those amendments. Of course, the gentleman could only accept an amendment as a modification of his own, and only such as were germane. The Chair did not understand the gentleman as accepting all these as modifications of his own amendment.

Mr. TAULBEE. No, sir; I intended that my amendment should be acted on as a separate amendment, and that the others should be accepted and considered as pending.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] has submitted an amendment which I think was submitted in good faith, and I should like it to be voted upon.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I shall send my amendment to the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to get the attention of the gentleman from South Carolina. He will state it is impossible for the Chair to determine what number of these amendments which have been offered by gentlemen on the floor were offered in good faith.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will agree that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE], the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON], the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN], the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER], and the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] shall be voted upon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina demands the previous question on the bill and amendments which he has indicated.

Mr. TAULBEE. I object to that. I think it was understood all the amendments should be read, and if any of them appear to have been offered otherwise than in good faith they could be designated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will now cause the amendments to be read in their order, beginning with the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky. If when any of the amendments are read the gentlemen who offered them desire to withdraw those amendments, that will relieve the situation to that extent.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I desire now, before the reading begins, to state that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] wished to offer an amendment, namely, to strike out the words "of his own accord," in line 14 of the first section, which I think ought to be adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] later for that purpose. The Clerk will report the first amendment.

The first amendment, offered by Mr. TAULBEE, was read, as follows:

Amend by striking out all of section 1 after the word "however," in line 13, and insert, "That such deceased persons shall have consented to such disposition of his or her remains."

Mr. BREWER. Mr. Speaker, I think we shall not accomplish anything by proceeding in this way.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. These amendments are being read now for the information of the House and to enable the gentlemen who have offered them to withdraw them or to insist upon them as they may elect.

Mr. BREWER. Then let us dispose of this amendment now.

Mr. TAULBEE. Let us go on with the regular order, Mr. Speaker. I of course will insist on that amendment at the proper time, but I now demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The next amendment, offered by Mr. STONE, of Missouri, was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause down to and including the word "expense," in the eleventh line of the first section, and insert:

"That the bodies of all doctors and medical students dying in the District of Columbia shall be delivered to the duly-authorized agent of any medical college or colleges in the said District of Columbia and."

The next amendment, offered by Mr. GROSVENOR, was read, as follows:

And provided further, That if such deceased person was an honorably discharged soldier or member of the Marine Corps of the United States, and such fact is known by, or is brought to the knowledge of, the officer or person having charge of the institution in which such person died, then such body shall not be delivered to any medical college until due notice of the death of such person has been given to some Grand Army post in the District of Columbia, and reasonable time be given such post to claim such remains for burial by such post.'

The next amendment, offered by Mr. CUTCHEON, was read, as follows:

After the word "however," in the thirteenth line of section 1, insert the following:

"That such body shall not be so delivered in less than sixty hours from the time of death."

Mr. CUTCHEON. I wish to modify that amendment so as to make the time forty-eight hours instead of sixty.

The SPEAKER. The modification will be made.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to reserve the point of order against that amendment.

The next amendment, offered by Mr. MCADOO, was read, as follows:

Strike out all in the first section after the word "that" down to the words "deceased persons," in line 10, so that it will read that "the bodies of deceased persons shall be distributed among the several medical colleges equitably," etc.

The next amendment, offered by Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and amend it so that it will read:

"Be it enacted, etc., That whoever shall sell or buy the body or bodies of a deceased person or persons, or in any way traffic in the same, or who shall disturb or remove bodies from graves in which they have been buried, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction, be imprisoned for a term of not less than two nor more than three years at hard labor in the jail of said District."

The next amendment, offered by Mr. SOWDEN, was read, as follows:

After the word "students," in line 13, section 1, insert:

"Provided, That no one of the said officers in charge of the institutions hereinbefore enumerated, nor the institutions they represent, shall be at any expense by reason of the delivery or distribution of the said bodies to any of the medical colleges in the District of Columbia, but all the expenses attending the delivery and distribution shall be paid by the college receiving them, in such manner as may be specified by the party making the delivery; and in no event shall the officer or officers, whether directors, trustees, superintendents, wardens, keepers, or managers, having lawful custody of said bodies make any charge or receive any pay on account of or by reason of the delivery and distribution thereof, except the actual expenses attending the distribution of the same. And any violation hereof shall be punished as is provided for any violation of this enactment in section 2."

Also, strike out the words "Provided, however," in line 13 of section 1, and insert after the preceding amendment the words "And provided further."

The next amendment (offered by Mr. LYNCH) was read, as follows:

Amend the first section by adding the following:

"Provided further, That public notice of the death and a brief description of the deceased be given in two newspapers published daily in the city of Washington for two consecutive days before the body is delivered as aforesaid."

The next amendment (offered by Mr. WARNER) was read, as follows:

In section 1, lines 10 and 11, strike out the following words: "As are required to be buried at the public expense."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] to offer his amendment.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I move to amend by striking out, in line 14 of section 1, the words "of his own accord."

Mr. HEMPHILL. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN] desires to submit an amendment.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all after the word "that," in line 3, and before the word "the," in line 7 of the first section, and insert after the word "expense" and before the word "said," in line 11, the words "and the bodies of all other deceased persons;" so as to read:

"That the health officer of said District deliver to the duly authorized agent of any medical college or colleges in the said District of Columbia the bodies of such deceased persons as are required to be buried at the public expense, and the bodies of all other deceased persons, said bodies to be distributed," etc.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I now move the previous question upon the bill and amendments.

Mr. TAULBEE. Are all these amendments considered as pending?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All of them are regarded as pending, to be voted on in their order. The gentleman from South Carolina moves the previous question on the bill and amendments.

Mr. TAULBEE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. HEMPHILL. That motion is not in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair holds that the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky is not in order. A motion to lay on the table the bill and amendments has just been voted on by the House. The gentleman from South Carolina now moves the previous question upon the bill and amendments.

Mr. TAULBEE. And I move to lay that motion for the previous question on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. And the Chair holds that the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky is not in order.

Mr. TAULBEE. I defer to the opinion of the Chair.

The previous question was ordered, there being—ayes 133, noes 16.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is first on the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE], which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of section 1 after the word "however," in line 13, and insert "that such deceased person shall have consented to such disposition of his or her remains."

Mr. TAULBEE. I ask that the Clerk read the context, so as to show the effect of the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first clause of the bill, with the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky.

The Clerk read as follows:

That any public officers or officers, whether directors, trustees, wardens, keepers, or managers, having lawful charge of, or control over, any hospital, prison, almshouse, jail, morgue, or asylum within the District of Columbia, may, with the approval of the health officer of said District, deliver to the duly authorized agent of any medical college or colleges in the said District of Columbia the bodies of such deceased persons as are required to be buried at the public expense, said bodies to be distributed among the several colleges equitably, the number assigned to each being proportioned to that of its students: Provided, however, That such deceased person shall have consented to such disposition of his or her remains.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment of Mr. TAULBEE, there were—ayes 44, nays 100.

Mr. TAULBEE. I make the point that no quorum has voted; and pending that point I ask the yeas and nays on the amendment, as I think this is a very proper question on which to test the sense of the House.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, there were—ayes 28, noes 151.

Mr. TAULBEE. Let us have tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the yeas and nays were refused.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs upon the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE], on which no quorum voted. The Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL].

Mr. HEMPHILL. Can the point of "no quorum" be reserved while all these other questions are being put?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky made the point of "no quorum," and pending that demanded a vote by yeas and nays, which was refused. The tellers will take their places.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 46, noes 120.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The question next recurred on the amendment of Mr. STONE, of Missouri, which was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause down to and including the word "expense," in the eleventh line of the first section, and insert: "That the bodies of all doctors and medical students dying in the District of Columbia shall be delivered to the duly authorized agent of any medical college or colleges in the said District of Columbia; and."

The House divided; and there were—ayes 11, noes 95.

Mr. TAULBEE. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER appointed as tellers Mr. TAULBEE and Mr. HEMPHILL.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 35, noes 129.

So the amendment was rejected.

The question next recurred on the following amendment, submitted by Mr. GROSVENOR:

Add to the first section:

"And provided further, That if such deceased person was an honorably discharged soldier or sailor or member of the Marine Corps of the United States, and such fact is known or is brought to the knowledge of the officer or person having charge of the institution in which such person died, then such body shall not be delivered to any medical college until due notice of the death of such person has been given to some Grand Army post in the District of Columbia, and reasonable time given to such post to claim such remains for burial by such post."

The amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate insisted on its amendments disagreed to by the House to the bill (H. R. 3300) to amend an act to enable the city of Denver to purchase certain land for cemetery purposes, and asked for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on its part Mr. PLUMB, Mr. TELLER, and Mr. COCKRELL.

AMENDMENT OF REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. THOMPSON, of California, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8944) to extend the repeal of section 4716 of the Revised Statutes in certain cases; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

FIRST BATTALION OF CALIFORNIA MOUNTAINEERS.

Mr. THOMPSON, of California, also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8945) for the relief of the First Battalion of California Mountaineers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

WAR CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER. The chairman of the Committee on War Claims [Mr. STONE] asks that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8188) for the relief of Anthony L. Woodson, and that the bill (H. R. 4665) for the relief of Anthony L. Woodson be taken from the table, and that the said bills be recommitted to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. SPRINGER. Not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. They can not be brought back by a motion to reconsider. If there be no objection, it will be ordered accordingly.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. KILGORE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 6437) to provide for certain of the most urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 5723) to amend section 461 of the Revised Statutes, regulating fees for exemplifications of land patents, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 1528) to reward the Esquimaux natives of the Asiatic coast of the Arctic Ocean for acts of humanity to shipwrecked seamen;

A bill (H. R. 1589) to provide for holding terms of the United States courts at Mississippi City; and

A bill (H. R. 5373) to change the location of a certain alley in the city of Washington.

Mr. ENLOE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (H. R. 2494) to provide for payment of the funeral expenses of the late Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court; when the Speaker signed the same.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WEAVER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. CLARDY. I ask, by unanimous consent, that Thursday, the 5th of April, and Saturday, the 7th of April, be set apart for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Commerce in lieu of the days provided by a preceding order.

Mr. WEAVER. I hope that request will be agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The request of the gentleman from Missouri is that Thursday, the 5th, and Saturday, the 7th, day of April be set apart for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Commerce, not to interfere with revenue or appropriation bills.

Mr. HOLMAN. Bills coming from the Committee on the Public Lands ought also to be excepted, and I think I shall have to insist on that exception.

Mr. HATCH. The Committee on Commerce has already been accorded two days, to-morrow and the next day, for the consideration of its bills; and the gentleman from Indiana knows why that order can not be fairly and fully executed. I hope therefore he will not object.

Mr. HOLMAN. The question is as to one day.

Mr. HATCH. The gentleman from Indiana proposes to impose on the Committee on Commerce a condition not in the original order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would not insist if the time had been postponed to a later day.

Mr. CANNON. There are so many special orders undisposed of I shall have to object. Gentlemen say, why do you object; and others say, oh, don't! Now, there are other members and other committees having just as important business, and until this matter is settled I say no.

Mr. WEAVER. I insist on my motion to adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 72, noes 56.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, March 27, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

FUNERAL OF CHIEF-JUSTICE WAITE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following communication from the Supreme Court of the United States; which was read:

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, March 26, 1888.

SIR: I am directed by the Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States to invite the Senate to attend the funeral ceremonies of the late Chief-Justice Waite, in the Hall of the House of Representatives, on Wednesday, March 28, at 12 m.

Very respectfully,

J. M. WRIGHT, Marshal.

The PRESIDENT of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent for the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Senate accept the invitation of the Justices of the Supreme Court to attend the funeral of the late Chief-Justice, and will proceed to the Hall of the House of Representatives for that purpose at the time fixed for the ceremonial.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none. The question is on its adoption.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at a quarter before twelve to-morrow.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 2524) for the relief of Montgomery Patton; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2525) granting a pension to Columbus C. Kerr; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2526) for the relief of John McFall; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2527) for the relief of the estate of Douglas Dale, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 2528) for the relief of Jennie D. Rice; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HALE introduced a bill (S. 2529) for a light or lights at St. Andrew's Bay, Florida; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. GORMAN introduced a bill (S. 2530) granting a pension to Robert Kelly; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2531) granting a pension to Julie Stirzel; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PALMER introduced a bill (S. 2532) to provide for the purchase of the two canals known as the Portage Lake and River Improvement Company Canal and the Lake Superior Ship-Canal Railway and Iron Company Canal, being the water communication across Keweenaw Point, Lake Superior, from Keweenaw Bay to Lake Superior by way of Portage River and Lake, in the State of Michigan; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HARRIS (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2533) to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to lay water mains where necessary; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CAMERON (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2534) to build a railroad on Brightwood avenue, in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2535) for the erection of a public building at Wilkes Barre, Pa.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. DOLPH introduced a bill (S. 2536) granting to the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company the right of way through the Nez Perce Indian reservation; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada, introduced a bill (S. 2537) for the relief of the State of Nevada; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 2538) granting a pension to Oliver H. Judd; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SABIN introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 66) authorizing the appointment of a commission to establish the boundary line between Northern Minnesota and the Canadian provinces; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. GORMAN, it was Ordered, That leave be granted John A. Payne to withdraw the papers in his case from the files of the Senate, subject to the rules.

On motion of Mr. HISCOCK, it was Ordered, That Mrs. Mary G. Walker have leave to withdraw the papers in her case from the files of the Senate.

DUTIES ON IMPORTED GOODS BY STEAM-SHIP ASIA.

On motion of Mr. HOAR, it was Ordered, That the papers heretofore referred to the Finance Committee with Senate bill No. 2188 be printed.

PUGET SOUND FORTIFICATIONS.

Mr. DOLPH submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate copies of all reports of boards of engineers and officers of the Army on file in the Department concerning the necessity for fortifications upon Puget Sound, Washington Territory, and the practicability of fortifying the entrances to said sound, together with his recommendations in relation thereto.

RESERVOIRS IN ARID REGION.

Mr. STEWART submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to report to the Senate what appropriation is necessary to enable the United States Geologic a Survey to carry into effect the joint resolution, directing the Secretary of the Interior, by means of the Geological Survey, to investigate the practicability of constructing reservoirs for the storage of water in the arid region of the United States, and to report to Congress, approved March 20, 1888, and the several acts of Congress requiring such Geological Survey, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to classify the public lands and furnish a map or maps showing the various divisions of the public domain suitable for agricultural, mineral, and other purposes, and particularly to segregate the lands susceptible of irrigation, where irrigation is required, from other lands, and designating places for reservoirs, canals, and other hydraulic works.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

Mr. BERRY. I desire to give notice that on Thursday morning, at the conclusion of the morning business, I will, with the consent of the Senate, submit some remarks on the resolution of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] to refer the President's message to the Committee on Finance.

EASTERN BRANCH BRIDGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business, the Calendar, under Rule VIII, is in order.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2458) to amend an act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Eastern Branch of the Potomac River at the foot of Pennsylvania avenue east.

Mr. BLAIR. I stated a short time since that I desired at the proper time, before proceeding to the consideration of other than morning business, to have the motion disposed of with reference to the second reading and reference of the bill introduced by myself several days ago, and which was postponed until this morning. I desire now to call it up and have it acted upon.

Mr. CAMERON. I will state that the bill which I ask to have considered at this time is in reference to the building of a bridge in the District of Columbia, the work upon which is now delayed for want of a sufficient appropriation. The bill comes from the Committee on Commerce with a unanimous recommendation for its passage, and I do not think it will meet with any opposition whatever. If the Senator from New Hampshire will give way for five minutes I think the bill can be passed. Should there be any debate upon it, I shall withdraw the bill. For as little time as will be required to dispose of it it can scarcely interfere with the bill the Senator from New Hampshire wishes to have considered.

Mr. BLAIR. I have no objection to the consideration of the bill moved by the Senator from Pennsylvania, but I do not desire to lose the opportunity of having the bill to which I refer disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire will be recognized to call up his bill. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill which he has indicated. It will be read at length for information, if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was in line 5, after the word "over," to strike out the word "or" and insert the word "and;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to make such alterations in the plan of said bridge as will best accommodate the traffic over and under said bridge.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What does the phrase "and under" mean?

Mr. CAMERON. It refers to the railroad. The other amendments will explain it.

Mr. MCPHERSON. If the Senator from Vermont will permit me I will simply state that this bridge was authorized to be constructed in accordance with a certain plan within the limit of the appropriation, and the appropriation was something like $70,000 under the amount asked for by the board of engineers to build a suitable bridge. The appropriation the Department asked for was $172,000, and Congress only appropriated $100,000. They found that in the construction of the bridge they were required to build a very light structure, with very short spans, and after they began to construct the bridge they discovered that they were placing the piers of the bridge on the line that had been laid out by the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad, and that they were really occupying territory belonging to the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad in its original plan for its road. Therefore there was a necessity for changing the plan of the bridge, and they got into a suit with the railroad people, and the whole construction of it has been arrested owing to the action of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad and the War Department.

The bridge itself will be entirely incomplete, entirely insufficient, as the board of engineers now avow, and they ask for an additional appropriation of money in order that retaining walls may be put up on the western end of the bridge to hold the embankment from going into the river, and also for making of increased strength the abutments and a longer span over the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad to enable them to straighten their road on the original line that they filed. The road is not now laid upon the line that was originally filed, but owing to the expense of the structure and the necessity of time in the completion of the road they have a very crooked road, and for the safety of the traveling public the road ought to be straightened, and in order to do this, to get rid of all these suits and to build a suitable bridge, one that will accommodate the traffic over the bridge as well as traffic under the bridge, it is proposed to make an additional appropriation of money and to build such a bridge as the board of engineers originally intended, and which could have been built with the appropriation they asked to have made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think I understand it now; but I should be glad to know whose land it is that this railway is now on, and whose land it is where the line was originally laid and where there is now no road, as I understand it, and which Congress is asked to expend more money to make more convenient for the purposes of the railroad.

If this is the railroad property which Congress is undertaking to pass with a new highway in the nature of a bridge, and therefore interfering with private property rights, then it would probably seem to follow that the public ought to pay the expense of it. If the railroad crosses property of the United States at that place, on the shore of the Eastern Branch, which it has not paid for and obtained by lawful ways, and it is necessary to have the span of the bridge there longer and more expensive in order to accommodate the traffic of the railroad, I submit with due humility that the railroad company ought to pay for it, and the bill ought to provide for it.

Mr. MCPHERSON. An amendment provides for that.

Mr. CAMERON. If the Senator from Vermont will permit the further amendments of the committee to be stated he will find that the point he makes is provided for.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I shall be very glad to find that to be the case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 6, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirty" and insert "sixty;" so as to read:

And for said purpose the sum of $60,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add to the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company pay their fair and just proportion of the cost of said alteration at the west end of said bridge, to be determined by the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 3508) for the relief of William G. Galloway, late captain Fifteenth, United States Army; and

A bill (H. R. 4327) regulating the construction of bridges over the Muskingum River in Ohio.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 1663) authorizing the Little Rock and Alexandria Railway Company to build certain bridges in the State of Arkansas; and

A bill (S. 2220) to correct an error in and to further amend "An act to authorize the Georgia Pacific Railroad Company to construct bridges across the Sunflower, Yazoo, and Tombigbee Rivers, in Mississippi," approved March 3, 1887.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 309) for the relief of R. G. Huston & Co.;

A bill (S. 643) to construct a road to the national cemetery at Corinth, Miss.;

A bill (S. 660) for the relief of Charles Murphy;

A bill (S. 1564) for the relief of importers of animals for breeding purposes in certain cases; and Joint resolution (S. R. 65) to print Executive Document No. 51, first session of the Forty-ninth Congress, on the subject of cattle and dairy farming.

APPOINTMENTS OF CONFEDERATE SOLDIERS.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, it will be remembered that on the 19th of the month, I think it was, I introduced a bill providing for an amendment of the law touching appointments to the civil service which would permit wounded disabled soldiers who received their disability in the Confederacy to receive preference in appointments such as they were competent to fill, as against other persons connected with the Confederacy and disloyal who during the period of the war were of mature age. That bill was objected to upon the second reading, and the question now pending is whether the bill shall be read a second time and referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment. It was discussed somewhat the next day after its introduction and postponed until the day following on request, and upon the day following, on the request of several Senators on each side of the Chamber, it was again postponed until to-day, and now I ask the Senate to dispose of the pending question, which is whether the bill shall be referred. I do not at this time care to say anything, but the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER] would like to be heard.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is, Shall the bill be read a second time?

Mr. BLAIR. I will then amend the motion——

Mr. EDMUNDS. The bill can not be referred until after its second reading.

Mr. BLAIR. The bill came up in the ordinary routine, and upon its reference to the committee the question was raised, as I understood. I desire that the motion be in form to refer the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The rule requiring that bills shall have their several readings on separate days, unless by unanimous consent, was applied to this bill; after the first reading the second reading on the same day was objected to, whereupon it went over, and the question now recurs on the second reading of the bill.

Mr. BLAIR. I desire that the motion be treated as a motion for its second reading and reference to a committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There can not be such a motion. We must first settle the question of the second reading. The Senator can give notice of the motion to refer after the second reading.

Mr. BLAIR. By unanimous consent the motion can be treated in that way, and I ask unanimous consent that the pending question be considered to be on the motion for the second reading of the bill and its reference to the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the question recurs, Shall this bill be read the second time?

Mr. BLAIR. I then give notice that I will move to refer after the second reading.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the other day, when the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds reported a bill for the erection of a public building at Lowell and I asked unanimous consent that the bill might then be considered, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] objected, but he informed me afterwards that he would waive his objection, as the objection was made under a misapprehension. I ask unanimous consent that that bill be now taken up for consideration. If it leads to any debate I shall withdraw it.

Mr. BLAIR. I hope the Senator will not prefer a request of that kind at this time. I desire that this bill be disposed of.

Mr. HOAR. It will take only half a minute.

Mr. BLAIR. But I desire to go on and dispose of this matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER] has the floor and has the right to yield if he desires.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I did yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. But the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] objects.

Mr. BLAIR. I shall not object if others do not.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Perhaps I had better go on with the few remarks I want to make on this bill.

I formerly said, as I thought, enough from the standpoint of a Confederate soldier. I did the Republican element of this Senate injustice in the opening remarks I then made. I had heard some suggestions of disapprobation from this side of the Chamber, and I did the Senators on this side, with one possible exception, the injustice to have used this language:

But I can not see the objection to it [this bill] which seems to have seized hold of the minds of some of the Senators on this side of the Chamber.

I perused the RECORD the next morning and I found that the objections came from Confederate soldiers on the other side of the Chamber. It is to them that I propose to reply.

I am the only Republican, I suppose, in the Senate who was a Confederate and dare to say so now, and dare to be a Republican notwithstanding the epithets hurled at him, who served from Mechanicsville to Harrison's Landing under the banner of the Senator from South Carolina, then commanding a division in which I had the honor to serve.

The public mind can not be misled by statements made in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I propose to make the bill a part of the record, and for that purpose I shall read it myself:

Be it enacted, etc., That before persons shall be appointed to the civil service of the United States it shall be made to appear whether such persons were loyal to the Government of the United States during the war of the rebellion, if of lawful age any time during said war.

I will submit this to every Grand Army post in this country, and I apprehend that no men who were soldiers would object to it. But, further, it provides:

And whenever such persons not loyal to the United States during said war shall be appointed to office in the civil service, those not dishonorably discharged from military or naval service of the so-called Confederate States and now suffering from disability resulting from wounds or sickness incurred in said service shall be preferred to other persons not shown to have been loyal in the war of the rebellion: Provided, They are found to possess the business capacity necessary to the proper discharge of such offices.

I would submit this proposition to the Grand Army posts; I would take the opinion of the Federal soldiers here to-day, and ask, if we are to take men for the civil service of the Government of the United States and men from the South, whether we should not give preference to the maimed Confederate. As I said the other day, if you want a loyal man, take a man who fought.

I am glad to be able to have this opportunity of calling the attention of some men in the South to the fact that they are still representing ideas hateful to the South rather than its patriotism. I read in this RECORD that no Confederate soldier asks anything in the way of favor from the Federal Government. I agree that this emanated from the mouth of an eminent Confederate soldier. Mr. President, the Confederates have had very few to voice their wishes. They have had no channel through which to express themselves in the Congress of the United States. I represent, in some capacity, a Confederate soldier element, and yield to no man in it in my devotion to them (not to the cause, for I yielded that).

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] congratulated my colleague on his statesmanlike speech. I felt its tones in the most vital part of the physical man. He has a reputation in the South as being generous. His magnanimity has lately taken the direction of starving the living and then making an appropriation for a tombstone. He is gratified at that expression which emanated, almost as if stereotyped, from three tongues on the other side of the chamber, that the Confederate soldiers asked nothing. Mr. President, it is that same kind and quality of statesmanship which was a disgrace to the Confederacy during four years of war which should have put all burdens on others than those following a commander.

It is that same ideal statesmanship that fixed the price of flour by act of the Confederate congress at $30 a barrel, and paid the infantry soldier in the field $11 a month. It was that kind of statesmanship that passed the conscript act, levied upon the physical power of those States latest to secede, from the cradle to the grave, extending that act even to sixty years, and yet exempting one overseer for every twenty slaves.

I am standing here to-day for those who had no slaves, and who were in the armies of the South. They were the Confederate soldiers. The record that they made then, the unchanged record that they have made since, will stand; but I defy the Senator from South Carolina, my colleague from Virginia, and the Senator from Connecticut to represent the views of those who were the real Confederate soldiers, and who to-day compose the reviled loyal element of the South.

I read here that no Confederate soldier asks any favors. I speak in behalf of those who served in the ranks. I never rode in an ambulance a day; I never was sick a day; I never was out of a single fight in which the regiment and brigade that I belonged to were engaged. I suffered two terms of imprisonment, and a man who challenges my loyalty to the Confederacy during the war does it with the same hazard of his veracity as if he were to challenge my loyalty to the Union to-day.

Mr. President, this is not a pleasant task. I am sorry that the crippled soldier whom I wish to represent here has not some one abler than I to present his case, especially when it is antagonized by those under whom he served. I say to you again, they are the loyal element of the South to-day; and they would be the manly element, if they were here to-day, who would not endeavor to doctor a record in disparagement of a comrade. I say I represent them to-day, when they are so misrepresented by those who, when they go home, claim to be their best friends; those who plead patriotism here and talk Confederacy at home.

Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut expressed congratulations to his Confederate friend. I have known the Confederate who is to-day the loyal man—not the brigadier or the major general, but the soldier—I have known him when that statesmanship which is impleaded here in his behalf asked him to surrender $5 of his Confederate money for what was $3 in a new issue of the same currency; which might as well have been drowned in the James River and Kanawha Canal. Those were the Confederate soldiers. That is the statesmanship which is extolled. What would the Union soldiers have done if they had been required to come back to Washington by that peculiar style of statesmanship, and required to give up $5 of their greenbacks for $3 of the same money, printed from the same plate? Yet the Senator from Connecticut says that he congratulates my colleague on the statesmanship which he represents here!

I am not here as a persistent patriot. I am not here to ask for any other terms than those which were accorded to me years ago; but I am here to answer every accusation of the kind that I find in this RECORD against men who were Confederates, and who have the courage of their convictions now. I should not have said this much if it had not been that this special RECORD needed some notice. I now again call attention to the bill. There are two provisions in it. One is protective of the Union soldier. I think I have, during my service here, shown my regard for him without vaunting it. The other provides that when your Civil Service Commission, or your civil service administration, shall go South the preference shall be given to the wounded or the disabled

Confederate as against that horde of hungry office-seekers whom you find in every hotel corridor in this city—whom the Union soldiers respect only for gentlemanly deportment when they so entitle themselves.

I can not understand how three Confederates and one Federal should oppose this bill. It is useless to tell me, with my experience and almost daily observation, that there are no Confederates, crippled and maimed, begging on the street. I should prefer to state the contrary. I live and work for them when I am at home; and no one of them has ever contributed a penny for any service I have performed for them.

But, sir, it is a fact, and I state to the Senator from South Carolina, that walking from my State to his are legless Confederate soldiers begging bread. I could furnish proof of it from every household in a thousand in the community in which I live. False pride would make some propound a statement which I prefer to have measured by a proper regard for the truth. We have in soldiers' homes alone a multitude to take care of. That will be brought into this arena of debate, no doubt; but who gets into these soldiers' homes? One who is now begging for bread would have about as much chance to get into these so-called homes as an iceberg would have to float through Florida.

I have specified to the Senate what my views are. I know I shall have to submit to criticism for what I have said.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I offered this bill after considerable and prolonged reflection, but I draughted it the afternoon I offered it in consequence of a conversation with a crippled Confederate soldier which I had with him on that day. That conversation was of a character which brought my attention to a focus upon the subject, and I prepared the bill, and it is here, and I stand by it in its present shape and in its consequences, whatever they may be.

The bill does not pave the way to pension for any man who was engaged in combat with the United States. Everybody knows that such a consequence is an impossibility. It is no entering-wedge to pensioning the Confederate soldier. It is simply a bill embodying in its terms an act of humanity, or, if you please, sir, of humanity blended with magnanimity, and is an act which this great nation may well perform. The bill provides—

That before persons shall be appointed to the civil service of the United States it shall be made to appear whether such persons were loyal to the Government of the United States during the war of the rebellion, if of lawful age at any time during said war; and whenever such persons not loyal to the United States during said war shall be appointed to office in the civil service, those not dishonorably discharged from the military or naval service of the so-called Confederate States, and now suffering from disability resulting from wounds or sickness incurred in said service, shall be preferred to other persons not shown to have been loyal in the war of the rebellion, provided they are found to possess the business capacity necessary to the proper discharge of such offices.

As the law now stands, only one class of citizens are preferred in the matter of appointments to the civil service, unless that preference is made upon capacity and fitness for the office. Section 1754 of the Revised Statutes provides:

SEC. 1754. Persons honorably discharged from the military or naval service by reason of disability resulting from wounds or sickness incurred in the line of duty, shall be preferred for appointments to civil offices, provided they are found to possess the business capacity necessary for the proper discharge of the duties of such offices.

There then is a preference to the Union soldier above all others loyal to the Union for civil appointments, other conditions being equal. That law has been carried into effect, we all know, very largely; it has on the whole been carried out in its spirit, but with a great many exceptions in actual practice. But the point I wish to call the attention of the Senate particularly to here is this, that whether the preference be given or whether the preference be not given, there is nothing conferring any gratuity, there is nothing in the nature of pension, there is nothing in the nature of gift. The individual is to render a full consideration for that which he receives. The Government is supposed to be in want of service, civil service, and to pay for that service precisely as a private employer is expected to give compensation to those who render a full consideration for what they receive. It is a matter of equality upon the two sides; and the Government comes in and says that the wounded, disabled, maimed Union soldier shall have the preference above all other human beings, whether they be civilians who were never disloyal, whether they may be civilians who once were disloyal but who are now loyal, or those engaged in military service against the country.

This bill, like that provision of the statutes, proposes no gratuity; it merely proposes that as among disloyal persons, the same as among Union soldiers—that is, among disloyal persons who can render service at the present time—those who were in the Confederate army, and who were in that army during the war, and who were disabled in that service, shall have the preference above other then disloyal soldiers and civilians if they are otherwise competent to fulfill the duties required of the appointee to the office to be filled. That is the provision of this bill; no proposition for a gift, no proposition for a pension. We all know that it is almost impossible to get through a bill of any consequence that will secure pensions for the soldiers of the North, those who are preferred by this very statute now on our books; and when this bill was offered, so delicate is the sensitiveness on the subject, so great the apprehension, that to protect themselves from any charge the most remote of doing a thing that could inure to the benefit of disabled men Senators on this floor, themselves Confederate soldiers and disabled in the service of the Confederacy, have risen and said they did not want this bill. They could not offer this bill. We understand very well the embarrassments which might surround them in doing it, and therefore it is idle talk, it seems to me, to say that the passage of such a law as this can be an entering-wedge or an opening to any possible danger of the pensioning of those who were in arms against their country.

But let us look further. It has been stated here on the floor, it was stated by the honorable Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], it was stated by the honorable Senator from Connecticut now in his seat [Mr. HAWLEY], that this was a proposition to give civil employment to these disabled men because they rendered service against the country. It does no such thing. It is not a proposition to put them in civil employment because they rendered service against the country. If it be a proposition to prefer them on any account, it is simply a proposition to prefer them because they were brave and ready to risk their lives, and did risk their lives and suffer injury in their persons in combat, for that which they believed to be right; and we would have conferred the same honor or distinction, if you call it that, which I do not—we would have selected them just exactly the same if they had exhibited those same qualities in foreign wars or in the conquest of foreign provinces which we had subjugated in a foreign war. We should have preferred them not because they shot the soldiers of the United States or made war against us as our enemy, but we might well have preferred them for reasons either of state policy or of magnanimity or of charity. We might well have given preference to them from any of these motives or other motives that might be suggested. But it is no preference to them because they had done injury to our country.

There is no principle of that kind in this bill, and no man can find a principle of that kind in it. Precisely the contrary is the idea inculcated in this bill. It provides not that the man who has rendered service against the country shall on that account receive an appointment; by no means. If that were the provision of the bill, instead of the men specifically provided for, those men who were most powerful in their opposition to the country, who contributed most to the injury that was done the United States in that great war, would be the men who would be selected, if that were the principle on which appointments were proposed to be made. But on the contrary, if Lee were still surviving, a Confederate soldier disabled and competent to perform the duties of the position would be selected under the provisions of the bill in preference to Lee. Why? Not to give him distinction and reward for the wrong and injury he had done the country, but for other reasons; for if that were the principle, the man who had done the most injury would be the man first selected, would be the man preferred. As between Stonewall Jackson, who was honest, who lost a limb, who was disabled, and Jefferson Davis, who rendered civil service, but far more hurtful and dangerous than that of any man whatever under arms against the Government—as against that civilian Davis, were his disabilities removed and he now loyal, Stonewall Jackson under the same circumstances would be preferred; but as against them both the poorest private of the Confederate army, if he were disabled and he could stand about these doors or perform the duties of a clerk in the postal service or in any Department here in Washington, would be the man who by the provisions of this bill would be preferred for the appointment.

So, Mr. President, it must be entirely clear that this bill is wholly free from the objections which some Senators have suggested to it, that it is an entering-wedge to pensioning the soldiers of the South, or that it is in any way conferring a distinction upon those who are proposed to be appointed under these provisions because they were enemies of the Union. It is not at all so. It is simply an example of magnanimity, and above all, it is simply, as I look at it, an act not of charity, because we receive all that we give; but it is that good, old-fashioned, ordinary preference, benevolent in its nature, which we give always and everywhere from the natural and spontaneous impulses of the human heart, the better opportunity to the man who needs it the most. That is all there is in this bill, and so far as its effects are concerned, as a question of public policy, I hope and believe we shall be justified by the event in doing it.

I have received since this matter came up many communications, showing that the soldiers of the South are in need of the relief (if it may be so called) such as would be given by allowing them the preference in these appointments. I will read only one or two as specimens. I have here a letter from County Line, N. C., March 20, 1888, addressed to myself, in which the writer says:

DEAR SIR: Allow me to thank you for the generous, magnanimous, and Christian-like spirit that you manifested in our behalf the other day, when you offered a bill showing a disposition to favor a little the unfortunate one-legged and one-armed soldiers of the South. Coming, as it does, from a Northern man and a Republican, it does look like healing the breach. You have struck the key-note that would tell if there were others who had the same soul you have. There are no pensions for us. We went at the call of our governor, just as we would have done had we lived in New Hampshire. Our arms and legs are moldering in Virginia and elsewhere. We had nothing whatever to do with bringing on the fight. Those who did, as a general thing, staid out.

Since you offered that bill I have taken a survey of the field around me. I know of 12 men, 2 Republicans and 10 Democrats, who lost arms and legs, and of the 12 not one of them was twenty-one years old when he entered the army. So you see we were not responsible for the trouble. Many have succeeded in doing well, others have not been so fortunate, and will be hard run in old age. I am a Democrat, have been all the while, but I say if the Republican party would show the disposition that you have done, the sectional idea would be dissipated quicker than in any other way. The division in politics would then be on live issues, not on past misfortunes. I am glad that I can take any Union soldier by the hand and give him a good, hearty shake. The true soldiers could settle it all. The cowards make the fuss. I am glad to know and feel that when on the battle-field, when Union soldiers fell into my hands, I never failed to give them the contents of my haversack and canteen. I am glad of it now, for they are my countrymen. I do think your efforts in our behalf is a standing rebuke to many of own people, who have a disposition to put in young men to the exclusion of these poor crippled men. May God bless you.

From a crippled Confederate Soldier and Democrat.

P. S. Sentimentalism will say it is all right, but numbers of these men are having a hard time now, and the next ten years will be worse. Those who have professions, and who have been successful, are safe from it.

I shall not take the time of the Senate to read similar communications coming from Virginia and other States, but this is a letter which indicates, I think, to a reflecting mind that the real reconstruction of this country would be very easy to accomplish if there were wisdom, if there were a little inclination among those who could put forth generous offerings to contribute something of the emotions, if you please, that should satisfy the whole country that the masses of the people once more love one another.

I had a conversation only a day or two ago with a man who told me in regard to the young men of the South: "They are growing up, many of them, in the belief that the Northern people still hate them, and there is far too little communication between the two sections." They are growing up with that understanding, and they say that if there were trouble again the Northern heart would turn toward the South with the old feeling of hate. They do not seem to know that the masses of the Northern people, victorious as they have been, carry none of the feelings of the conqueror toward the conquered. They desire most heartily to be reunited, and, as this man suggests, upon the live issues of the day and not upon the misfortunes of the past.

As to the number of men to whom this bill might give relief at the South I have a word to say. In Mr. Spofford's American Almanac of 1888 I find, on page 23, that the number of soldiers in the Confederate service who died of wounds or disease was 133,821, and that is but a partial statement. I think it is ordinarily estimated that on battle-fields five times as many are wounded as are slain, and I suppose it would be an under rather than an over estimate to say that, if in the Confederacy 133,821 lives were lost during the progress of the war, there must have been surviving at the close at least half a million who were wounded. I make allowance for the great fatality among the wounded among the Confederate soldiers, which I am satisfied during the years since the war has been even greater than it has been among the Union soldiers. Making due allowance for that, I do not think there can be any doubt that there must be a quarter of a million at least surviving of the wounded of the Confederacy.

We know how impoverished, how desolate the South was left by the war; how hardly able even the strong were to get the ordinary necessaries of life; but I think there must be a quarter of a million or more of these wounded men. It seems to me not improbable that at least fifty or sixty thousand of them are without arms and without legs, maimed in that regard, and a great many more of the wounded, otherwise disabled from the vigorous prosecution of the ordinary avocations of life, are in needy circumstances. We can not pension those men. We can never do anything for them unless in some indirect manner. We do control the civil appointments. All the way from the war down we have been appointing Confederates when the Republicans controlled the Government, as well as since the Democracy have assumed that control. Grant appointed Ackerman and Mosby. Hayes appointed Postmaster-General Key. I do not know but Longstreet is the marshal of the State of Georgia to-day. He was a Republican appointee. These, one of them a civilian and three soldiers, were appointed by Republican administrations, and in preference over Union soldiers even, who by the law have the preference over everybody. Congress practically pardoned and gave citizenship to the great mass of those who were engaged in the Confederacy on taking the oath of allegiance, and during all the time since they have been loyal to the United States and are entitled to appointments and receive appointments under the laws of the United States, so that to-day I suppose of the appointments made from the lately Confederate States at least ninety-nine out of every one hundred are appointments of men who, if then of age, were loyal to the Confederacy and so disloyal to the Union, whether they served in the army of the Confederacy or in its civil service. It is too late for my Republican friends to say that there is any novel doctrine obtruded in debate or upon the attention of the Senate or of the country in the bill which I have offered.

No, Mr. President, I am not asking in the introduction of this bill that any new thing be done. I wonder if Lincoln, or Grant, or Sherman, or Sheridan, were they members of the Senate, would oppose this bill to-day? If so, upon what principle? Would they not be obliged to contradict every sentiment and every illustration and precedent which the Republican party has written upon the statute-book and upon its own platform in the past, so far as civil appointments are concerned?

I was speaking to this—I have been diverted from the point—that as a reasonable proposition there were probably sixty thousand of these disabled men, poor men, in the Confederate States to-day who served in the Confederate army. Some of these undoubtedly are in the successful prosecution of business, but a vast number of them are unquestionably in need. Consider how our own one-legged and maimed soldiers would have been situated in the North if they had been without assistance all these years. What would have been their condition even with the vast resources and great opportunities of the North? On the other hand, the South, greatly more impoverished than was the North by the war and a much larger proportion of her fighting men disabled and destroyed by it—what, I say, must have been the condition during all these years of those crippled Confederate soldiers, loyal as they are now and have been since the close of the war?

I find from an examination of the report of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] that there are in the classified post-office service alone 94,000 appointments. How many of these are postmasters? How many are postmasters in the South? It is but fair to suppose that at least one-third of them are appointees in the Southern States.

Here are the Departments, and all the way throughout the tremendous operations of our Government there are to be found employés who come from the Confederate States, men who were in the Confederate civil and military service, men who are now loyal, and we are appointing them every day. If we had a law enabling our appointing officers to stand up against the importunities of the hungry people, the appeals of those men who are able to obtain favors—and we know something of them at the North—if they had a law which would enable them at the South to insist upon the patronage of the Federal Government at the South being applied in a way to give assistance to this class of appointees, the crippled Confederate soldiers, would they not be likely to get more of it than they now do?

Under the figures I have given in regard to the appointments that are within the disposition of the Federal Government, is it not clear that the appointments could be used with great effect in this beneficial way? In the Army are 28,000 and in the Navy 11,000 men, making almost 40,000 men. The total number of appointees, or those deriving salaries and pay from the United States, is 171,846, the total employés of the several branches of the civil service, 132,072. So I submit that if we had such a law as I have proposed in this bill we would be able to supply without any pension the necessities of crippled soldiers in the Southern part of our country.

I admit it may be said that they are no better than other men who are crippled; they do not need employment more than others who are equally poor and equally disabled; but I must confess to myself that I think it would be a wise public policy, that it would tend to the permanent reunion and the permanent endurance of the institutions of this country, if we would show a little magnanimity towards these impoverished, these crippled soldiers of the South. I think there is a wise public policy in doing it. We know how it is. Those States went out as a whole, and there does not seem to be any use whatever in undertaking to discriminate against them now since they have come back in a condition of loyalty to the United States. We can well give way to such motives of generosity, of magnanimity, of admiration for brave deeds as we may see fit and may think wise. It is with these views that I offer this bill.

THE WIND AND THE SUN.

A dispute once arose between the Wind and the Sun which was the stronger of the two, and they agreed to put the point upon this issue that whichever soonest made a traveler take off his cloak should be counted the more powerful. The Wind began and blew with all his might and main a blast, cold and fierce as a Thracian storm; but the stronger he blew the closer the traveler wrapped his cloak around him and the tighter he grasped it with his hands. Then broke out the Sun; with his welcome beams he dispersed the vapor and cold; the traveler felt the genial warmth, and as the Sun shone brighter and brighter he sat down, overcome with the heat, and cast his cloak on the ground.

Thus the Sun was declared the conqueror; and it has ever been deemed that persuasion is better than force, and that sunshine of a kind and gentle manner will sooner lay open a poor man's heart than all the threatenings and force of blustering authority.

This bill, introduced in the usual way, was objected to and went over to the second day, when I understood, as I think the RECORD will show, that I moved that it have its second reading and be referred to the committee. That was the motion which I intended to make. I am corrected by being told that the motion is to proceed to the second reading of the bill. If this bill should be read the second time, I will move its reference in the ordinary manner to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to remind the Senate that this debate has arisen in an unusual way; that it does not give a fair opportunity for the consideration of the bill upon its merits. A bill is in the nature of a petition, and it is understood by the universal practice, by the spirit of the law of petitions, that it should receive consideration in the usual way.

If this were a proposition to destroy the Government and subvert the Constitution, if it were full of treason, it might be well that it should not be received or entertained at all; but I can present my petition including every idea in this bill and remove every objection. I place it in the form of a bill and ask its reference, such as would usually be accorded to a petition. If the action of the committee shall be adverse, it will be simply the usual action in regard to three-quarters of the measures which are offered in the Senate and in the House. But why this bill, which embodies no wrongful idea—and if it does it is so difficult to detect that I am unable to see it—should be selected for objection on its second reading, when I do not recollect during the short period I have been in the Senate any such rejection, I am wholly at a loss to understand. I hope the Senate will give the usual hearing to the bill. I remember that when the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] only a little while ago introduced a bill for the prohibition of the ordinary trade in intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia, it was denounced from one end of the country to the other by a very large class of people as a violation of the great rights of personal property and personal liberty, but it went to the appropriate committee, as innumerable bills of the kind have gone to committees and are still in committee, as I understand. I do not know that a single member of the District Committee favors that bill, and no report has yet been made.

No more serious charge can be made against the bill I have offered here than has been made against the Senator's own bill, which I favored myself. I have stated my profound conviction that this is a wise bill to make into a law. If the Senate refuses to consider it, that may become a precedent that it will be very difficult for us to follow. I desire this bill, which embodies my sentiment, to go to a committee in the ordinary form, and I hope the Senate will hesitate before it denies that request.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, as to the courtesy of this business, the rules of the Senate for now nearly one hundred years have provided that every bill should go through the very test that this one was going through before it should be read a second time. It is not usual here, it is true, that discussion upon the merits of a bill is had on the second reading, for reasons of convenience; but in most parliamentary assemblages in civilized countries the chief discussion upon the broad merits of bills is had on the question, "Shall the bill be read a second time?" There is, therefore, on a measure of this importance, no want of courtesy in taking the sense of the Senate on the propriety of reading this bill a second time.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question? In parliamentary procedure is it customary to discuss a bill on its merits in the body at large before its reference to a committee?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it is, most decidedly.

Mr. BLAIR. And refer it to a committee afterwards?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Depending on whether it gets through the second reading. We do not generally refer a bill if the parliamentary body refuse to read it a second time. When a measure is proposed that is so strange and so unique and so important as to attract attention upon its broad merits which do not need the detailed consideration of the body that it is brought before, then it is not only right, but it is wise that the principles of the bill should be considered, and if they are thought to be vicious, that it should be made an end of then because there is no need of an inquiry by a committee which can be better employed in doing something else, it is ended at once. So much for that.

Mr. President, this bill is either a bill which in terms confers a benefit upon a particular class of persons on account of the particular quality and relation that they occupy as described, or it is a mere sham and a humbug—one or the other. My friend from New Hampshire has shown that this bill would be undoubtedly a great benefit to the particular class of persons who are described in it. It is not, therefore, a sham and a humbug, but it has deep strength in it, and deep importance in it, and a great principle.

We have now on the statute-book the law that he has read, saying that a particular class of the citizens of the United States who have distinguished themselves in fighting for their country shall be preferred in a certain class of Government employments. This bill declares that a particular class of citizens of the United States who have distinguished themselves in fighting against their country shall be in like manner preferred, and for the same reason. That is the proposition.

Mr. BLAIR. That is not the proposition.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator will pardon me. As I have only got four minutes, I will say my say and he will have an opportunity to reply.

If you take out of this bill the pivot and the key of it, that these citizens so named served against their country in trying to overthrow it, then you have got a bill of simple authority to persons who were maimed or wounded that they shall be employed in the public service. They exist in every part of the country, and always have, without regard to military service on either side, and always will.

All there is in this bill is exactly the reverse of and in the face of the proposition that now stands on the law that because certain other citizens of the United States fought for their country they shall be preferred, and this bill is based upon exactly the opposite principle, and no other, that it is because these gentlemen served against the country that they are to be preferred in public employment. I think it safe to say that no such proposition as this was ever made in a legislative body in the world before, and I wish I might say—although I am getting too old to be astonished at anything—that it is probable that no such proposition will ever again be made in any legislative body in the world, for it destroys all distinction in respect of patriotism and the reverse; and it would be equally true if these persons here named had been the subjects of a foreign prince who had fought in public war against the United States and had now come here and were citizens of it, and it should then be a proposition that those subjects of Her Majesty the Queen of Great Britain, Empress of India, etc., who in the last war had fought against the United States but were now here should be preferred on that account!

The proposition, I may say with great respect to my friend from New Hampshire, is to my humble comprehension a simple monstrosity. It destroys all distinction between upholding a government and overthrowing it. I am not now at all upon the question of the sincerity of these gentlemen or the intrinsic justice of their cause even, as many of them believed undoubtedly that there was intrinsic justice in it; that has nothing to do with the question. It is the question of whether you can put upon the legislative acts of a sovereign State a premium and a favor for and in behalf of the people who have served against it on that ground.

Nobody objects to Confederate soldiers or Confederate citizens sitting in this Chamber. They do not sit here because they were such. They sit here because the period of that hostility to the United States has gone by. They stand just like every other citizen, no better and no worse. That is where they stand. If that be so, the illustration of my friend that General Grant appointed men who had been Confederates, and that this Administration does it, and all that, has no bearing upon the question at all. General Grant did not appoint those men because they had been Confederates. He appointed them because they were useful and honorable and patriotic citizens of the United States when he appointed them; and so the States have appointed gentlemen whom I see here in the same way, and so the present Administration appoints people who were in the rebellion in the same way, not because they were in that, not because they have a right to be rewarded for it now either by administrative action or legislative authority, but because there is oblivion on that, and without regard to their previous history in that respect they are common and equal citizens, with equal rights with anybody else.

That is the distinction, and I hope, therefore, that the Senate will not take the fatal step of reading this bill a second time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANDERSON in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business of yesterday.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had yesterday approved and signed the act (S. 2494) to provide for the payment of the funeral expenses of the late Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada, submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2440) for the relief of the State of Oregon; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

FUNERAL OF CHIEF-JUSTICE WAITE.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That a committee of five Senators be appointed by the Chair, whose duty it shall be to accompany the remains of the Chief-Justice to Toledo, in the State of Ohio, and attend the funeral there.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore subsequently announced as the committee authorized by the order of the Senate to accompany the remains of the late Chief-Justice and to attend the funeral at Toledo Messrs. SHERMAN, ALLISON, EVARTS, GEORGE, and GRAY.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate meet at 11.30 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet at 11.30 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to.

PURCHASE OF BONDS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5034) to provide for the purchase of United States bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANDERSON in the chair). The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART].

Mr. MCPHERSON. I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the bill as additional sections the following:

SEC. —. That any person may deposit at any mint or assay office of the United States either gold or silver bullion, or both, in quantities of not less than 5 ounces of gold or 80 ounces of silver, and demand and receive coin certificates therefor. The price to be paid for gold bullion, in exchange for certificates, shall be at the rate of $1 for 25.8 grains of gold nine-tenths fine; the price to be paid for silver bullion, in exchange for certificates, shall be stated by the Secretary of the Treasury on the first and fifteenth day of each calendar month, and when either of these days shall fall on Sunday, or any other holiday, such statement shall be made on the following secular day, and the price so stated shall be equal to the average quotations of silver in the New York City market during the fifteen days next preceding such statement: Provided, That the price stated by the Secretary of the Treasury shall not exceed $1 for 412½ grains of silver nine-tenths fine. Bullion below the standard value deposited under the provisions of this section may be reduced to the required fineness at the several mints and assay offices of the United States, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, at the same cost to the depositor as is now charged for reducing gold bullion to the standard required for coinage.

SEC. —. That the coin certificates issued under the provisions of this act shall be of such denominations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: Provided, That they shall not be of less denomination than $1 or more than $1,000, and that one-half of the amount issued shall be of denominations less than $50, and shall be redeemable in gold or silver coin at the option of the United States. And the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be coined from time to time such portion of the bullion deposited under the provisions of this act as may be necessary to enable him to furnish coin for the redemption of such certificates. All coin certificates issued under the provisions of this act shall be a legal tender at their nominal value for all dues, public and private, except where otherwise expressly stipulated in contracts heretofore made.

Mr. TELLER Mr. President, the financial discussion which has been precipitated on this bill, it seems to me, might better perhaps have been deferred to another occasion. While I agree with the Senator from Nevada that silver should be accorded such usage as it is entitled to as a money metal, I doubt whether it is wise to put that measure on this bill, and I should much have preferred that the Senator from Nevada had reserved his amendment for another bill that is now pending, and upon which it might be put, it seems to me, with greater propriety. But I can not refrain from dissenting from some of the views expressed here yesterday by Senators who spoke on this bill, more particularly the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], who then declared that the fall in silver had been produced by overproduction, and that nobody would deny it. I want to say that I do not believe there is a person whose judgment is entitled to any consideration whatever in this country, save and except those connected with the executive department of this Government, aside from the Senator from Connecticut, who will seriously make that statement.

I did say yesterday that I denied it when he said nobody would deny, and I said I would endeavor to show that it is not correct. I do not intend to be led into a general discussion of the silver question, but I do want to put on record my denial that the divergence between silver and gold is the result of an overproduction of silver, and to say that I do not believe, outside of the executive department of this Government and outside of the officials of the United States, there can be any man found whose judgment is worthy of attention or consideration who has not long since abandoned that view, if he ever entertained it. Silver has not fallen. I deny that silver has fallen. I know that it will not buy as much gold as it would buy in 1873, but, as the Senator from Nevada said yesterday to the Senator from Connecticut, it will buy more wheat, it will buy more corn, it will buy more land, it will buy more ships, it will buy more manufactures, and it will buy more of everything to-day than it would when it was exchangeable 15½ ounces of silver for 1 ounce of gold.

When I make that assertion I do not make it upon my judgment or upon proofs that I have collected, but I make it upon the judgment and the testimony of men who have made this a subject of life study. I said that we might find this charge made by the Executive of the United States, and we find it made by more than one Secretary of the Treasury and by more than one Treasurer and by more than one other public officer of the United States. But the opinion of the world everywhere where this matter has been studied and thought upon is that that is not the true cause of what is called the decline in silver.

I repeat, then, Mr. President, that there has been no fall in silver, but there has been a divergence between silver and gold. And now, not taking up perhaps in the order which I should do if I were entering upon an intelligent and thorough discussion of this question, but going directly to a statement made by the Senator from Connecticut that it was the overproduction of silver which caused its decline in value, let me inquire when did this overproduction commence? And let me inquire who is entitled to say how much silver the wants of mankind require? When silver was demonetized by the United States, when it was demonetized by Germany, had there been any great overproduction? There had been practically no increased production of silver, and the only increased production that there had been anywhere was the increased production in the United States. Practically silver had remained as to production unchangeable in all other parts of the world, and nobody will pretend that when silver was demonetized there was even the pretense in the mind of any man who claimed its demonetization that there was an overproduction. That was an afterthought that came in to justify the act, and was not the moving cause. I need not go into an argument to show why. I have done that before and it has been done by others, and it never has been met by those who claim that silver was not a fit money metal. It never has been claimed by anybody that the facts have not been fairly stated.

I need not go into all the minutiæ of it to show how this was done. Everybody knows that it was moved by the conference of 1867, when silver was worth as much as it had been for fifty years previously; and when that conference met and proposed a single coin it was not upon the theory that there was then or was likely to be an overproduction of silver. It was on an idea first initiated and started by doctrinaires, by men who thought it would be a fine thing to have all the coins of the world of one stamp, of one weight, of one fineness, and of one value. That idea was seized and pressed by the men who held the money of the world, because they saw that it would enrich them, because they saw that if they could destroy one-half of the money of the world as then recognized the effect would be to double the value of all they possessed. The men holding securities, the men holding bonds, the men holding debts against countries and against individuals were those who were interested in the demonetization of silver. It was not demonetized because silver was being poured into the markets of the world in excessive quantities; for up to the time it was demonetized there had been scarcely a perceptible advance in its production, as the Senator will see if he studies the reports on that subject. The Senator from Connecticut said:

I am going to stand by this until somebody shows me that I am wrong, that silver has declined because there has been more produced of it than could be coined under the demonetization of silver in Europe, under our laws for coinage, and than could be used in the arts and manufactures. In other words, more silver was produced than there was use for. I think that will not be denied.

I felt inclined to challenge the statement, and I said:

I will take occasion to deny it if I can get the floor, and I think I can show that there is not the slightest foundation for that statement.

Then the Senator said:

Mr. PLATT. Very well. If that be true, silver is different from any other commodity on earth. When there is a full demand for a commodity the price increases; when there is not a sufficient demand for the production the price decreases; and I shall look with interest to facts and figures which overthrow this universal law with regard to prices.

Nobody had assailed this "universal law;" nobody had asserted that this was not a "universal law" applied to commodities; and nobody had denied that it might be applied to silver. But while the proposition is practically true, it has no application to this case, because the demand was not allowed to exist. The contention between the Senator from Connecticut and myself is this: He says that silver has diverged from gold, and has now ceased to be as valuable when compared with gold as it formerly was, because there is too much of it. I say it has ceased to be as valuable when compared with gold as formerly, not because there is so much of it, but because the function which has made it valuable for the time has been taken from it by law; and that is the consensus of opinion of intelligent people of the world. The men who control the Bank of England and the men who carry on the great industries of that country are a unit on that point. I refer not to the men who own the debts, not to the men who live upon fixed annuities and fixed incomes, but the men who carry on the industrial enterprises of the world and who have studied this question months and years where anybody here has studied it an hour.

Mr. President, what is the value of silver? You may make teaspoons and table-spoons of it, and trays, and a few things of that character; but what is its chief value and what has been its chief value? It is to be used as money by men; it has been always uniformly the money of the people. It has been put into a shape to be transferred from one man to another in payment of debts. It is useful for its purchasing property. It has been the equal of gold on a ratio either fixed by the consent of the seller and purchaser, or fixed by the decree of the legislative mind; and when it had its principal use as money, when it was undisturbed by legislation as it had been undisturbed for many years, there was no question but what it performed its duty as money as readily as and even more readily than gold. To-day, notwithstanding its degradation, it is in the hands of more people discharging the money function than gold, three to one. It is the money of the common people, and it is the money of commerce as it has been for thousands of years.

I do not intend to rely upon my own statement; I propose to call the attention of the Senate for a few moments to some authorities. I do not intend, as I said, to make an extended speech on the subject, but I intend to call the attention of the Senate to the testimony before the royal commissioners in England where men of world-wide reputation were brought before that commission, men who testified that they had given this subject their attention, some of them forty and fifty years.

I think I shall prove without any very great waste of the time of the Senate that the opinion of men who are entitled to consideration before that commission was in favor of the statement I have made. I suppose I need not go into any explanation of the organization of this commission and the high character of the men who sat upon it, brought about by the dissatisfaction on the part of that class of men whom I have named who did not own securities but did the business of the world, that the commerce of Great Britain was being destroyed by the failure to use silver as money, not in Great Britain alone but all over the world.

Before that commission appeared various gentlemen invited by the commission, among whom was Mr. Sauerbeck, who testified as to his experience. He stated first the amount of silver and gold in the world and then was called upon for his opinion. He gave his views of why the divergence existed between silver and gold. He gave various reasons why it had been intensified and increased, amongst others that there had been a demand for new gold growing out of the fact that many countries like the United States which had been using paper, like Italy, which had been using paper, and other countries had called for and were calling for gold, $1,000,000,000 of gold that they did not need or did not use as money a short time before. He was asked this question:

I thought I understood you to say it had depreciated with regard to commodities, owing, no doubt, to change of currency in Germany and Italy?

This was silver. He answered:

I did not fully understand your question. It has fallen about 20 per cent. and commodities 28 per cent., which is very near.

Mr. Tidman was before the commission. He stated that the price of silver had fallen because of the demonetization, because it had been denied access to the mints of the world, and then was asked this question:

You said that the price of silver, I think, necessarily fell when the coinage of that metal was suspended in France and elsewhere in 1874.

He answered "Yes;" and his examination proceeded:

You are aware, no doubt, that in 1878 the coinage of the silver dollar in the United States, which had been suspended, was resumed under the Bland act?—Yes.

You are aware also that the market price of silver in 1878 was at the time of the resumption of the coinage of the dollars about 54*d.* per ounce in the London market?—Yes.

And you are also aware that it has fallen now to 47*d.*, notwithstanding the fact that the United States during the whole of that period has been coining almost £5,000,000 sterling a year in silver dollars?—Yes.

Then is it possible to say that the action of any State as regards coinage could affect the silver market in the way that you thought probable?

I think you will find that, allowing for the coinage of the $2,000,000 per month under the Bland act, and the amount of silver which had been coined by the Latin Union previously, there has been an enormous diminution of the amount of silver used for coinage in spite of the Bland bill operation.

* * * * * * *

Does it not strike you as curious that since the coinage of silver was absolutely increased by £5,000,000 sterling a year the price should have fallen, and fallen almost continuously ever since to 47*d.* per ounce?

Not unless you show that the amount of silver taken for the United States is far more than the diminution caused in the demand for it elsewhere.

Later on, in reference to this, the examination proceeded:

The CHAIRMAN. I do not think that you quite understand the question. All the causes that tended to produce the depreciation of silver came into operation in 1874; at any rate before 1878. There was one cause that tended in the opposite direction, and that came into operation in 1878—do you not think it a remarkable fact that the chief fall in silver has taken place since the one cause that would tend to its appreciation has been operative?

Referring, of course, to our Bland bill—

I think that so far from all the causes of the depreciation of silver having been exhausted prior to 1878, they were more powerful after that period. Prior to 1878 the price of silver had been forced down by the sixty millions sold by Germany and the fear of a further unknown quantity being forced off. But during the five years up to 1878 the coinage of silver went on. In America it was eighteen and one-half millions, in Europe twenty-four millions, showing an annual consumption of eight and one-half millions—

That is during the five years preceding 1878—

Whereas in the past seven years, from 1878, no silver was coined by the Union, and the demand was limited to thirty-five millions in America and thirteen millions in Austria, reducing the annual demand to seven millions. Other causes were at work from 1878.

I have one or two more extracts to read upon this subject. It would be interesting to read pages of this testimony where these intelligent men give their opinion before the royal commission, I will read one or two more. Mr. Provand, a member of Parliament, was sworn:

Q. Have you formed any opinion as to whether this difference in exchange arises from what people ordinarily call, whether correctly or not, appreciation of gold, or from depreciation of silver?

A. Well, it would be more accurate to say that gold has appreciated because, although it is true that silver has fallen relatively to gold, it has not fallen relatively to everything else.

Then he proves it. Mr. Nicholson, who was a doctor of laws, and who was examined as to his qualifications to speak on this subject, testified. The chairman asks:

First of all, with regard to the fall in the gold price of silver, will you state what, in your opinion, has been the cause of that fall?

Mr. Nicholson answers:

Briefly expressed, I should say it was due to the demonetization of silver by several nations.

That is to say——

The chairman asks:

to a diminution of the demand?

A. Yes. I do not think, that is to say, that the change that has undoubtedly taken place in the supply would in itself have had any effect upon the ratio at all.

I wish to stop right here a moment and speak about the inconsequential amount of silver that has been produced. Up to 1873 there has been for fifty years on an average $50,000,000 of silver a year produced. That is the most liberal estimate made by our authorities, and in my judgment, and in the judgment of men better qualified to pass upon this question than I am, this estimate has always been in excess of the actual amount of production. It was not until 1881 that the production reached $96,000,000. What is an increase of $45,000,000 or $46,000,000 upon the $3,500,000,000 of silver in the world? Why, Mr. President, it is a mere nothing. It has no perceptible influence upon the great mass of silver, nor does $100,000,000 have.

Silver and gold are valuable as a circulating medium for money because it is impossible, in the nature of things, that there shall be an overproduction of either silver or gold. There is no danger of an overproduction, and there has been no danger of an overproduction. If there had been an honest administration of the finances of this country, as there ought to have been, there would not have been anywhere in the world the suggestion made that there was an overproduction of silver. I intend to show before I close that the sentiment which has pervaded some of the financial circles of the world to the effect that there is an overproduction of silver, has come from the declaration of American statesmen unsupported by facts.

In the discussion of this question we are not without authority upon this very point, showing that if there is an increase of silver from $50,000,000 to $150,000,000 it is not sufficient to make any impress upon the great store of silver. Gold jumped in a decade from $15,000,000 a year to $200,000,000; and did it destroy the usefulness of gold as money? It is true that men then holding the securities of the world, men who lived upon fixed annuities, men who held the debts of the world in their hands, and collected toll from all the industries of the world, got together and proposed to demonetize gold, just as they proposed afterward to demonetize silver, which they succeeded in demonetizing, and they did it for the express purpose of enhancing and increasing the value of their property.

Mr. FARWELL. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. FARWELL. The Senator has stated that silver was demonetized in 1873 for the interest of the bondholders. Was it not the fact that at that time silver was worth 3 per cent. more than gold?

Mr. TELLER. I understand that that is true. I do not charge that it was done for the benefit of American bondholders. It was a movement as wide as the world. It was a movement among all civilized people. For years the moneyed interests, not of this country but of the world, had been moving for the purpose of destroying one-half of the money of the world, and they did not care which half. It was not on account of hostility to silver; it was because of no desire to beat down the white metal and put up the yellow, save as it put money in their pockets.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I should like to suggest, in reply to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL], that the Government of the United States took good care at that time to exercise its option in paying its fixed indebtedness in the cheaper metal, which it has refused to do since.

Mr. TELLER. There was not a bondholder in the United States who would not have been glad to have taken then silver for his coupons and his bonds. He could have sold every silver dollar that he got for 3.42 cents more than he could have sold his gold dollar. So I do not charge it upon the bondholders alone; I charge it upon the moneyed men of the world. It was first started, as I said, by the doctrinaires, and the opportunity having been thus presented they seized it, and they have made themselves felt everywhere, as I have had occasion I think before to show, while the people whose interest was being thus destroyed were doing other things besides looking after legislation of this character. I repeat they were not particular which money they demonetized. The object was to put the business of the world upon a basis to be done with half the money with which it had hitherto been done.

In addition to what I have said on the increased production of gold, from $15,000,000 a year to $200,000,000 a year, not having destroyed the usefulness and value of gold because of the vast store of gold in the world, which was so great that the $200,000,000 annually had no perceptible influence upon it at all, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to a statement made by Mr. Nicholson, from whom I have just quoted in support of the allegation I made that the amount of silver which had been produced could not thus alone affect and create the divergence. Mr. Nicholson was asked this question:

But taking the statistics to which you have had access, do you come to the conclusion that you have expressed on account of the small extent of the increase of the supply?

And he answered:

No, not on that ground, but partly from theoretical reasons and partly by analogy from former times. For instance, in the sixteenth century the relative production of gold and silver was suddenly reversed, silver becoming much more abundant, and yet the disturbance in the ratio was only from 11 to 1 to 12 to 1, although there the difference in the production of silver and gold changed from about 1 to 3 to 3 to 1.

Here under no pretense has it changed anything relatively as much as that. I will read what Mr. Nicholson says again in answer to a question. The chairman asked:

Then I understand your view to be this, that the change in the supply in the direction of increase, though it has been much less than at the date you have mentioned, has produced a much greater effect, and therefore you do not think that the effect can be attributable to the increased supply?

Mr. Nicholson answered:

Yes, that is my position. In my paper on the effects of the great discoveries of the precious metals I have quoted the statistics on pages 46 and 47 of the production in the sixteenth century and in the nineteenth century. At page 46 I give the proportional amounts.

Then he quotes from it:

According to the latest and most carefully compiled statistics I have been able to obtain, in an essay by the celebrated economist, Professor Nosse, the facts of the case in the sixteenth century are broadly stated as follows: At the commencement of the sixteenth century the relative production of silver compared to gold was about 34.3 silver to 65.7 gold, and the relative values of the two metals were in a ratio of nearly 11 to 1, the highest computation for the value of silver being 10½ to 1—that is, 10½ to 11 ounces of silver were worth 1 ounce of gold. In the course of the century the proportion of the production of silver to gold rose to 78.6, as compared with 21.4 of gold, and the ratio of the the relative values became only by gradual stages 12 to 1, the relative positions of gold and silver, as regards the total production, changing in the mean time.

Among others was Mr. Grenfell, who appeared before this commission, a former director and I believe president of the Bank of England, a man who, unlike very many men who pass judgment upon this question, had devoted a life to its study. One of the members of the commission asked the following question:

You said just now that you thought the disturbance in the relative value of gold and silver was due mainly to the changes made in foreign mint regulations?

Mr. Grenfell answered:

Yes, or laws relating to "the standard."

The examination continued:

Q. But are there not also natural causes for such a disturbance in the amount of silver and gold which has been produced of late years?

A. What do you mean by natural causes?

Q. The amount of gold and silver which has been dug out of the earth.

A. As long as the mints were ready to coin either metal it did not matter how the production varied.

Q. Then you think that it would have made no difference if the foreign mint regulations had remained as they were; that the production of silver in the world has increased from the date of the great gold discoveries from £8,000,000 to £25,000,000 a year, while the production of gold has fallen from £30,000,000 a year to about £20,000,000?

A. Upon the figures you give me prices ought to have risen under the old arrangements. The variations of the supply in quantity of gold and silver between 1873 and 1884 have varied much less than they did during the time that prices did not change at all.

Mr. Smith, a member of Parliament, was asked this question:

But, except the monetary change in 1873, there has been no particular change since, has there, affecting the precious metals?

To that he answered:

Since 1873 there has been a great reduction in the amount of the precious metals available for money in Europe, a very large reduction indeed, and it has arisen from two causes; first of all, the mints of Europe have been virtually closed against silver since 1873 and 1874.

Mr. Smith, when asked in reference to the volume of money and the cause of depreciation or divergence between silver and gold, said:

Well, since 1873 that volume has been greatly restricted; the gold supplies have fallen off. They have only averaged about £20,000,000 a year. Silver has been demonetized, or at all events is no longer coined as money throughout Europe, and out of that £20,000,000 a year of gold one-half at least is consumed in the arts, and disappears altogether from use as money, and of the other £10,000,000 that remain India takes £4,000,000 upon the average, reducing the total amount available for Europe, America, and the colonies to £6,000,000 a year.

Or $30,000,000. I will read what he said afterwards, when he was asked the following question:

One question as to the future of silver: What do you apprehend is the future of silver likely to be, assuming that nothing is done to restore it to its former position?

He answered:

Well, the view I take is that we can not remain where we are; we are upon an inclined plane. Silver must either be a monetary metal, or else it will cease to be used altogether as money; and undoubtedly if this conference breaks up and pronounces an adverse judgment, I think that further demonetization of silver will take place within a few years, which will push it to a still lower level. I can see no limit, in fact, to the depreciation of silver if it ceases to be used as a monetary metal by the principal nations of the world.

This commission was not organized in the interest of the people who believed in silver. It was organized by the British Government in response to a demand from the public, not the producers of silver, not people who had any interest in keeping up silver, but people who had an interest in having money sufficient wherewith to do business and to keep the industries of that and every other country alive. I could read very much more. Mr. Gibbs, whose testimony I do not seem to have marked so that I can readily put my hand upon it, also a former president of the Bank of England, and a director of it at the time, testified to the same effect, that the depreciation of silver or the divergence between silver and gold was not caused by the overproduction of silver. Not a man who went before that commission suggested, so far as I can find in the record, that there had been an overproduction, while they all insisted that the demonetization, and that alone, was the cause of its divergence.

I said before that the principal use of silver is for money. Of course some of it is used for ornaments and some of it for table ware. A good deal of it of course is used in the arts. It is estimated that of the $160,000,000 produced from $30,000,000 to $35,000,000 are used for those purposes, $5,000,000 alone being used in the United States according to the very lowest estimate that anybody has made. The estimate has reached, by some officials, as high as $10,000,000 a year, but I find the people who ought to know upon this subject, whose testimony was taken by this commission, said that in the whole world the amount must be in the neighborhood of from $30,000,000 to $35,000,000.

How much silver has been produced at any time in one year? The most extravagant statement ever made by anybody is $120,000,000 a year. That probably is $20,000,000 more than ever was produced. But let us assume that $120,000,000 was produced in the whole world in one year; how much of it goes to India, where it disappears and is never again seen in the marts of commerce or trade? How much of it goes to China, how much of it goes to Turkey, and never reappears among civilized people? How much of it goes to the practically unknown regions of Asia, commercially speaking? Not less than from $20,000,000 to $25,000,000 of silver every year disappears from the regions of commerce and trade, as much so as if it were sunk in the depths of the sea.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I think $40,000,000.

Mr. TELLER. I put it at $20,000,000, and the Senator from Nevada says $40,000,000. I say $20,000,000 because nobody has ever put it at less than $20,000,000. Thirty-five million dollars more of silver has been used in the arts. There you have nearly one-half of the world's production. With all the increased commerce, with the opening up of new countries, with the increased production which requires always increased money to handle it, can it be said by anybody with any degree of truthfulness that there has been an overproduction of the white metal? Not at all, Mr. President. I repeat what I started out with saying, that the consensus of mankind outside of this limited region of ours has been that the fall in silver has not been because of overproduction, but because of the demonetization, and that alone.

I will admit that there has been in some sections of the world a fear of overproduction. I will admit that in some sections, in England, in France, in Germany, there has been a thought that there might be an overproduction, and it is said, you know, that capital is very timid and very scary, and the men who own the money of the world have been somewhat fearful that the money of the world would be cheapened. But what is the fact? Take the £60,000,000, or the $300,000,000, that Germany put on the market. If you had listened to the voices that I heard in this Chamber in 1878 you would have believed that Germany had a thousand million dollars of money ready to put on the market. She had already put $300,000,000 on the market, and she has put none on it since, notwithstanding I heard it reiterated over and over again that if we passed the Bland bill all the silver of the world would come here, and Germany would overwhelm us and all other regions with her surplus silver. How much surplus silver has Germany to-day? The best authorities put it at less than $200,000,000, and she could not spare a dollar of that if she should try. One hundred and seven million dollars of her $200,000,000 is coined at a rate that would lose her 7 per cent. if she should come here to our mints and coin it free of expense.

There has been some fright, as I say, with reference to the amount of silver that might be put upon the market; and the Senate has contributed more to that fright than any single agency except it be the President of the United States and his financial officer; and there is where it has come from, and there alone. We sent over to Europe a commission for the purpose of getting up an international agreement with reference to the use of silver, and we have sent those men there with a declaration which followed them every time they went, from the executive department of the Government and from voices in this Chamber, declaring that silver was to be overproduced and that we in this country had more silver than we could dispose of. We created the impression abroad that we were anxious for an international arrangement simply that we might dump our worthless silver upon those countries.

Mr. President, I do not intend to arraign this Administration for doing precisely what my own did, but I think that this Administration perhaps has intensified the conduct of former administrations in that particular. It has made a pretense which the others did not, of friendship to silver, a pretense so bald and so barren that nobody has been deceived by it in any portion of this country, and yet it has undoubtedly deceived some people in other portions of the world.

First we had Manton Marble sent abroad to make an arrangement by which silver should be reinstated in its old character, to make an arrangement by which the mints of the world should once more be opened to silver as they had been from the dawn of civilization, since mints had been known. Who was Manton Marble? Was he a friend of silver? Was he a man who believed that silver was a suitable metal for money? On the contrary, was he not one of the most pronounced opponents of the use of silver here and everywhere else that there was on this continent? Was it supposed that he, with his prejudices and hostilities, could go to Europe and convince the European world that he wanted the international conference in the interest of commerce and trade, and that alone? If you send a man to make a negotiation you want a man who wishes to have a negotiation made. If you send a man to accomplish a certain thing, you want to send a man who believes that the thing ought to be done. You do not send a man to make an agreement who believes that an agreement would be prejudicial to your interest. You do not send a man in good faith to help make an international agreement who believes that it would be wicked in a financial point of view to make such an agreement. Yet Mr. Marble went over to Europe and came back, and what did he do? He did not even deign to make a report of what he had done. The Secretary of State sent out a report, not that Mr. Marble had made, but one that somebody else had made.

Then we sent abroad another man in the interest of silver, a man who appeared before the committee of which the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] was chairman, and who gave testimony before that committee which I think the Secretary of State and the President must have read before they sent him, a man who testified that silver would be produced in such quantities that it would be useless as a money metal, who stated that in many parts of the world they had built fires of cordwood against the cliffs and melted it out as you would melt your iron in Pennsylvania or West Virginia; and yet he went abroad as the agent of the Government of the United States to make an international arrangement by which silver should be used not only in Europe but here, to make an arrangement by which the mints should be opened everywhere to silver. He did not succeed. Did anybody expect that he would? Then he came back and told us that it was not worth while to make any further effort; that no considerable portion of the world was interested in silver except our own country; that there was no considerable interest felt in it anywhere except in the United States; and that statement was made in view of that royal commission sitting at the very time he was perambulating Europe in the interest, as was said, of an international agreement!

But, Mr. President, he gave us some good testimony, to which I propose to call the attention of the Senate for a moment. He is not without ability, as everybody knows, and he was able to determine some things, which he did. He says:

The most important point which I beg leave to present is this: I am convinced by my own observation, sustained by the judgment of others, citizens or officials of the United States, whom I have consulted, that it would be unwise and inexpedient for the United States again to take the initiative in promoting action for a general adoption of a bimetallic legal tender, coupled with the free coinage of silver, for the reason that such action is misconstrued and may tend to retard rather than to promote the object aimed at. It may also increase rather than diminish the discredit of silver.

Now, he gives his reason:

The reason is this: The general conviction among the financial men in Europe is that the United States Government is loaded with an excessive quantity of silver dollars which it can not get into circulation. These dollars are coined at a standard which is at variance with the silver money of any other country, to wit, at the ratio of 16 of silver to 1 of gold.

True, these dollars are worth 3 cents more than any other dollar in the world. Still it is said that they are dishonest dollars! He continues:

It is believed that the financial officers of the United States are convinced that the product of silver is excessive, and that the ratio of silver to gold, i. e., its price as bullion, is liable to fall even lower than it is now; therefore any initiative by the United States is looked upon as an attempt to relieve itself of an unprofitable stock and to provide a market for the future product of silver. Any effort of the United States to promote a bimetallic treaty and to restore the free coinage of silver is not therefore regarded as a sincere effort to promote a better monetary system of which all nations may share the benefit, but rather as being induced by a desire to promote the special interest of the United States at the cost of whom it may concern.

It is utterly impossible for the thoroughly trained and intelligent statesmen of Europe, either bimetallists or monometallists, to comprehend why the United States should continue to coin dollars of the present standard of the ratio of 15.98, say 16 parts of silver to 1 of gold, which can not be adjusted by any treaty to the present standard of any silver coin in circulation in other countries without the recoinage of European and East Indian coins.

That is undoubtedly a truthful statement of the financial opinion in Europe of the conduct of the United States, and the United States stands before the world as engaged in a great fraud, under the plea of doing commerce good, of promoting the interests of all mankind in this country and everywhere, of desiring an international bimetallic association, in fact making an effort to dump upon Europe the silver it can not use here.

Mr. President, is it strange that that should be the opinion of the European people? Is it strange when you recollect that from the time we attempted the remonetization of silver, in 1878, to this hour there has never been a chief executive officer of the United States who did not declare that silver could not be made to circulate as money, and that it was unfit for money?

Although I of course know that the Senate has read these things before, I desire to call its attention to what has been said upon this subject. In the spring of 1885 the administration changed, and there were a great many men who were not in sympathy with the new administration who hoped that upon this question at least the methods would change. But before the time came for the inauguration of the new President we found him addressing a letter to members of the House of Representatives in which he declared that unless speedy action was taken by Congress there was danger that the Government of the United States would be in financial disgrace, and that it would be compelled to get upon a silver basis and to pay its indebtedness in silver. In what the disgrace would consist no intelligent man could say, when it was known (which appears to have been then unknown to the incoming Executive) that every obligation the Government had, big and little, was payable in silver by the very terms of the law. The President having sent this letter to Congress awaited its action. Congress did nothing. He was inaugurated, and he sent his first annual message to Congress in December, 1885, transmitting the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, in which the Secretary of the Treasury said, touching upon the silver question:

No prospective fall in the purchasing power of the metal can be so harassing to the Treasury as the perpetual inpour of a coin made full legal tender for its face, yet not worth its face, which the Treasury is expected to employ like gold as if it were worth its face.

While that statement, if you speak of silver as bullion, may be true, it was not true in any other sense, because the silver dollar was worth its face; it was worth as much as the gold dollar.

To stop the purchase of silver will thus arrest the growth of that standing shame in our finance, the Treasury surplus. It will put us in the way of abolishing the same altogether, not by cheating our creditors, shaving our pensioners, or crippling our wage-earners, but by enabling the Treasury to hold the silver dollar firmly in a local parity with the gold dollar until we can unite with the leading powers in restoring and establishing their permanent equivalence.

I have read what the Secretary of the Treasury said. I intended to read first the President's statement, but I took up the wrong book. However, it does not make very much difference which you take hold of; they all use the same language, from the Executive down to every man who is allowed to speak upon this subject when he becomes connected with the National Government in the shape of an executive financial officer. This is what the Executive himself said:

Since February, 1878, the Government has, under the compulsory provisions of law, purchased silver bullion and coined the same at the rate of more than $2,000,000 every month. By this process up to the present date 215,759,431 silver dollars have been coined.

A reasonable appreciation of a delegation of power to the General Government would limit its exercise without express restrictive words to the people's needs and the requirements of the public welfare.

Upon this theory the authority to "coin money" given to Congress by the Constitution, if it permits the purchase by the Government of bullion for coinage in any event, does not justify such purchase and coinage to an extent beyond the amount needed for a sufficient circulating medium.

The desire to utilize the silver product of the country should not lead to a misuse or the perversion of this power.

The necessity for such an addition to the silver currency of the nation as is compelled by the silver-coinage act is negatived by the fact that up to the present time only about fifty millions of the silver dollars so coined have actually found their way into circulation, leaving more than one hundred and sixty-five millions in the possession of the Government, the custody of which has entailed a considerable expense for the construction of vaults for its deposit. Against this latter amount there are outstanding silver certificates amounting to about $93,000,000.

Every month two millions of gold in the public Treasury are paid out for two millions or more of silver dollars, to be added to the idle mass already accumulated.

If continued long enough, this operation will result in the substitution of silver for all the gold the Government owns applicable to its general purposes. It will not do to rely upon the customs receipts of the Government to make good this drain of gold, because the silver thus coined having been made legal tender for all debts and dues, public and private, at times during the last six months 58 per cent. of the receipts for duties have been in silver or silver certificates, while the average within that period has been 20 per cent. The proportion of silver and its certificates received by the Government will probably increase as time goes on, for the reason that the nearer the period approaches when it will be obliged to offer silver in payment of its obligations the greater inducement there will be to hoard gold against depreciation in the value of silver, or for the purpose of speculating.

This hoarding of gold has already begun.

That message on this financial question appeared the next morning in London, in Hamburg, in Berlin, and in all the great moneyed centers of the world. The people there were notified that we were about to come to a silver basis.

The Secretary of the Treasury further said:

To stop the purchase and coinage of silver is for this our local trouble also the first and best step. To increase our stock is to increase the difficulties of the Treasury, illegitimate and abnormal difficulties, which ought never to be imposed upon the Treasury of any democratic government, and which ought not to be increased. Its mission is to coin the two metals into money for the public—as much as everybody asks.

I wish that had been the law. I wish the Government had been bound to coin these two metals as everybody asked. If it had been, there would have been no question then in my judgment about the relation of silver and gold. The Secretary of the Treasury continued:

It has no fitness for coining for itself and keeping the coinage. Its proper business as a fisc is to receive the people's revenue from taxes in good money which it has coined for them, and to expend that money as Congress bids, keeping no surplus at all beyond what insures punctual payments.

Then follows what I read before from the report of the Secretary of the Treasury.

With this declaration on the part of the President, with this declaration on the part of the financial officer of the Government, is it strange that in Europe the people should believe we were in danger of some great financial catastrophe? But we were not left alone with that. We had as a representative at Paris a gentleman of whom I will speak only in kind terms, who has since deceased, Mr. Walker. When Mr. Marble went over to Europe it seems that he turned his mission mainly over to Mr. Walker, and I will read what Mr. Walker said. Mr. Walker reported to the Secretary of State his mission in connection with Mr. Marble, and in speaking of an address that he made he said:

It will be observed that in this paper—

I have the paper referred to before me, from which I shall read—

It will be observed that in this paper I have aimed to avoid all academic discussion of the silver question, and have confined myself to a simple reference, first, to the dangerous position in which the United States finds itself as the sole coiner of silver among commercial nations, and, secondly, to the paralysis which has fallen upon the commerce of the world by the concurrent scarcity of gold and degradation of silver.

Let us see what he did say when he addressed the international conference at Paris, July 20, 1885. He said:

Mr. MINISTER AND GENTLEMEN: I come before you in conformity with the instructions of my Government, and with the assent of most of the powers represented in this conference. I am here for the purpose of explaining to you briefly the present attitude of the United States on the monetary question, as well as the policy which the President and his Cabinet intend to pursue in respect to it.

Of course nobody will pretend that he did not go there with authority. Nobody will pretend that he did not speak by the card. Nobody will pretend but that if he had spoken otherwise he would have been promptly recalled, and he was not. He continued:

I am instructed to say to you that the policy of the new American Government in respect to the continuance of silver coinage does not differ from that of its predecessors. The newly-elected President, Mr. Cleveland, on the 24th of February last, in reply to a letter addressed to him by certain members of the House of Representatives, before his assumption of office, declared his opinions very frankly on the silver question, and showed himself to be in perfect accord with the Presidents who have preceded him on the essential question now under discussion in the United States—namely, the continuance of silver coinage under the Bland bill. He did not hesitate to avow that it was, in his opinion, the duty of Congress to suspend further coinage. He declared that a disastrous crisis was close at hand in which gold is likely to disappear from circulation and when we shall be reduced to silver alone; that under the operation of the silver-coinage law the flow of gold into the Federal Treasury had been steadily diminished, and that silver and silver certificates had displaced and were then displacing gold in the Treasury, and that the sum of gold available for the payment of the gold obligations of the United States and for the redemption of the circulating notes called "greenbacks," if not already encroached upon, was perilously near such an encroachment.

These being the facts of our present condition, our danger and our duty to avert the danger seemed to the President to be plain. To maintain and to continue in use the mass of our gold coin is possible by a present suspension of the purchase and coinage of silver, and the President affirmed that he was not aware that by any other method it is possible.

After some other remarks, which it is not necessary to read, he said:

The frank and forcible declarations of the new President explain the whole monetary question as it now presents itself to the eyes of a large part of my American countrymen. In the presence of a situation so threatening you can not doubt that the American Government will do its utmost to be extricated from it. If we are obliged to act alone, there is no other way open to us for averting the danger than by suspending silver coinage.

I am authorized to say to you on behalf of our Government that it will use its utmost endeavors to prevent the shifting upon our shoulders of the whole burden of depreciated silver. The sentiments of the new Congress, which is to convene in the month of December next, as well as those of the country, which are daily growing more emphatic, encourage us in the hope that before the end of the current year we shall be able to extricate ourselves from the state of isolation in which we now stand. When our situation shall be thus assimilated to that of Europe the field of discussion will be also simplified. The latest advices from New York indicate that the President's fears are being fast realized, and that the depletion of gold in the public Treasury has obliged the banks to tender to the Government a portion of their reserves in order to tide over the difficulty till Congress meets in December, and the New York clearing-house has adopted resolutions in that sense.

It is for you to judge how this state of things in America bears upon the silver question in Europe.

Mr. President, is it strange, is it wonderful that all Europe should consider that when we say we want an international arrangement we are only making preparation by which we may dump our silver into Europe which we can not use as money? I could read from the report of every Secretary of the Treasury since 1878 to show that it was stated that silver would not circulate as money, that it was not fit for money, and the promise was made that we would cease to use it as money, and that we would join the rest of the world in the total exclusion of it from our mints, as we had already joined the other countries in its partial exclusion. So, if Europe misconstrues our attitude, we alone are to blame.

I have heard a great many prophecies upon this subject since I have been a member of this body. I have listened to all the speeches which have been made; I think I have them all carefully preserved, and I occasionally turn to them, by the way, to see how people may be mistaken. When this question was before the Senate in 1878 the Finance Committee—not all of them, but a great many of them at least—were loud in their denunciations of the then pending bill and in their prophecies of the destruction of American credit and American honor in the event of its passage. We were told that if the Government of the United States attempted to coin silver money which should be payable on our bonds we could sell no more bonds at the interest at which we had been selling them. We were told that the high credit of the Government would be destroyed, that it would be in financial disgrace. And yet, in view of that, we were not deterred from giving to the people $2,000,000 a month, which has put in circulation since that time $189,000,000 of silver certificates and $60,000,000 of coined silver dollars.

Mr. PLATT. What is the whole coinage of the silver dollar under the law?

Mr. TELLER. The whole silver coinage was $290,285,575 on the 20th day of March; I have not the statements since then; but of course it is not very much more. That leaves in the Treasury of silver dollars not in circulation, not covered by certificates, a little over $41,000,000. We were told then, as we were told by the President in his message in 1885, as we had been told by his predecessors; we were told by the Secretary of the Treasury in 1885, as we had been told by his predecessors, and Mr. Walker being so instructed repeated it to all the world before the monetary conference, that we should presently be on a silver basis.

I have not the exact figures before me, but the silver and gold in this country to-day amount to more than $1,000,000,000, of which the silver is less than $350,000,000 all told. It is not, perhaps, inapt that I should inquire how much gold we have in the Treasury, this fleeting metal that was to be driven out of the country, that was to go abroad and hide itself somewhere and be supplanted by the worthless metal. How much have we of that in the Treasury? We had $310,421,803.63 of gold on the 20th day of this month. Of this amount $93,951,211 was covered by gold certificates, leaving net gold in the Treasury of the United States, $216,407,592.63. I say here to-day, with a full knowledge of what I utter, that all the combined powers of the world can not show in their coffers $300,000,000 of gold.

Mr. MCPHERSON. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Is not a part of the $200,000,000 of which he speaks held as a specific fund for a special purpose?

Mr. TELLER. It does not make any difference whether it is held as a specific fund or whether it is not. There is $216,000,000 of gold uncovered by certificates, which can be used for some purpose by the Government if it chooses to use it. It is owned by the Government; it is Government money subject to Government disposal, even though it might require, as the Senator would contend, which I deny, an act of Congress to dispose of $100,000,000 of it except in the payment of greenbacks or national notes.

Mr. MCPHERSON. The Senator will not fail to remember that we sold Government bonds, and we got for them $100,000,000 of gold, which is deposited in the Treasury for the purpose of the redemption of Treasury notes. In making the statement that there are $216,000,000 of gold in the Treasury outside of that, I think the Senator does not really mean to convey that impression.

Mr. TELLER. I am as familiar with the legislation upon this subject as the Senator from New Jersey. I know we sold about $90,000,000 of bonds to get ready for resumption, and the Senator, at least, belonged to a party which declared over and over again that $90,000,000 would not enable us to resume. I can not speak as to the Senator's personal view upon that subject, but I know I heard it repeated over and over again. I have not looked at the record, but I venture to say that since the 1st day of January, 1879, when we resumed gold payments, there has not been to exceed $25,000,000 of greenbacks presented to the Treasury Department for gold. There had been a much less amount than that presented the last time I ascertained, and I will venture to say that the amount now has not exceeded that sum. I know that this $100,000,000 was set apart, not by law but by the order of the Secretary of the Treasury, to be there held.

It was a prudent and a wise thing, I admit, to have it there when we resumed, for nobody knew exactly what would be the result; but I say that it has been demonstrated that there was less than a million dollars a month taken out, and for a year, in one twelvemonth, $11,000,000 were taken out to pay greenbacks, and I say it was unwise to keep that large amount of money there locked up, for the purpose, as it was said, of strengthening the credit of the Government of the United States.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. TELLER. I will yield for a question.

Mr. MCPHERSON. The Senator inveighs very loudly and very persistently, both in season and out of season, against the unfriendly action of the Treasury Department towards the coinage of the silver dollar. I should like to ask the Senator if he would find any fault with the Government or the people of this country if we had to-day in the Treasury instead of gold the silver dollar?

Mr. TELLER. I have not inveighed against the keeping of $100,000,000 in the Treasury because it was not silver. I have not inveighed against it because that action had anything to do with silver or silver money. I have inveighed against that in this Chamber for years because it was keeping locked up there money which ought to have been doing money duty in the country, which ought to have been paid out on Government debts, and with which we ought to have paid the interest that accumulated on the Government indebtedness. That might have been saved if this money had been paid out. It has no relation to silver in that sense, and I did not mention it in that connection. I mentioned the fact that we had this amount of gold to show that the prophecy so frequently made and so flippantly and so ignorantly made on this floor and elsewhere, that the Bland bill or any other bill of like character would drive gold from the country has not been realized, that gold has come to this country in quantities never before known, and to-day we stand the chief nation of the world, save one, with our gold. There is but one nation in the world that has as much gold as we have, and it is even doubtful whether we are not ahead of that nation. We have more gold than Great Britain, and we have, added to that as money metal, our silver besides.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. MCPHERSON. If, on the other hand, the wishes of the Senator from Colorado and those who think with him upon the silver question had been carried out, which would have been to adopt the free coinage of silver, does the Senator believe that then we should have had as much gold in the Treasury as we have now?

Mr. TELLER. That is a mere matter of opinion. I put my opinion against the Senator's, who declared that if we adopted the Bland bill there would be no gold in the country. I said I did not believe it. I have been found to be correct, and the Senator now wants me to state what might have occurred if something else had taken place. I think I am entitled to as much credit as a prophet upon that subject as he, for he is found to be a false prophet upon this financial question. I have not any doubt if we had in 1878 fully remonetized silver, as ought to have been done, there would have been an end of the fall in silver, and other nations would have come to our relief. Other nations would have retraced their steps, and silver would long before now have been doing duty as money metal; and then the silver dollar would not have been coined in this country any more than it had been for the twenty-five years previous, because our ratio was too high, and we should have been on an absolute simple gold basis to-day, and using, as we were before 1873, the cheapest money in the world, and that was gold.

It is said to-day that silver is not honest money and we can not pay our debts in silver. We paid our debts in gold or in paper; we never pretended to pay them in silver when silver was the most valuable money in the commerce of the world. Nobody then talked as though it was our duty to pay in the high-priced metal. It is the right of every Government to pay in the cheap metal, and a government is recreant to its great trust that does not pay its debts in the cheap metal. It ought to pay its debts in the cheap metal because it is a trustee for the people, and when it makes its contracts it covenants that it shall reserve to itself the right to pay its debts in the cheap metal. What executive officer has a right to say, "I give away the privilege, which you guaranteed in your contract, to pay in the cheap metal?" It is not dishonest except that it is dishonest to the citizen, and it robs him of just so much as the difference between the cheap metal and the dear metal. It has been the policy of governments everywhere to pay in the cheap metal, as it is the policy of every honest business man to pay in the cheap metal if he has the option by the contract. It will not do to say that it is dishonest to pay in the cheap metal.

I wish to say one word in regard to this international conference. It is said that we can not stand alone, and the fact is cited that we have attempted to stand alone by coining $2,000,000 a month of silver. It is said that has not brought up silver, and because it has not brought up silver we can not stand alone, and it will not do to open our mints, but we must cease this coinage or we must have an international agreement with other nations.

The Bland act was a degradation of silver. It was a denial to it of its money function and a denial by one of the greatest nations in the world, the richest nation on the earth. It was a denial of it by the nation producing nearly one-half of the silver of the world, and who, abroad, would not say that if a people as rich as we were, and as intelligent, and producing half of the silver money of the world, did not have confidence in it, it was because there was something lying back; that we had knowledge of the overproduction to come, or there was some reason why silver could not be used as money?

France might have demonetized silver; Germany might have demonetized silver; Spain might have demonetized silver; and they could not all three have struck the blow to silver that was struck when the Government of the United States demonetized it. Until we shall take the back track and plant ourselves squarely on the doctrines that silver is a money metal as much as gold and entitled to the same privileges and rights, we shall have little or no effect upon the financial conduct of other nations. When we have done that, in my judgment there will be no further question about the price of silver. The Senator from Connecticut spoke of the effect of the amendment which was adopted, which I repeat I would not have put upon the bill, and which I should like to amend before I finally vote for it, if I vote for it at all. He says with this amendment we shall be overwhelmed with silver.

Mr. PLATT. No, I said we should be overwhelmed with certificates.

Mr. TELLER. Very well; the Senator said we should be overwhelmed with certificates. The amendment provides that silver shall be bought at its market value. The Senator said that was 30 per cent. discount. Grant it, suppose it is, where does the Senator propose to find his silver that is to come here to get certificates which can only be used in this country, which can not be taken abroad, because if they are 30 per cent. discount, and they are payable in silver and silver is at a discount, does the Senator suppose they would circulate in Spain or Germany or France or England?

Mr. PLATT. They are payable in gold.

Mr. TELLER. No, they are not payable in gold; they are payable in silver or gold.

Mr. PLATT. They are "of denominations not less than $50, and redeemable in gold and silver coin at the option of the United States."

Mr. TELLER. Does the Senator suppose that there is somewhere in the world a great store-house of silver? If so, where is it? The Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] said yesterday that there was not $5,000,000 of bullion in the United States and England together. There has not been a time, I suppose, in ten years when there has been $5,000,000 of bullion in the United States that could be purchased. Is there any in England? How much silver has England? Ninety-five or ninety-six million dollars of money coined at a ratio of 14.28. She can not bring her silver here and coin it into our certificates and lose at least 8 per cent. besides exchange and transportation and interest. Germany has not silver to exceed $190,000,000 to-day, and $107,000,000 of that is coined at 14.38. Germany has not any silver to sell; she could not part with her silver. France has somewhere between $800,000,000 and $1,000,000,000, and every dollar of it can be exchanged any day during the business hours of the day for a dollar in gold at 3 per cent. less than the silver value of our dollar.

Does anybody suppose that France can dispose of her surplus silver? Who owns the silver of France but the people of France? Some of it is held in the banks, I admit, but it is mainly in the hands of the people. Are they to send silver here for the purpose of exchanging it for our certificates? Not at all. That is as far-fetched as the statement made in 1878 that we were to be overwhelmed by silver, and as the statement made by the Executive when he declared that we had reached a silver basis and that gold had already begun to be hoarded.

I hold before me a sheet prepared by the Mint, and it shows the subsidiary coin of the world. The amount is over $562,000,000. Some of that money is coined as low as 13.33, some of it as low as 9.3, some of it at 14, none of it above 14.95, and that is in this country of our own. This is the table in full:

Statement exhibiting the estimated amount of subsidiary silver coin in circulation in the principal countries of the world and the ratio of gold to silver in such countries.

Countries.	Amount of limited-tender silver coins.	Ratio of gold to silver.
United States	$75,034,111	1 to 14.95
Great Britain and Ireland	95,000,000	1 to 14.28
Dominion of Canada, including Manitoba and Newfoundland	4,000,000	1 to 14.95
Australia, Tasmania, and New Zealand	6,000,000	1 to 14.28
France	40,000,000	1 to 14.38
Belgium	6,000,000	1 to 14.38
Switzerland	4,000,000	1 to 14.38
Italy	$31,000,000	1 to 14.38
Greece	2,000,000	1 to 14.38
Spain	25,000,000	1 to 14.38
Portugal, including Azores and Madeira	10,000,000	1 to 14.09
Germany	107,000,000	1 to 13.957
Austria-Hungary	15,000,000	1 to 9.3
Sweden and Norway	5,000,000	1 to 14.88
Danish Kingdom	5,000,000	1 to 14.88
Netherlands	10,000,000	1 to 15
Russia	70,000,000	1 to 15
Turkey	8,000,000	1 to 15.1
Argentine Republic	2,000,000	1 to 15.5
Colombia	4,000,000
Brazil	15,000,000	1 to 14.95
Japan	20,000,000	1 to 13.33
Total	562,034,111

We are told over and over again that the American laborer is compelled to take a dishonest dollar. In England there is $95,000,000 of silver coinage at a ratio of 14.28 as a legal tender up to $10, and I suppose the dishonesty of that transaction will be admitted if ours is dishonest, and I have never heard any gold man inveighing against the dishonesty of Great Britain.

I repeat that there is no place where silver can be got. If France should attempt to bring her silver here, the result would be that it would immediately put up the price of silver in Europe and the silver would return. Germany has none, England has none, Mexico has none. Somebody spoke of Mexico. The year before last Mexico exported $4,000,000 more than she produced, drawing upon her reserves, and she has practically none now. I challenge any man who studies this question to point to me a country anywhere that can spare $50,000,000 of silver, unless it be France.

There are many things that might be said on this subject that I have not said. I agree with the Senator from Connecticut that there has been prosperity in this country. I want to inquire of the Senator from Connecticut what there would be in this country but for the $250,000,000 of silver in use as a money metal? There is not the man living who is capable of judging between right and wrong who would dare to-day to take out of our circulating medium the $250,000,000 of silver. There is not a man who does not know it would destroy all values in this country and precipitate a panic such as has never been known. Where should we have been without these $250,000,000 of this despised silver doing duty equally with gold in every part of the land, exchangeable for all the commodities, for all the comforts, for all the luxuries, for everything that a gold dollar is received for? And this despite the prophesies of our friends on the other side who do not believe in silver. I do not think it is over modest when they tell us what will be the effect of this amendment or the other.

I will allude to one thing before I quit, and that is a statement made in 1878 repeatedly as to the operation of what was called the Gresham law. It was said that one thing which had entered into financial circles as a fixed fact was that where you had two kinds of money, one better than the other, the cheap money would always drive the other out.

The Gresham law had reference simply to the character of the money; that is to say, if there was a debased coin, a coin that had been worn and abraded and destroyed practically, that coin would go out of a man's pocket quicker than one fresh from the mint. That is true; but there is in this country no difference in the money. Therefore it can not be said that there is a cheap dollar or a dear dollar in this country. The dollars are alike; they all perform the same function; and there never was any danger while that was true that the one would drive the other out.

I have not the exact figures here now, but I venture to say that the increase of gold in this country since the passage of the silver bill of 1878 has been at least fourfold greater than it was at any other like time in the history of this country, and I think I may say that there is not in the history of finance anywhere a country that can show such a phenomenal increase of gold from abroad as we have been able to show within the last eight or ten years.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] hands me the report of the Director of the Mint for 1887, to which I will ask leave to refer. In 1873 the total gold coin and bullion in the United States was $135,000,000, and in 1887 it is put down at $654,520,335. In 1875 it is put down at $121,134,906; in 1877, just before we partially remonetized silver, it is put down at $167,501,472. So that since the passage of the silver bill it has increased to $654,520,335. I am obliged to the Senator from South Carolina for that, because I think it is better than my statement, and it will be seen that I did not overstate it when I said it was four times.

I want to say one word more with reference to the silver question. I disclaim that this has any special interest to me more than to my associates in this body. I disclaim that the State which I have the honor in part to represent has any more interest in it than the State of Massachusetts, represented by the Senator before me, or the State of Iowa, or any other State in the Union. Under this law of 1878 we have sold to the Government our bullion for exactly the price we could have sold it to anybody else.

The Government has not paid to the miner a dollar of subsidy or a dollar of bounty—not one. In the early days of this Administration I can show by an official report of the Secretary of the Treasury that when silver went up, when silver had an uprising, the Department of the Treasury waited a week to buy its stipend until silver should fall, and then we were told that by that great financial feat the Government had saved $7,000 in money! Silver has thus been kept down by the efforts of the Department that they might buy it cheap; and there stands to-day to the credit of the Treasury Department, after paying all expenses of coinage, more than $35,000,000 profit on the silver coinage. They bought what represents $300,000,000 for $35,000,000 less than they paid it out to the people. So we have no interest in it save and except that we have an interest in the general prosperity of the country—no more and no less. I admit that if I had not lived in a silver-producing State I might never have had my attention directed to this subject. I might have been willing, like some other men that I know, to accept the statements of doctrinaires and ill-informed people as to facts; but if my attention had been directed to it and I had studied it as I have studied it, I would have the same views if I lived in Connecticut that I have living in Colorado. This question is not one for Colorado, and it is not one for Connecticut, nor is it one for the United States. It is a question as wide as the human race, and it enters into and is a part and parcel of the interest of every man living in civilized society to-day. It is a question whether the business of the world shall be conducted with all the money metals God has given the people, or whether it shall be conducted with one-half; it is whether a few rich men, who have been fortunate in owning securities and annuities and have fixed incomes, shall control, and whether they shall compel the use of one-half the money of the world to enhance their property while they depreciate property of every other kind and of every other man.

Mr. President, I have detained the Senate longer than I meant to do. While I have on my table several memoranda to which I intended to refer I will not detain the Senate longer, but will take some other occasion, on some appropriate bill, to present my views further.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment to the pending bill at this time, and I ask that it be printed for consideration hereafter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be received and printed.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to hear it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read if there be no objection.

The SECRETARY. The proposed amendment is to add to the bill the following as a new section:

"And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to purchase and cancel the interest-bearing bonds of the United States with the $100,000,000 of gold now reserved in the Treasury for the redemption of the legal-tender notes of the United States."

And that the following words be stricken out of section 3 of the act of January, 14, 1875, entitled "An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments," to wit:

"And on and after the 1st day of January, A. D. 1879, the Secretary of the Treasury shall redeem, in coin, the United States legal-tender notes then outstanding on their presentation for redemption at the office of the assistant treasurer of the United States in the city of New York in sums of not less than $50."

And that the following words be stricken out of section 12 of the act of July 12, 1882, entitled "An act to enable national banking associations to extend their corporate existence, and for other purposes," to wit:

"Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall suspend the issue of such gold certificates whenever the amount of gold coin and gold bullion in the Treasury reserved for the redemption of United States notes falls below $100,000,000.

"And said provisions of the act of January 14, 1875, and of the act of July 12, 1882, be, and the same are hereby, repealed."

Mr. MANDERSON. Is that offered as an amendment to the pending bill?

Mr. REAGAN. I ask consent to have it printed; to be offered as an amendment at the proper time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be printed.

Mr. BECK. If these matters are to be considered I shall move at the proper time, as a substitute for the proposition of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], Senate bill No. 8, which I ask to have printed as an amendment to this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire to have it read?

Mr. BECK. It has been read several times, and I do not care about its being read now. I should be glad to have it appear in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be printed as an amendment proposed to be offered to the bill.

The amendment submitted by Mr. BECK is as follows:

SEC. —. That hereafter no United States note shall be issued of a denomination less than $10 nor more than $500, and the denominations higher than $50 shall not exceed in value one-fourth of the value of the total amount outstanding at any time, and not more than one-fourth in value of the amount of circulation issued to national banks outstanding at any time shall be of a less denomination than $10, and no national-bank note hereafter issued shall be of a higher denomination than $100. The Secretary of the Treasury is directed to make the changes in the denominations of the legal-tender notes and national-bank notes needed to comply with the provisions of this act whenever said notes are received at the Treasury for any purpose.

SEC. —. That in all issues of certificates hereafter, coin certificates shall be substituted for silver certificates and gold certificates, wherever either is authorized to be issued under existing laws: and all gold and silver certificates now outstanding shall be retired, when they are received for any purpose at the Treasury or any subtreasury of the United States, and coin certificates of the denominations hereby provided for, issued in their stead; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required to issue coin certificates in such denominations not exceeding $20 as he sees fit, on all the surplus gold and silver coin and gold bullion held at any time by the United States in excess of $100,000,000 of gold coin, and pay out the same in discharge of all the obligations of the United States, except such as have been heretofore made payable expressly in gold and silver coin.

SEC. —. That any person or persons may deposit gold or silver coin of the United States in the sum of $10 or any multiple thereof, with the Treasurer of the United States, or with any assistant treasurer, at any United States subtreasury, and demand coin certificates of like amount therefor. It shall be the duty of the Treasurer of the United States, upon receipt of said money or of any original certificate of deposit issued by the United States assistant treasurer at any United States subtreasury, stating that there has been deposited therein by any person or corporation, gold coin or standard silver dollars of the United States in the sum of $10 or any multiple thereof, to order payment of a like amount in coin certificates, at the counter of any United States depository designated by the depositor, in such denominations as he may request in writing, of not less than $1 or not more than $500, subject to the limitations hereinafter provided, which shall be redeemable in gold or silver coin, at the option of the United States; and all the certificates hereby authorized, when received at the Treasury in any form or for any purpose, shall be reissued, or new certificates of the same denomination substituted for such as are returned because of being mutilated or defaced, as now provided by law in regard to the notes of the United States. No coin certificates shall be issued of a denomination greater than $500, and at least two-thirds in value of such certificates outstanding at any time shall be of denominations not exceeding $50.

SEC. —. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to cause a sufficient number of coin certificates of the various denominations hereby authorized to be prepared and distributed among the United States depositories, to enable them to comply with the provisions of this act; and the sum of $50,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable him to prepare and distribute said certificates.

SEC. —. That this act shall take effect ninety days after its passage, except as to the $50,000 appropriated in section —; and as to that appropriation, it shall take effect on the passage of this act, and said sum shall be immediately available.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. FARWELL. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion a minute.

Mr. BUTLER. Very well.

Mr. FARWELL. I desire to present to the Senate, and ask that it be printed in the RECORD, a statement of the national debt of the Government, made up in an intelligible form, so that anybody who reads it can understand it, showing the interest-bearing debt, liabilities, assets, and paper issued and in circulation in the country. I ask that it be published in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

Mr. FARWELL. I also submit an amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], striking out the words "four hundred and twelve and one-half grains," in the proviso in the first section of the amendment, and inserting "541 grains," the amount of silver which is now worth $1

Mr. HOAR. I desire to know what it is that is proposed to be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois will state.

Mr. FARWELL. It is a short statement of the condition of the public debt of the country, showing the interest-bearing debt, liabilities, assets, and paper issued and in circulation in the country, made up in a form which will not require an expert to explain it.

The statement is as follows:

Mr. PALMER. Will the Senator from South Carolina withhold his motion until I can make a motion?

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to make a statement to Senators. If the committee that has been appointed and announced by the Chair leave the Senate to attend to their duties, as they will feel bound to do, I think it is due them and due to the subject-matter that this important bill involving our currency and all the financial questions of the day, should be postponed until next Monday. I do not wish to displace it in any way or have it lose its position, but I think it ought not to be taken up during the absence of Senators, especially when they are absent on such an errand.

Mr. PALMER. I hope the Senator from South Carolina will withhold his motion.

Mr. BUTLER. I suspended my motion for a moment in order to hear the statement of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have my suggestion carried out.

Mr. PALMER. I ask the forbearance of the Senator from South Carolina while I make this motion: That this bill be recommitted to the Committee on Finance with all the amendments. It seems to me it is going to lead to an interminable discussion. They have sounded their way; they know partially what the Senate wants, but there seems to be such a conflict as to necessitate a long debate here, while I think the committee can bring in a bill that will be more acceptable to the Senate. I offer that motion subject to the Senator's right of way.

Mr. BUTLER. I have no control over the bill. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], I believe, has charge of it. Pending that motion, I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MORRILL. I shall make no objection to the recommitment.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senator from South Carolina to withdraw his motion for one moment

Mr. BUTLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOAR. I ask consent to make a suggestion to the Senate.

It is well known, and Senators will all remember, that it was the intention of the Senate to spend the remaining days of the last week upon the Calendar when the public business was interrupted by the great national calamity which has occurred. Now five members of the Senate, very important members of the Senate, have been deputed to attend the funeral of the Chief-Justice at Toledo. They will be absent during the remainder of the week. It is quite unlikely that any legislative business will be done to-morrow after the funeral. I suppose the usual custom of the Senate would require us to adjourn on returning to our Chamber.

Friday of this week is a day held sacred, especially by members of the Catholic and Episcopal Churches, and for some years past the Senate has not transacted secular business on Good Friday. I therefore propose that unanimous consent be given that the remainder of this week, so far as we attend to legislative business, be spent upon the Calendar. It would be quite unjust to any Senator, under the circumstances I have named, to take up an important bill in his absence. There will really probably be but one legislative day during the remainder of this week.

Mr. BUTLER. That arrangement will be entirely agreeable to me.

Mr. HOAR. Therefore I suggest that for the remainder of this week the Calendar under Rule VIII be considered, with the modification made last week that a motion to take up a bill objected to shall not be in order.

Mr. BERRY. I gave notice this morning that I should ask to be heard on Thursday.

Mr. STEWART. This bill will remain as unfinished business.

Mr. BERRY. I gave notice that I should desire to address the Senate on Thursday of this week.

Mr. HOAR. I will except the courtesy of hearing my friend from Arkansas, as he has given notice.

Mr. STEWART. What is the proposition? How does the bill under consideration stand?

Mr. PALMER. I have moved that it be recommitted to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. STEWART. I do not consent to anything of that kind.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER] moved that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Finance, with the amendments, pending which the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, pending which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] asks unanimous consent that after this day the order of last week concerning the consideration of the Calendar under Rule VIII be continued for the remainder of this week. Is there objection? [A pause.]

Mr. STEWART. I will object to that unless the Senator from Michigan withdraws his motion.

Mr. PALMER. I withdraw.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER] to commit the bill with the amendments is withdrawn.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, pending which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] asks unanimous consent that the order of last week concerning the consideration of the Calendar under Rule VIII be continued for the remainder of this week after to-day. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BUTLER. Now I renew my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before submitting that motion the Chair will lay before the Senate a message from the President of the United States.

SWINE DISEASES IN GERMANY AND FRANCE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from Hon. George H. Pendleton, our minister to Germany, dated January 30, 1888, from which it appears that trichinosis prevails to a considerable extent in certain parts of Germany, and that a number of persons have already died from the effects of eating the meat of diseased hogs which were grown in that country.

I also transmit a report from our consul at Marseilles, dated February 4, 1888, representing that for a number of months a highly contagious and fatal disease has prevailed among the swine of a large section of France, which disease is thought to be very similar to hog cholera by the Commissioner of Agriculture, whose statement is herewith submitted.

It is extremely doubtful if the law passed April 29, 1878, entitled "An act to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States," meets cases of this description.

In view of the danger to the health and lives of our people and the contagion that may be spread to the live stock of the country by the importation of swine or hog products from either of the countries named, I recommend the passage of a law prohibiting such importation, with proper regulations as to the continuance of such prohibition, and permitting such further prohibitions in other future cases of a like character as safety and prudence may require.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, March 27, 1888.

COMPILATION OF REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. COCKRELL submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That the Joint Committee on Printing be, and they are hereby, directed to provide for a duplicate of the compilation of reports of committees provided for in public resolution No. 24, first session Forty-ninth Congress, approved July 29, 1886; said duplicate of House reports to be for the use of Senate committees.

PURCHASE OF BONDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (H. R. 5034) to provide for the purchase of United States bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PALMER. I renew my motion that the pending bill be committed to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BUTLER. I have no objection to the motion of the Senator from Michigan, but it seems it can not be acted on without debate, and I therefore renew my motion.

Mr. PALMER. My motion has been made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Michigan is pending. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 16 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, March 28, 1888, at 11.30 o'clock a. m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate the —— day of March, 1888.

POSTMASTER.

Warren Clark, to be postmaster at Concord, in the county of Merrimack and State of New Hampshire.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, March 27, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. J. H. CUTHBERT, D. D., of Washington, D. C.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

IMPROVEMENTS, ARKANSAS RIVER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the House, a letter from the Chief of Engineers, with reports and estimates of the proposed improvements of the Arkansas River; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

DAM AT POKEGAMA FALLS, MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the House, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, a report respecting the damage to lands by the dam at Pokegama Falls, on the Upper Mississippi River; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC LANDS FOR GRAZING PURPOSES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, with accompanying papers, a report from the Acting Commissioner of the General Land Office, in response to a resolution of the House calling for information relative to the use of the public lands by cattle-grazing companies; which was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

LAND SURVEYS, OREGON.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a communication from the district land office in Oregon, asking for appropriations for surveys of the public lands in Oregon for the fiscal year 1889; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM G. GALLOWAY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3508) for the relief of William G. Galloway, captain, United States Army.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, the amendment of the Senate is simply to strike out, in line 1 of the bill, the words "President of the United States" and insert "Secretary of War" instead. It provides that the necessary papers in this case shall be issued by the Secretary of War, and I ask that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

There being no objection, the amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

REFERENCE OF BILLS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4327) regulating the construction of bridges over the Muskingum River, in Ohio; which, with the bill, were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House bills of the Senate; which were severally read twice, and referred as follows, namely:

The bill (S. 1939) providing in certain cases for the forfeiture of wagon-road grants in the State of Oregon—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

The bill (S. 17) for the relief of Thomas Guinean—to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (S. 27) to prevent the obstruction of navigable waters and to protect public works against trespass or injury—to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (S. 249) to prevent the manufacture or sale of adulterated food or drugs in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill (S. 525) for the relief of Samuel A. B. Woodford—to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (S. 622) to amend section 2805 of the Revised Statutes of the United States so as to allow oaths to be administered by notaries public—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (S. 899) for the relief of Mary M. Briggs—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (S. 901) for the relief of Sophia W. Wright—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (S. 1007) granting a pension to John S. Coleman—to the Committee on Pensions.

The bill (S. 1102) to aid the State of Colorado to support a school of mines—to the Committee on Education.

The bill (S. 1128) to create ports of entry at Tacoma and Seattle, in Washington Territory—to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (S. 1248) to effect a rearrangement of the grades of office in the Subsistence Department of the Army—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (S. 1405) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the city of Oquawka, in the State of Illinois, and to establish it as a post-road—to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (S. 1428) to authorize the appointment of a hydrographer and assistant hydrographer of the Navy—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The bill (S. 1484) to fix the status in the Navy of certain cadet engineers—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The bill (S. 1498) granting to the city of Grand Forks, Dak., the right to build two free bridges at said city across the Red River—to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (S. 1524) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Tennessee River, between Bridgeport and Sheffield, Ala.—to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (S. 1525) to authorize the construction of a bride over the Cumberland River, between Burnside, Ky., and Carthage, Tenn., or the South Fork of said river, between Burnside and Tateville, Ky.—to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (S. 1526) to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Caney Fork River, between Rock Island and Carthage, in Tennessee—to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (S. 1701) authorizing the construction of a high wagon-bridge across the Missouri River at or near Sioux City, Iowa—to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (S. 2405) for the reduction of postage on seeds, cuttings, bulbs, scions, and so forth—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

The bill (S. 372) to provide for a commission on the alcoholic liquor traffic—to the Select Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

BRIDGES IN ARKANSAS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 1663) authorizing the Little Rock and Alexandria Railway Company to build certain bridges in the State of Arkansas.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, this bill, relating to the Little Rock and Alexandria Railroad Company, is exactly like the House bill reported by the committee favorably with the approval of the Secretary of War; and I ask that the Senate bill be now taken up and considered.

There being no objection, the bill was read a first and second time, ordered to a third reading, and being read the third time, was passed.

Mr. McRAE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGES ACROSS CERTAIN RIVERS IN MISSISSIPPI.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 2220) to correct an error in and to further amend "An act to authorize the Georgia Pacific Railroad Company to construct bridges across the Sunflower, Yazoo, and Tombigbee Rivers, in Mississippi," approved March 3, 1887.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, the bill just read is merely to correct the name of the railroad company authorized to build the bridges, and add to it a limitation as to the time when the erection shall begin. I ask that the House concur in the Senate bill.

There being no objection, the bill was read three times, and passed.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. MOFFITT, for ten days from March 27, on account of important business.

To Mr. WHITING, of Michigan, for five days, on account of important business.

To Mr. FISHER, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. ANDERSON, of Mississippi, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

GEORGE F. ROBERTS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 2001) for the relief of George F. Roberts, administrator, etc.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the bill shall remain on the Speaker's table for the present.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

THE LATE CHIEF-JUSTICE WAITE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following communication from the marshal of the Supreme Court of the United States; which was ordered to lie on the table:

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., March 26, 1888.

SIR: I am directed by the justices of the Supreme Court of the United States to inform you that, in accordance with a resolution of the Supreme Court adopted March 26, 1888, the funeral ceremonies of the late Chief-Justice Waite will be held in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Wednesday, March 28, at 12 o'clock m.; and the members of the House are respectfully invited to attend on that occasion.

Very respectfully,

J. M. WRIGHT, Marshal.

Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. CARLTON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A joint resolution (S. R. 65) to print Executive Document No. 51, first session Forty-ninth Congress, on the subject of cattle and dairy farming;

A bill (S. 309) for the relief of R. G. Huston & Co.;

A bill (S. 643) to construct a road to the national cemetery at Corinth, Miss.;

A bill (S. 660) for the relief of Charles Murphy; and

A bill (S. 1564) for the relief of importers of animals for breeding purposes in certain cases.

REPRINT OF BILL.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am instructed by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to ask that the bill (H. R. 8627) to regulate the classification, compensation, and allowances of postmasters be reprinted, the present print having been exhausted.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

BUSINESS OF COMMERCE COMMITTEE.

Mr. CLARDY. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Thursday, the 5th, and Saturday, the 7th, day of April immediately after the hour for the consideration of bills by committees, be set apart for the consideration of bills and measures reported from the Committee on Commerce in such order as said committee shall designate; this order not to conflict with prior orders, revenue bills, and general appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. CANNON. I shall feel compelled to object unless the 3d and 4th of April can be given to the Judiciary Committee, or so much of those days as may be necessary, for the consideration of the direct-tax bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois states that he objects to the resolution unless at the same time the 3d and 4th of April be set apart for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, or so much of those days as may be necessary, for the consideration of what is known as the direct-tax bill.

Mr. CLARDY. Let me ask the gentleman from Illinois not to interpose an objection to the consideration of this resolution. Let us consider it, and then let him offer his amendment. Unless three-fourths of the members of this House agree to this allotment of time I will not press the resolution.

Mr. CANNON. I suggest to the gentleman to modify his resolution by accepting my amendment.

Mr. CLARDY. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to withdraw his objection to the present consideration of the resolution. I have no objection to his amendment.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object to the amendment.

Mr. CLARDY. I ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] not to insist on his amendment the objection to which will deprive us of the days named for the consideration of these public measures in which every member of the 325 members of this House is interested. We have lost to-morrow. We have substantially lost to-day. The House had given us these days. I respectfully ask my friend from Illinois not to interpose his objection.

Mr. CANNON. There are forty millions of people interested in the direct-tax bill.

Mr. CLARDY. Let us take a vote of this House, and if we do not get a vote of three-fourths of its members in favor of this resolution I will not press it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], as the Chair understands, insists on his objection to the resolution, unless two days be assigned to the Committee on the Judiciary, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] objects to that modification of the resolution.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not object to the resolution of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARDY].

Mr. CLARDY. I think the gentleman should not make an objection in the way he does.

Some time subsequently,

Mr. CLARDY said: I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. It has been so referred.

BRIDGES OVER MUSKINGUM RIVER.

Mr. CRISP. The Senate has passed the bill (H. R. 4327) regulating the construction of bridges over the Muskingum River, in Ohio, with amendments, and requests a committee of conference. I ask that the amendments be read.

The amendments of the Senate were read.

Mr. CRISP. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate amendments be concurred in.

There being no objection, the amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

CONTESTED ELECTION—WORTHINGTON VS. POST.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of high privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'FERRALL. I call up for present consideration the contested-election case of Nicholas E. Worthington against Philip Sidney Post, from the Tenth Congressional district of Illinois. I ask that the conclusions of the committee be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

1. Resolved, That Nicholas E. Worthington was not elected a Representative to the Fiftieth Congress of the United States from the Tenth Congressional district of Illinois.

2. Resolved, That Philip Sidney Post was duly elected a Representative to the Fiftieth Congress of the United States from the Tenth Congressional district of Illinois, and is entitled to a seat in the same.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Mr. Speaker, unless there is some desire on the part of the House to have the report of the committee read at length, I ask unanimous consent that it be considered as having been read and be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The report (by Mr. O'FERRALL) is as follows:

The Committee on Elections, to which was referred the contested-election case of Nicholas E. Worthington vs. Philip Sidney Post, from the Tenth Congressional district of the State of Illinois, respectfully submits the following report:

There were many charges and counter-charges made in the notice of the contestant and answer of the contestee, but the evidence and arguments of counsel were confined to mistakes in the count of the ballots upon which the returns were made, the question as to the regularity of a number of ballots which were not counted, and the legality of a large number of voters and the committee will take these points up in the order given.

MISTAKES IN THE COUNT.

It was conceded by both parties to the contest that a recount of the ballots which was had entitled the contestant to 11 votes more than were returned for him, and his returned vote should be increased to that extent.

IRREGULAR BALLOTS.

The contestant claimed that there were 24 ballots which were not counted for him either in the original count or recount to which he was entitled.

The statutes of Illinois provide that—

"If more persons are designated for any office than there are candidates to be elected * * * such part of the ballot shall not be counted for either of the candidates. (Ill. R. S., 1885, chap. 46, sec. 57.)"

The committee, construing this provision of the statutes of Illinois as mandatory, which construction is sustained by the decisions of the supreme court of that State, proceeded to examine the ballots referred to, 24 in number.

On some of these ballots, under the words "For Representative in Congress, Tenth district," there were two names, the name of the contestee printed, and the name of the contestant written with pencil. On others the name of the contestant was written under the words "For State superintendent of public instruction," and no name under the words "For Representative in Congress, Tenth district."

After a careful examination of all of these 24 ballots the committee found only 2 which, in its opinion, were legal.

One will be found on page 100 of the record, and is in the following form:

"DISTRICT.

"NICHOLAS E. WORTHINGTON."

The other will be found on page 104 of the record, and is in the following form:

"[In pencil] NICHOLAS E.

"For Representative in Congress, Tenth Congressional district.

"[In pencil] WORTHINGTON."

The committee thought that the intention of the voters was clearly indicated by these ballots, and counted the same for the contestant.

VOTERS ATTACKED BY CONTESTANT UPON VARIOUS GROUNDS.

After a very critical examination of the testimony in the case of every voter attacked, we find that the following were in our opinion illegal:

IN STARK COUNTY.

1. Samuel W. Hoptenstall, who had lost his residence in the State by removing therefrom, and had not been in the State since his return a sufficient length of time to re-establish himself as a voter.
2. Frank Rosier, who was not a voter for the same reason.
3. Charles F. Hixon, who lived in Marshall, and not in Stark County, where he voted.

IN PEORIA COUNTY.

1. J. L. Fahnestock and
2. William F. Fahnestock:

These men went to Kansas in March, 1886, pre-empted each 160 acres of land, proved up claim, lived on it for six months, and then returned. They were not legal voters.

FULTON COUNTY.

1. John Spencer: He was a convict, and had not been restored to citizenship.
2. John N. Pan: He had not been in the county ninety days, as required by statute.
3. L. H. Hoffer: He was not a resident of the county or State.
4. O. S. Markland: He had not been in the county ninety days, as required by statute.
5. John B. Thurman: He had lost his residence by removing to Iowa, and had not been back twelve months, as required by statute.
6. George Myers: He went to Kansas; pre-empted land; lived on it for six months, in 1885, and voted in Kansas, and had not been back twelve months.

KNOX COUNTY.

1. William H. Butterfield: He took up a homestead in Dakota, and claimed, according to his own evidence, his residence in Dakota as late as November 7, 1885, not twelve months before the Congressional election of November 2, 1886.
2. George W. Armstrong: He had lost his residence by removal from the State, and had not been back long enough to acquire a right to vote.
3. Isaac Burnsid: He voted in one election district when his permanent residence was in another.
4. John Schoonover: He had homesteaded land in Kansas in September, 1886.
5. John Swigart: Filed homestead in Kansas in April, 1886; did some preliminary work, and lived on claim until August, 1886.
6. H. E. Gowan: He had lost his residence by removing from the State, and had not been back the required twelve months.
7. Charles A. Hammerstrain: He was not a naturalized citizen.
8. Helly Doyle: He was not a resident of the county.
9. George Campbell: He was a minor.

These 20 votes, illegal for the reasons given, the committee has taken from the contestee's vote.

VOTERS ATTACKED BY THE CONTESTEE UPON THE GROUNDS STATED BELOW.

STARK COUNTY.

1. W. W. Jones: He was not a resident of the county.
2. William D. Headley: He had lost his residence by removing from the State, and had not been back the required time.
3. William A. Wright: He was a convict and had not been restored to citizenship. The contestant insisted in his brief that the entire record from the finding of the indictment down to the sentence must be produced. The contestee produced the judgment of the court, and the committee thought that was sufficient.

PEORIA COUNTY.

1. Birdsey Beach: He was not a resident of the election district in which he voted.
2. Henry Shafer: He was not a resident of the election district in which he voted. He commenced to prepare to move into the district on the 2d October, but did not actually move until the 4th, not thirty days before the election.
3. John Merrit: He was not a resident of the county.
4. John Becker: He was a foreigner, and came to this country when he was under eighteen years of age. No evidence that his father was ever naturalized; he had heard so, but knew nothing about it. His father lived in the same district and was not called.
5. Herman Voight: He was a minor. His step-father thought he was twenty-one, but his mother swore he would not be twenty-one until July, 1887.
6. John Schock: He was a convict, and not restored to citizenship until March, 1887.
7. W. W. Chambelin: He voted in the wrong election district.
8. George McAvoy:
9. Perry Londergren:
10. August Spitznagal:

These men were convicted of larceny, which disqualified them, under the statutes of Illinois, and they had not been restored to the rights of full citizenship.

FULTON COUNTY.

1. J. T. Dickey:
2. W. G. Dickey:

These men had not been in the election district thirty days before election. They did not move into the district until the 4th day of October, 1886. The contestant says that both the 4th day of October and the 2d day of November ought to be counted. Your committee differ with the contestant, and exclude one day, which will give only twenty-nine days in district before election.

3. William Brown: He had not been in election district thirty days. He moved into district first Wednesday in October, 1886.
4. George Hoffman: He was a minor. His father had a vague idea that he was born in September, 1865, but a lady testified that he was born on the 16th September, 1866; that she was a neighbor, and knew that he was born one week and a day before her son George was born. In the opinion of your committee he was only twenty years of age.
5. George W. Clarke: He was a minor, and in the spring of 1886 he was hunting work; said he would be twenty years old that month, and that his mother had sent him out to get work.
6. Maurice O'Donnell: He had been in Kansas between one and two years before the election, and had been back only about five weeks, returning, as your committee thinks, only to get his share in some property.
7. John Kitchen: He was not a resident of Fulton County; had been away for five or six years, and only returned in August, 1886, and left in December following.
8. Preston Sipes: He moved away in spring of 1886; said he was going to Arkansas; sold his wheat in the field, cow, and other personal property; loaded up his wagon; took his family, and said he never would be back. He returned in August, 1886; said he had been in Missouri, Arkansas, and the Indian Nation. Your committee does not think he was a legal voter in the State; but, in addition, if a resident, he voted in the wrong district.
9. John Colston: He was a convict, and had not been restored to citizenship. Your committee held in this, as in the former cases of this kind, that the record of conviction alone was sufficient.

KNOX COUNTY.

1. Henry B. Burton: He filed claim of homestead in Nebraska in June, 1886. On his examination he swore that he did not file the claim until November 24, 1886, after the election; but a copy of the record was afterwards filed by contestee showing that he had filed it in June, 1886.
2. Jessee Boynton: He was not a legal voter; had been in the West; voted while there, etc.
3. August Osterburg, and
4. Frederick Osterburg:

These men were foreign born; they came to this country when children; they were never naturalized, and there is no evidence their father was ever naturalized; their father came here in 1868, and died twelve or fifteen years before 1886; if fifteen years, he had not been here five years when he died.

5. Benoni Simpkins: He had not been a resident of the State and county for the time required by statute; his goods left De Witt, Nebr., on or about the 3d November, 1885; he and his family reached Maquon, where he voted, on the 14th; he was not examined as a witness, though living at Maquon.
6. Henry Maxwell: He had not been a resident of the township in which he voted for thirty days.
7. Sevastime Soper;
8. Thomas McClure; and
9. Robert McClure:

These men, who were foreigners, were never naturalized, according to their own statements.

10. Martin Crow: He was not a resident; his home was in Kansas; owned large body of land along with his brothers there.
11. Olof Head: Had not been in township where he voted for thirty days; moved into it October 20, 1886.
12. Edward Semple:
13. Charles Munson:

These men had taken a homestead in Kansas—proved up claim—one about nine months before the election, the other in August or September, 1885, and he had been back four months.

14. Edward Colgan: Unnaturalized foreigner; he had only declared his intention.
15. Charles Behm: He was foreign born, and came here before he was eighteen years of age; he was never naturalized; his father took out his second papers after he (Charles) was twenty-one years old.
16. Charles Stecko: He was foreign born, and came here after he was eighteen years old; only took out one paper.
17. Edward O'Leary: He was foreign born, and came to this country before he was eighteen years of age; his father lived in this country four years and returned to Ireland. (Of course the father was not naturalized.) Edward had never been naturalized.
18. Karl Messer: He was foreign-born; his parents came here with him when he was about thirteen years old, and after remaining here three years they returned to Ireland. Of course the father was never naturalized, and Karl has never been.
19. William McCoy: He was foreign-born; came here when he was more than eighteen years of age in 1863; he had taken out one paper in 1865 in Montana.
20. Oliver H. Darnell: He moved into the district in which he voted October 11, 1886, not thirty days before the election.

The illegality of the following votes was conceded by both parties:

VOTED FOR POST.	VOTED FOR WORTHINGTON.
1. Enos George Mack.	1. James Atwood.
2. James Anderson.	2. William Campbell.
3. Andrew Hertzel.	3. James Ennis.
4. Taylor Long.	4. Fred Bohl.
5. Andrew Andrews.	5. William C. McCormick.
6. George E. Dutton.	6. James Biggins.
7. Samuel F. Laird.	7. Eb. Tolle.
8. George H. Long.	8. Michael Conroy.
9. Eugene S. Norris.	9. James Eads.
10. George Ireland.	10. James McGann.
	11. James Holding.
	12. John W. Swartz.
	13. Henry Baden.
	14. James Swisher.
	15. Peter Ward.
	16. Luke Nolan.
	17. George E. Hastey.
	18. Thomas Mason.
	19. Simeon Trotter.
	20. Oscar Cox.
	21. Theodore Nailor.
	22. John Almquist.
	23. Robert Hobkirk.
	24. Dennis McCoy.

STUDENT VOTE.

There were 18 votes cast by students of Knox College and Lombard University, which were claimed by contestant to be illegal; 14 of these votes were cast for contestee and 4 for contestant.

The committee, in passing upon the legality of these votes, was of the opinion that where young men had entirely severed their connection with the home of their parents, and were relying upon their own resources, efforts, and means, and had no fixed determination as to their future place of abode, they were legal voters at the point where these colleges were located; that to hold differently would be to deprive many worthy young men of the right to vote, and disfranchise them during the years they might be engaged in their laudable efforts to secure an education. With this principle in view the committee made a careful examination of each individual vote, and found that the votes of three persons, whose names are included in the above list of conceded illegal votes for contestee, did not come within the principle laid down.

The contestant in his brief conceded that 4 votes cast for him by students were illegal, but he made this concession upon a construction of the law which is not in accordance with the views entertained by the committee, and the committee has, therefore, left them to his credit.

UNREGISTERED AND SWORN-IN VOTERS.

The qualifications of electors in Illinois are as follows:

"Who may vote.—Every person having resided in this State one year, in the county ninety days, and in the election district thirty days next preceding any election therein, who was an elector in this State on the 1st day of April, in the year of our Lord 1848, or obtained a certificate of naturalization, before any court of record in this State prior to the 1st day of January, in the year of our Lord 1870, or who shall be a male citizen of the United States, above the age of twenty-one years, shall be entitled to vote at such election." (Ill. Rev. Stat., chapter 46, section 65.)

There is a registration provision, and where a voter presents himself and his name is not on the registry-list and his vote is challenged, the statute provides that he may make and subscribe an affidavit in the following form, which shall be retained by the judges of election and returned by them with the poll-books:

"STATE OF ILLINOIS, County of——.

"I, —— ——, do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I am a citizen of the United States (or that I was an elector on the 1st day of April, A. D. 1848, or that I obtained a certificate of naturalization before a court of record in this State prior to the 1st day of January, A. D. 1870, as the case may be); that I have resided in this State one year, in the county ninety days, and in this election district thirty days next preceding this election; that I now reside at (here give the particular house or place of residence, and if in a town or city, the street and number), in this election district; that I am twenty-one years of age, and have not voted at this election; so help me God (or this I do solemnly and sincerely affirm, as the case may be).

"Subscribed and sworn to before me this —— day of ——, A. D. 18—.

"—— ——."

(Section 69, chapter 46.)

It is also provided that—

"In addition to such an affidavit, the person so challenged shall produce a witness personally known to the judges of election, and resident in the precinct (or district), or who shall be proved by some legal voter of such precinct or district, known to the judges to be such, who shall take the oath following, namely:

"'I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I am a resident of this election precinct (or district), and entitled to vote at this election, and that I have been a resident of this State for one year last passed, and am well acquainted with this person whose vote is now offered; that he is an actual and bona fide resident of this election precinct (or district), and has resided herein for thirty days, as I verily believe, in this county ninety days, and in this State one year, next preceding this election.'"

Again:

"No vote shall be received at any State election in this State if the name of the person offering to vote be not in the said register, unless the person offering to vote shall furnish to the judges of the election his affidavit, in writing, stating therein that he is an inhabitant of said district and entitled to vote therein at such election, and prove by the oath of a householder and registered voter of the district in which he offers to vote that he knows such person to be an inhabitant of the district, and if in any city, giving the residence of such person when in said district." (Part of section 145, chapter 46.)

There were 27 votes attacked by the contestant, cast by parties who were not registered and who were sworn in, upon the ground that the affidavits were defective. Twenty of these votes were cast for the contestee and 7 for the contestant.

The committee, after a careful consideration of these affidavits, was of the opinion that all but 5 of them were substantially within the requirements of the law. It has deducted from the vote of the contestee the 5 votes cast upon the five defective affidavits—in fact, five blank affidavits.

Nothing remains now but to recapitulate the result of the investigation:

Returned vote of contestee		15,186
Deduct illegal votes as follows:
In Stark County	3
In Peoria County	2
In Fulton County	6
In Knox County	9
Conceded, not embraced in above	10
On defective affidavits not embraced in above	5
		35
Contestee's true vote		15,151
Returned vote of contestant		15,157
Add gain on recount		11
Add gain on examination of ballots		2
		15,170
Deduct illegal votes as follows:
In Stark County	3
In Peoria County	10
In Fulton County	9
In Knox County	20
Conceded, not embraced in above	24
		66
Contestant's true vote		15,104

Take, then, contestee's true vote, 15,151; deduct contestant's true vote, 15,104, and the contestee's majority will be 47, or 18 more than his returned majority; and if all the unregistered voters claimed to have been illegal by reason of alleged defective affidavits are deducted, the majority of the contestee would be 39.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following resolutions:

"1. Resolved, That Nicholas E. Worthington was not elected a Representative to the Fiftieth Congress of the United States from the Tenth Congressional district of Illinois.

"2. Resolved, That Philip Sidney Post was duly elected a Representative to the Fiftieth Congress of the United States from the Tenth Congressional district of Illinois, and is entitled to a seat in the same."

The resolutions reported from the Committee on Elections were adopted.

Mr. O'FERRALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolutions were adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

BRIDGE NEAR LITTLE ROCK, ARK.

Mr. CRISP, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 7790) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River at or near Little Rock, Ark.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

RAILROAD BRIDGE, WINONA, DAK.

Mr. CRISP also, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 7438) granting to the Aberdeen, Bismarck and Northwestern Railroad Company the right to construct and maintain a bridge across the Missouri River near Winona, Emmons County, Dakota; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI.

Mr. CRISP also, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 3523) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River, and to establish it as a post-road; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER.

Mr. CRISP also, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 7776) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River in the county of Monona, in the State of Iowa, and in the county of Burt, in the State of Nebraska, and to make the same a post-road; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE COLUMBIA.

Mr. CRISP also, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 23) to authorize Dalles City to construct a bridge across the Columbia River in the State of Oregon and Territory of Washington; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WAGON BRIDGE NEAR SIOUX CITY, IOWA.

Mr. CRISP, from the Committee on Commerce, reported, as a substitute for the bill H. R. 4469, a bill (H. R. 8946) authorizing the construction of a high wagon bridge across the Missouri at or near Sioux City, Iowa; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The original bill, H. R. 4469, was laid on the table.

FOURTH COLLECTION DISTRICT, VIRGINIA.

Mr. TARSNEY, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 1890) to amend an act approved June 15, 1882, changing the boundaries of the fourth collection district of Virginia; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted the minority of the committee to file their views, to be printed with the report.

LIMITS OF THE PORT OF MEMPHIS, TENN.

Mr. PHELAN, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 5032) to extend the limits of the port of Memphis, Tenn.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE OVER THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER NEAR NATCHEZ.

Mr. PHELAN also, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with amendments the bill (S. 1669) authorizing the Mississippi and Louisianna Bridge and Railroad Company of Natchez, Miss., to construct a bridge over the Mississippi River at or near Natchez, Miss.; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

OBSTRUCTIVE DEPOSITS, NEW YORK HARBOR.

Mr. BRYCE, from the Committee on Commerce, reported, in lieu of the bills H. R. 1662 and H. R. 5658, a bill (H. R. 8947) to prevent obstructive and injurious deposits within the harbor and adjacent waters of New York City and Long Island Sound, by dumping or otherwise, and to punish and prevent such offenses; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The original bills, H. R. 5658 and H. R. 1662, were laid on the table.

PORT OF ENTRY, SUPERIOR, WIS.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. 5704) providing for the establishment of a port of entry at Superior, in the county of Douglas, in the State of Wisconsin; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CUSTOMS COLLECTION DISTRICT, DULUTH, MINN.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota, also, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8646) relating to the customs collection district of Duluth, Minn.; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LIFE-SAVING STATION, NANTUCKET ISLAND, MASSACHUSETTS.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8752) providing for the establishment of an additional life-saving station on Nantucket Island, Massachusetts; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN W. REID.

Mr. CUTCHEON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. 4681) for the relief of John W. Reid; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MAJ. DANIEL N. BASH.

Mr. STEELE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (S. 258) for the relief of Maj. Daniel N. Bash, paymaster, United States Army; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. STEELE. If it be now in order, I ask that this bill take the place of a House bill of similar purport now on the Private Calendar, and that the House bill lie on the table.

The SPEAKER. That can not be done now; it can be done by unanimous consent at some other time.

WILLIAM CLARK, DECEASED.

Mr. STEELE also, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back adversely the bill (S. 1118) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of William Clark, deceased; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

GEORGE W. BOLTON.

Mr. STEELE also, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back adversely the bill (S. 547) for the relief of George W. Bolton, alias Charles W. Andrews; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

YORK HARBOR AND BEACH RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. MAISH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 7509) granting to the York Harbor and Beach Railroad Company a right of way; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MONUMENT TO VICTIMS OF PRISON-SHIPS.

Mr. MAISH also, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 1687) for the erection and completion of a monument to the memory of the victims of prison-ships at Fort Greene, Brooklyn; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FOURTH REGIMENT OF IOWA INFANTRY.

Mr. GEAR, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred with Senate amendments the bill (H. R. 1387) for the relief of the volunteers of the Fourth Regiment of Iowa Infantry, reported the same back with the recommendation that the Senate amendments be concurred in.

The bill, with the amendments, was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ALLEN GUNTER.

Mr. FORD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 477) for the relief of Allen Gunter; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

HARRY S. KELLOGG.

Mr. CAREY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 6080) for the relief of Harry S. Kellogg, administrator of the estate of Lyman W. Kellogg, deceased; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

STOCKBRIDGE AND MUNSEE INDIANS, WISCONSIN.

Mr. HUDD, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 5043) for the relief of the Stockbridge and Munsee tribe of Indians in the State of Wisconsin; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ARTESIAN WELLS IN MONTANA.

Mr. JOSEPH, from the Committee on the Territories, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 1964) to provide for the boring of artesian wells in the Territory of Montana; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADDITIONAL TERRITORIAL JUDGES.

Mr. KILGORE, from the Committee on the Territories, reported back, as a substitute for House bill 6828, a bill (H. R. 8948) to provide additional justices of the supreme court of Dakota, Washington, Wyoming, Utah, Idaho, and Arizona Territories, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

House bill 6828 was, by unanimous consent, laid on the table.

THE LAKES AND GULF WATER-WAY COMMISSION.

Mr. PLUMB, from the Committee on Railways and Canals, reported back the bill (H. R. 1995) to create the lakes and gulf water-way commission; which was laid on the table.

He also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. 8949) to provide for ascertaining the propriety and feasibility of constructing the lakes and gulf water-way; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, LYNN, MASS.

Mr. SOWDEN, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back the bill (H. R. 1533) for the erection of a public building at Lynn, Mass.; which was laid on the table.

He also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. 8950) for the erection of a public building at Lynn, Mass.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, STAUNTON, VA.

Mr. SOWDEN also, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back the bill for the erection of a public building at the city of Staunton, Va.; which was laid on the table.

He also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. 8951) for the erection of a public building at Staunton, Va., which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, YORK, PA.

PUNISHMENT FOR BURNING WOODS, GRASS, ETC.

Mr. OATES, from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 3279) to define and punish the offense of setting fire to and burning the woods, grass, or forests on lands belonging to the United States; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

COMPENSATION OF CLERKS TO SENATORS AND REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. OATES also, from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 6095) to authorize the appointment and prescribe the compensation of clerks to Senators and Representatives who are not chairmen of committees; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ELECTION OF UNITED STATES SENATORS.

Mr. OATES also, from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, reported back joint resolution (H. Res. 141) relating to the election of United States Senators; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The hour for the reception of reports has expired.

Mr. BAYNE. There is one committee which has not yet been called.

The SPEAKER. But the hour has expired.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Military Academy appropriation bill.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The call in the morning hour rests with the Committee on the Pacific Railroads, and I hope this motion of the gentleman from Illinois will not prevail. That committee has very important business pending before the House. It has given way to other committees right along throughout the session, and I hope the motion will not now be pressed by the gentleman.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have no desire to deprive the House of the consideration of bills reported by that committee; and if the motion I have submitted can be considered as pending after the expiration of the hour I shall not press it now.

The SPEAKER. The motion is in order after the call or before.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then I shall not press the motion now, unless some other effort is made to antagonize it. I am willing to yield until after this hour has been consumed by the Committee on the Pacific Railroads.

Mr. HOLMAN. After the lapse of this hour I wish to state that I shall seek to antagonize the motion of the gentleman from Illinois by asking the House to take up for further consideration the bill in relation to the homestead and pre-emption laws.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I give notice that I shall insist upon the motion to consider the general appropriation bill.

FUNERAL OF CHIEF-JUSTICE WAITE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will direct the Clerk, with the consent of the House, to read for the information of members the arrangement which has been made with reference to the funeral of the Chief-Justice by the committee on arrangements.

The Clerk read as follows:

The space in the House and galleries, exclusive of the diplomatic and executive galleries, has been estimated and divided, and tickets will be issued and handed to each Member and Senator to-day before the adjournment. Each Member and Senator will have two tickets to the reserved gallery and one pass to the floor for such person as the member sees fit to give the pass to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask, as a parliamentary question, where the call of committees rests to-day?

The SPEAKER. If the Chair proceeded in the regular way the call would rest with the Committee on Patents; but the Committee on Pacific Railroads was passed over in its regular order with the understanding that it should be called whenever the committee desired. The gentleman from Ohio announces that the committee now desires to occupy the hour entitled to be occupied under the rule, and hence the call rests with that committee.

Mr. McADOO. Would it be in order to ask unanimous consent that the further call of committees be continued for reports until all the committees have been called?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. If consent to that arrangement would take the floor from the Committee on Pacific Railroads, I should have to object.

The SPEAKER. It would take no part of the hour to which the committee is entitled.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Then I have no objection.

The remainder of the committees were then called in their order for reports.

REFORM IN THE CIVIL SERVICE.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri, from the Select Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, reported back, in lieu of bills H. R. 7791 and H. R. 8043, in relation to the civil service, a bill (H. R. 8963) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States," approved January 16, 1883; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

House bills H. R. 7791 and H. R. 8043 were laid on the table.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask consent of the House to file the views of the minority, to be printed with the report of the committee in that case.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Mr. CLEMENTS, from the Select Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. 1536) to extend the operation of chapter 27 of the Statutes at Large, entitled "An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States;" which, on motion, was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying adverse report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. BAYNE, by unanimous consent, filed the views of the minority of the committee; which were ordered to be printed with the report of the committee on said bill.

GEORGE MAXWELL.

Mr. WILLIAMS, from the Select Committee on Indian Depredation Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 767) for the relief of George Maxwell; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN JACKSON.

Mr. BIGGS, from the Select Committee on Indian Depredation Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7977) for the relief of John Jackson; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

J. KAULA.

Mr. BUNNELL, from the Select Committee on Indian Depredation Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 5194) for the relief of J. Kaula; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FORT OMAHA, NEBR.

Mr. LAIRD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably Senate bill 671 in lieu of the bill (H. R. 1618) to provide for the sale of the site of Fort Omaha, Nebr., the sale or the removal of the improvements thereof, and for a new site, and the construction of suitable buildings thereon; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

NAVAL APPRENTICES AS ENSIGNS.

Mr. McADOO, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back, as a substitute for the bill H. R. 7089, the bill (H. R. 8964) providing for the annual commissioning as ensigns into the Navy of a certain number of naval apprentices; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. McADOO. I ask consent that the minority may have leave to file their views hereafter, to be printed with the report of the committee.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

NEW LAND DISTRICT, MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. STOCKDALE, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7788) to establish a new land district in the State of Mississippi; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GREAT SIOUX INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. PEEL. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to report back the bill (H. R. 7315) to divide the Great Sioux Indian reservation into several smaller reservations, and for other purposes, and to ask that the Senate amendments be non-concurred in, and that a committee of conference be requested.

The SPEAKER. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. PEEL. I ask unanimous consent.

There being no objection, the Senate amendments were non-concurred in; and it was ordered that a committee of conference be asked on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will announce the managers of the conference on the part of the House during the day.

SECTION 3847, REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. MONTGOMERY, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 4758) to amend section 3847 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (1878), Title XLVI, chapter 1; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MAIL ROUTE, NEW ORLEANS TO PORT EADS.

Mr. MONTGOMERY also, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported back, as a substitute for the bill H. R. 5148, the bill (H. R. 8965) for the relief of the mail contractor on route 30100, New Orleans to Port Eads; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SALARIES UNITED STATES JUDGES.

Mr. CASWELL, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported, as a substitute for the bill H. R. 1928, a bill (H. R. 8966) fixing the salaries of the several judges of the United States courts; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The bill H. R. 1928 was laid on the table.

PLEASURE YACHTS.

Mr. CUMMINGS, from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, reported back with an adverse recommendation the bill (H. R. 1992) to amend the United States Statutes in relation to pleasure yachts; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

SECTION 3477, REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. O'FERRALL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 8967) to amend section 3477 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The hour for the consideration of bills called up by committees begins at nine minutes to 2 o'clock. The call rests with the Committee on Pacific Railroads.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I call up for consideration the bill H. R. 8184.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent to call up a bill from the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. That is not in order. The hour for the consideration of bills called up by committees has commenced. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. WEAVER. I wish to ask the gentleman from Ohio whether it is his intention to do anything more in this hour than to have the bill debated?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I will say it is not the intention in this hour to do anything more than discuss the bill.

PACIFIC RAILROADS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8184) to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862; also to amend an act approved July 2, 1864, and also an act approved May 7, 1878, both in amendment of said first-mentioned act, and to provide for a settlement of claims growing out of the issue of bonds to aid in the construction of certain of said railroads, and to secure to the United States the payment of all indebtedness of certain of the companies therein mentioned.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the bill be dispensed with; that it be considered as having been read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the bill.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I object.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I desire to ask a parliamentary question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Is it necessary that the bill should be read at this time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that any gentleman on the floor has the right to have the bill read.

Mr. HATCH took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill. Before he concluded the reading,

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa, said: I withdraw my objection to dispensing with the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there further objection?

There was no further objection.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I desire the attention of the House to this bill, because it deals with one of the most important subjects that will come before this House during this Congress. It deals with an indebtedness to the Government of the United States to the amount of $60,000,000. In this bill alone is considered the question of the adjustment with the Union Pacific Railroad Company, including the Kansas Pacific Railroad Company, and the Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company, the indebtedness of which together at this time amounts to $60,000,000.

Other measures are before the Committee on Pacific Railroads, dealing with the indebtedness of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, including the Western, and of the Sioux City and Pacific, which will amount to about the same sum.

In these latter days we are not in the habit of regarding millions of dollars as amounting to very much; but when the attention of the House is fixed upon the fact that this bill in itself includes the adjustment of an indebtedness for an amount equal to the amounts appropriated to run this Government prior to 1860, there will come some appreciation of the immense sum involved.

The question for the House to consider is whether this bill deals wisely, deals prudently, deals fairly and honestly with the Government in what is here proposed. The question is, does the bill secure in a proper manner the amount to be paid to the Government?

It may be well for us to consider the origin of this debt and what preparations were made for its payment, or rather the failure of preparation that was made in the original act for the payment of the indebtedness; then to consider that the indebtedness is drawing near its maturity; then to consider the amount of security which the Government has for the payment of its debt if the companies should fail to pay at the date of maturity; then to consider what security in addition—if some arrangement is made with the companies—what security in addition these companies can give, so as to make the debt absolutely certain to be paid to the Government.

In 1862, when this country was upon the verge of dissolution, and it was important that every tie that could bind the separate parts together should be made use of by the Government; when there were whisperings and mutterings of the possibilities of the separation of the Pacific States from this Union, it was at that time the measure was projected which led to this indebtedness. And for the purpose of reaching out and binding the golden States to the other States of the Union, in a patriotic spirit and with good purposes, the Congress of the United States passed the first act. It is entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes." When that act was passed—a charter you might term it, for it was the charter of the Union Pacific Railroad Company—certain aid and assistance was proposed to be given to any railroad company that would build the line from the Missouri River to the Pacific. Large grants of land were given. The grant was five alternate sections of land per mile on each side of said railroad, within the limits of 10 miles on each side of the road. In addition to that grant the Government was to loan to the corporation which should build the road for a certain distance, the most easily built portion of the road, $16,000 per mile; for another portion, more difficult of construction, $32,000 per mile, and for another portion, still more difficult, $48,000 per mile. But that loan was not to be in money. The Government was a borrower then. There was no surplus in the Treasury. The loan, therefore, was to be in bonds, to be handed over by the Government to the corporation, and by the corporation to be sold, and from the money so realized the road was to be constructed.

That enactment rested without any action being taken under it for two years. Then Congress amended the act so as to double the amount of land granted to the railroad company and to shorten the sections from 40 miles to 20 miles; that is, these bonds were to be delivered to the railroad company as fast as each section of 20 miles had been completed by the company and accepted by three commissioners appointed by the President. Then the act provided that the railway company might put upon this road of theirs an additional mortgage, a first mortgage, equal in amount to the amount of the Government loan, to wit: $16,000 per mile for some mileage, $32,000 per mile for other mileage, and $48,000 per mile for another portion of the road. It was provided further that the lien of the Government should be subordinate to this. The lien of the Government was in itself to constitute a mortgage, but that it was to be in the nature of a second mortgage. Hence all of these bonds were issued under the provisions permitting the companies to issue first-mortgage bonds in the same amount per mile.

What provision was made at that time for the collection of the debt? Previous to this date the Government of the United States had paid in some years for the transportation of soldiers, munitions of war, mails, and stores of the United States of different kinds, to and fro between the East and the Pacific Ocean, as high as $7,000,000. For that reason it seemed plausible to the gentlemen then in Congress who were considering this measure that if the Government should take one-half of the compensation for transportation and 5 per cent. on the net earnings of the road it would be sufficient. The first enactment, that of 1862, provided for the taking of all the compensation due the company from the Government for transportation and 5 per cent. of the net earnings of the road. The second act cut the compensation in two, and said that the Government would be satisfied with retaining one-half the amount due for transportation and 5 per cent. of the net earnings of the road.

These two amounts were to constitute a sum to pay the interest and to provide a sinking fund which, it was supposed, would be sufficient at the end of the thirty years to pay the indebtedness. The roads at first had large earnings, but very soon their earnings began to fall away. Their charges against the Government for transportation were nothing to compare with the amounts which the Government had theretofore been compelled to pay, and consequently a very small return was made by the roads to the Government, either from the charge for transportation or the 5 per cent. of net earnings, and the debts of the companies accordingly kept growing. In 1878 the act called the Thurman act was passed. It provided that the Government should retain all of the charge for transportation, one half to go to the interest account and the other half into the sinking fund. Also, that the Government should receive 5 per cent. of the net earnings of the road, and further, that such a sum in addition should be paid as that these three amounts—or these two, if you choose to put the two halves of the transportation charge together—that these and the 5 per cent. should amount to 25 per cent. of the net earnings. This was done in the expectation that this amount would provide a fund which would nearly obliterate the debt by the time it should become due.

Now that act has financially failed. It has failed for two reasons. One is that the earnings of the roads have continually diminished, continually fallen off. Why have they fallen off? Because competition has come into their territory on both sides. On the north they have as competitors the Canadian Pacific road, which has taken a part of their traffic; the Northern Pacific road, which has taken a part of their traffic; the Chicago and Northwestern and the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul roads, which have taken part of their traffic; the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy road, which has taken part of their traffic; the Rock Island road, which has taken part of their traffic—all have penetrated deep into their territory, especially into the territory of the Union Pacific Railroad.

You have on the south the Sante Fé, the Southern Pacific, and the Missouri Pacific, and other roads penetrating into some of their territory, so that the earnings of this road have diminished. Then, as to the sinking fund, it was required to be invested in Government bonds, a preference being given to 5 per cent. bonds. The enormous premiums to which these bonds ran up made the return for the sinking fund very small; and, strange to say, if the bonds in the sinking fund were sold to-day they would not realize for any of these companies the amount of money that they paid into the sinking fund. They have lost by the premium going up and then the diminution; and by sums of money lying uninvested in the sinking fund for periods of time they have suffered loss. This is the condition in which they now are. This condition is our misfortune—the misfortune of the Government, because there is not in the sinking fund such a sum to pay our debt as there should be; and the debt has been increasing, the payments on interest account also annually decreasing.

I call the attention of the House to the report of the committee. I ask members to take the time to look into this report and to examine the tables there. There are tables coming from the Commissioner of Railroads, from the actuary of the Treasury, from the report of the United States Pacific Railroad Commission, and other tables, all of which embrace facts and figures of interest concerning this question.

Two years ago, when this matter was taken up by others and myself, we had the figures given to us from the Treasury Department and the Interior Department as to the indebtedness of this company. That indebtedness in these two years has grown about $3,860,147. When is it due? As the bonds were issued to these roads in installments as each section of 20 miles was finished, and as the road was in process of construction from about the latter part of 1865 to the latter part of 1869, running through four years, this indebtedness comes due at different times in the years 1896, 1897, 1898, 1899, and the average date of maturity of the Union Pacific is July 10, 1897.

Members will have observed in the statement made of the provisions for the payment of the debt that they have proven to be entirely insufficient. The result has been that Congress has for some years been considering this question. It was considered in the Forty-eighth Congress and in the Forty-ninth Congress; and in this Congress we have had it placed before us in a peculiarly striking and strong manner. How was it?

In the Forty-ninth Congress a measure on this subject was introduced by the committee and considered by the House; but there was a great deal of uncertainty as to some of the questions connected with this subject—first, as to the value of the property or assets of the companies and their ability to pay their debts. Again, as to additional security which companies could give, the value of the lien we have. And there were other questions. The Committee on Pacific Railroads was thus induced to report to the House a resolution providing for a commission to investigate these roads. That commission was sent forth, by the authority of Congress and by the appointment of the President, to investigate this subject; and it had a very good opportunity to do so from the adjournment of Congress on the 4th of March last until the meeting of Congress at the beginning of last December.

During this period the members of that commission traveled all over the territory traversed by these roads, and examined all the questions as thoroughly and completely as it would be possible for a commission to do in that length of time. That commission has come back and made its report to the President; the President has sent the report to Congress; the committee has taken up that report and considered it, and has presented its work to the House.

What was the recommendation of this commission? It was in the line of previous action in this House and previous recommendations of those who have been called upon to consider the subject. The recommendation was that there should be some extension, some adjustment and settlement of this debt; and the committee have, in the main, adopted the suggestion.

One of the requirements of the act creating the commission was that it should report to the House a bill of such a character as to secure payment to the Government.

Mr. BAYNE. That was the report of the majority.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAYNE. The minority recommended another course.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Yes, sir. I may say very briefly that the minority recommended no bill; the minority commissioner made no suggestion as to securing the debt. His recommendation looked to forfeiting the charter, not to securing the debt.

This bill is in the line of the recommendations made by Commissioner Armstrong. The Commissioner of Railroads, before this Administration came in, recommended to Congress legislation of this character—recommended that we should depart from the idea of percentages upon net earnings, which seemed so uncertain, so difficult, and which had proved so unsatisfactory, and recommended entering upon a policy of fixed payments to be required from these roads, so that we would know exactly how much they would be called on to pay each year, and the Government should know just how much it should receive.

The bill provides that in the first place we shall arrive at the amount of the indebtedness of the company by adding to the principal of the bonds which were loaned the whole amount of the interest which has been paid by the Government of the United States and that which shall yet be paid in the nine years which those bonds have to run; then find what the present value of that amount, as of the 1st day of July, 1888. I wish the House to understand clearly it has been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States that this indebtedness and the interest on the bonds is not due and not collectible until maturity of the bonds. It has been decided by the Supreme Court that the Government can not collect any part of the percentage of net earnings on any portion of the roads except those miles of road for which bonds were issued. It has been decided, in fact, that our lien is only on the miles of the road for which the bonds were issued; that we have no claims on the earnings of any other portion of the road, and can not collect a cent other than provided for by the original contract, as modified by the Thurman law, by percentages until the debt has become due. Therefore, if we take the debt in its legal state, it should be taken as a debt due at nine years from now. According to the bill the Secretary of the Treasury shall find what it would be worth to-day—we find what sum would to-day, if put at simple interest, at 3 per cent., amount to the debt due July 10, 1897.

From that amount he shall deduct the payments which have been made on bonds and interest account—those payments by compensation and by cash; then deduct the sinking fund in the Treasury and apply it, at its present value, as a credit on the debt.

Some one may say that sinking fund was appropriated by the law which created it to the first-mortgage bonds. That is partly true. It is appropriated first to the payment of the first-mortgage bonds, and thereafter to the United States as equity shall require. In other words, if the roads were to be sold out and there should not be a sufficient sum to pay the first-mortgage indebtedness, this sinking fund would have to be applied to make up the deficit. We take that sinking fund and apply it as a credit on the Government debt, but we make provision which relieves that legal question of any force whatever as to these first-mortgage bonds.

And I wish to call the attention of the House to a table found in the report of the committee, part of which was made up by the actuary of the Treasury—on page 15 of the report—showing just what the condition of the debt would be on that application of the bill. We find the indebtedness on July 1, 1888, would be $52,950,000. This, of course, is an approximate amount.

The bill provides the company shall issue its mortgage for this sum, and shall give its bonds for this sum, each of $1,000, payable within fifty years, at 3 per cent. semi-annual interest.

It provides this mortgage shall be a mortgage on every mile of road, aided or unaided, which belongs to the company. Not only that, but it shall be a mortgage on every mile of road either of these companies operates or leases, so far as that company has any interest. Everything is to be included in the mortgage which the company owns.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. The first-mortgage lien.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It can not be the first-mortgage lien, because there is a first mortgage before it upon almost all of the property, if not all.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. It is a second lien, then.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It is extended over all the miles of road, all the branch lines, all the operated lines, all the lien which can be given by the company.

Mr. DOCKERY. How many additional miles of the road?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Twenty-seven hundred and sixty-one miles additional in the branch lines and 385 miles of the main line.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Give the practical extent of the liens.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I will endeavor to give the extent of the liens which precede the lien the United States would have on these roads, if I have the time.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I would like to have the gentleman explain what the result would be to the Government if the recommendation of the minority of the commission should be followed by the House.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. If I have time I will do so with pleasure.

Mr. Speaker, understand, then, this mortgage is to cover all of the property, of every kind and of every nature whatever, all the interest the companies have, whether much or little.

What do we have now? We have a lien on the road, beginning at no great city and ending at no great city, but ending away out in the prairie.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to an interruption?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. No, I can not yield further.

Mr. Speaker, I want to emphasize that statement. We have now a lien on a road commencing half a mile or more beyond Kansas City and running out into the prairies 394 miles west, and no farther; not on the terminals in Kansas City. We have a lien on a road commencing at Omaha, 3 or 4 miles out, and running to a point 5 miles west of Ogden. We do not have the least claim on the terminals in Omaha nor in Denver. We do not have the least claim on any of the branch lines. We do not have the least claim on 385 miles of the main line beyond those which are subsidized. The Supreme Court has virtually said so. When we take this additional lien we take into our hands a system of roads. We have this now, only a lien on a piece of road beginning nowhere and ending nowhere, which, if the United States were compelled to take upon a failure of the company to pay its debts, under existing law, would not be salable. The stockholders of the present company would be in the most advantageous position as buyers. That is the suggestion in the minority commissioner's report; that is to say, that the stockholders might buy it in and realize something upon it; but they are the only people who could use it to advantage. The Government could not use it to advantage, or to such advantage at least as to realize anything upon it.

To return to a consideration of the bill. Under the mortgage the company shall issue its bonds to the Government. These bonds are to be paid, how? By the requirements of the bill they are to be paid in series, you may say. They are to be numbered from one up to a number which will include the whole amount. The requirements are that the company shall begin immediately to pay a certain per cent. of the bonds, the principal of them at the end of six months. The company is to pay for five years, at the end of each six months, one-tenth of 1 per cent. of the indebtedness, $52,900,000. At the end of this period of five years this payment is to be increased to one-half of 1 per cent., to continue for a period of five years also. The payment then is to be increased to seven-tenths of 1 per cent., to be paid each six months for the next ten years; at the end of the second period of ten years the company is to pay for twenty years 1 per cent. of the whole debt each six months, and at the end of that period for the remaining ten years it shall pay 2 per cent. of the amount of the debt as found due July 1, 1888.

There is a table in the report which was prepared in the committee, and I have one also which was prepared at the office of the Commissioner of Railroads, which shows that this system of payments absolutely obliterates the debt in fifty years. It shows that there is no question of doubt in regard to that fact and no difficulty about the figures. There is no necessity for any mysterious question arising about the figures. It is a plain demonstration of fact. There is a column showing the payments on account of interest. Each period is given. There is another column showing the amount paid on the principal, and the third shows the total payment, summing up altogether for all of these periods to which I have referred, $105,508,650, being the amount of the indebtedness, principal and interest, for the fifty years. The following table shows the first semi-annual payments for each of the periods given in the bill; and of course the annual payment for the same year would be twice the same, less the interest on that part of the principal paid in the first payment. The payments would diminish by this small sum until the end of the period, when an increase would be made as required, and as is shown in the table.

Date of the first payment in each year.	First semi-annual payment of interest in each period.	Semi-annual payment of principal, beginning of each period.	Total amount of each semi-annual payment at beginning of each period.
January 1, 1889	$794,250	$52,950	$847,200
1894	786,397	264,750	1,051,057
1899	746,595	370,650	1,117,245
1909	635,400	529,500	1,164,900
1929	317,700	1,059,000	1,376,700

The next table shows the total interest paid during each period given in the bill and the total principal paid during each period and the total amounts of both principal and interest in each period:

Periods.	Total interest paid during each period.	Total principal paid during each period.	Total amount, interest and principal, paid during each year.
First period:
January 1, 1889, to July 1, 1893	$7,684,750	$529,500	$8,214,250
January 1, 1894, to July 1, 1898	6,076,120	2,647,500	8,723,620
First period, 10 years	13,760,870	3,177,000	16,937,870
Second period, 10 years	13,835,500	7,413,000	21,248,500
Third period, 20 years	19,220,460	21,180,000	40,400,460
Fourth period, 10 years	3,240,850	21,180,000	24,420,850
Total, 50 years	50,057,680	52,950,000	103,007,680

It clearly appears that the whole amount which the Union Pacific Company will pay under the requirements of the bill, in addition to the present payment of the sum in the sinking fund, namely, $7,734,083, will be, as shown above, $103,007,680, or a total of $110,741,763.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I wish to ask a question in this very connection for information.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Very well; ask the question.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I wish to ask the gentleman what assurance he has that the railroad companies will live up to the provisions of this bill any more than they did to the provisions of the Thurman act?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. We have the assurance that the railroad companies are required to begin to pay large sums on the principal nine years before the debt is due. In the next place they are to place themselves in the hands of the Government under mortgage on all the property they own. There is in the bill a provision also that if they fail for ninety days in the payments during this whole period the entire indebtedness to the Government becomes due and the United States can take possession of all the property covered by the mortgage, can foreclose the mortgage upon everything the company owns and sell all they have. There are no such provisions in existing law. There is certainly some assurance in the large present and early payments which the Union Pacific Company shall pay.

It pays over $8,000,000 as a present payment by consenting to the appropriation of the sinking fund, and in the nine years before the indebtedness becomes due it pays over $22,000,000.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Do I understand the gentleman to say that they have already consented or agreed or signified their willingness to agree to carry out the provisions of this bill if it be passed by Congress?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I have not said anything of that kind, and am not authorized to say so.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I ask the gentleman if he has assurance that they will comply with these conditions?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. These companies have appeared before the commission and before the committee and declared their willingness, I will say to the gentleman, to accept and endeavor to carry out any legislation of Congress which is deemed reasonable and just and proper to secure the indebtedness of the Government under their present circumstances. This company has, through its president and other officials, virtually signified its assent to the requirements of the bill. It has declared its intention to endeavor to adopt any course which is deemed by Congress to be reasonable and proper for the purpose of securing the indebtedness of the Government and settling the whole matter.

But there is another provision which I said was of importance. The company is authorized to extend the provisions of the first mortgage, but upon conditions. What conditions? First, that it shall reduce the interest to 4 per cent.; second, that it shall not extend beyond the fifty years; third, that the first mortgage shall be of no greater amount than the principal of the original indebtedness; and fourth, that the mortgage shall not be extended to any other property than it now includes. This provision we think certainly assures the Government that there will be no danger of any claim being set up by any one for the $8,000,000 placed in the sinking fund. After the refunding no one can.

There is also a provision in the bill that if the company shall fail to pay the interest upon the first-mortgage bonds the United States may pay it, and, having paid it, become subrogated to the rights of the persons who owned that indebtedness. All the indebtedness of the United States, in that event, becomes due. By cutting down the interest on the first-mortgage bonds from 6 to 4 per cent. there is saved by the company 2 per cent. of that indebtedness, which would amount to about $660,000 which enters into this adjustment as a security of the Government. There is another provision in the bill which I think tends to secure the money to the Government, that the company shall declare no dividend unless the dividend shall have been earned in the year preceding the date at which it is declared, and then the dividend shall not exceed 4 per cent.

If the company shall have funds so earned in the preceding year sufficent to declare a dividend of more than 4 per cent., before the declaration of the dividend is made the company must divide that surplus or dividend fund into two equal parts, and pay one-half of it upon the indebtedness to the Government, and not upon the first bonds, but upon the last bonds to become due. Then the companies are virtually to pledge their earnings from the Government or any Department thereof, being compensation for carrying the mails, munitions of war, troops, etc., of the United States, not only over their aided lines, but over their unaided lines and all of their branch lines. They are to draw no compensation for such service until the installment required by this bill has been paid at the end of each six months.

The gentleman from Illinois asked me awhile ago what assurance we have that the company will accept this bill. I have given one statement to him as a reasonable business man why I think the company will accept the bill. I give another: We provide in the bill that if the company does not accept this measure it shall pay into the Treasury, under the provisions of the Thurman act, 75 per cent. of its net earnings. We extend that provision of the Thurman law over the Kansas Pacific as well. That provision of the law will then require of these companies at least $2,000,000 per annum.

If the Union Pacific Railway Company fails to accept the provisions of this bill it will be required to pay more than $2,000,000, which is more than the average payment under the bill. The average payment under the bill is $2,110,000. This 75 per cent. of the net earnings of the company will amount to nearly $2,500,000 annually. If the bill becomes a law it will be for the companies to accept it or to accept something worse for them. Another provision of the same section is that if the payments required under this section of the law fall below the average amount provided for in the bill, then a receiver shall be appointed to take charge of the company, and to pay the indebtedness according to the order of the liens.

There is not any question about this bill binding the company that accepts it. There is not any question about this bill providing a business-like way of securing this debt. There is not any question whatever but it will secure the debt and it will secure it in a reasonable time.

Mark you, the debt is not due for nine years. If the company enters into the payment according to the provisions of the bill, it will pay by application of the sinking fund about $8,000,000. It will pay on the principal in the nine years yet to run two and one-half millions of dollars. That makes ten and one-half millions. It will pay on interest over twelve and one-half millions of dollars. That makes nearly $23,000,000 to be paid before the debt becomes due.

If you have a creditor who comes in and pays you before his debt is due in such a manner as this, is it not fair, is it not equitable, is it not his right to have considered upon the question of extension as much time or as many years on the other side of the due point? If he begin nine years before the debt is due to pay it, should he not have nine years on the other side? And in the nine years on this side he pays over $22,000,000.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield to me again?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I am asking questions for information; if it interferes with the gentleman's line of argument I will not put them. But what I would like to know is this: If this sinking fund, which is set apart in the Thurman act, is to go in payment for the first-mortgage bonds, by what arrangement can you apply it for the payment of Government indebtedness under this bill?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I explained that some moments ago when the gentleman was talking to another gentleman.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I am glad to know that the gentleman has explained it. I will read his speech.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. You will find there is an explanation of how that question is disposed of.

Now as to the value of this security. There has been an engineer who has gone over the whole line and given his estimate of the security and the value of the system. The estimate has been given upon the cost of reproduction, and has also been given based upon a consideration of the net earnings of the road and of all those elements that enter into and make up the value of a system of railway.

Mr. LONG. Who is that engineer?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The engineer was a Mr. Morgan. I am not familiar with his reputation, but I have no doubt it was good or he would not have been chosen to such a position.

Mr. LONG. How was he chosen?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. He was chosen, I believe, by the commission. Mr. Morgan estimates the value of this system and the cost of reproduction. If you take the estimate he gives of the cost of reproduction of the system you will find that instead of having something with which to pay the Government debt when it becomes due, if it shall not be adjusted in some other manner, we have a very meager value applicable to that purpose. He gives the cost of the reproduction of the main line—that is, the subsidized portion of the Union Pacific, the portion of it on which the Government has its lien—as $27,857,500. He gives the cost of reproducing 394 miles of the Kansas Pacific—and that is all on which we have any lien—as $11,800,000. The total is $39,657,500. The first-mortgage indebtedness is $33,439,512; and that leaves the insignificant sum of $6,217,988 as a fund out of which the Government shall seek satisfaction for an indebtedness which will be, when due, over $60,000,000.

Mr. LONG. That is all you have now?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That is all we have any lien upon now.

Mr. DOCKERY. Now give us the unencumbered value.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Recently one of the railroad commissioners of Iowa, the original engineer of the Union Pacific road, has made an estimate of original cost of that line, which makes the total about $32,000,000, not sufficient to pay the first-mortgage indebtedness upon any sale. Taking the estimate of Mr. Morgan and the estimates made of the value of the roads as a producing property, it will be seen that the value as a producing property is very much greater than the value measured by the cost of reproduction—perhaps three times as large. It must be borne in mind that a railroad can be constructed through that country now for about one-half what this road cost, or what it ought to have cost—put it in either form you choose—at the time that it was constructed.

In Mr. Pattison's report we find the following table, which may well be considered in this connection:

	Cost of reproduction.	Valuation on basis of net earnings.	Liens prior to Government.	Margin for Government claim of $32,911,917 on basis of reproducing.	Margin for Government claim on basis of net earnings value for 1886.
Aided portion of Union Pacific Railway.....	$41,657,500	$102,000,000	$35,058,512	$6,598,988	$67,000,000
Unaided portion of Union Pacific Railway...	78,342,500	47,000,000	60,904,350	17,438,150	—13,900,000
	120,000,000	149,000,000	95,962,862	24,037,138	53,100,000

This statement as to liens prior to the Government is not sustained by the evidence, except as to the aided portion, and in that there seems to be a mistake of $2,000,000.

You see you must take the system together, because, although some of the branch lines may not be of any value in themselves, although they may be non-producing, or may even be debt-producing lines, yet they bring certain traffic to the main line which it would not otherwise have, and in that way they become of value.

I am now using the figures of Commissioner Pattison and his conclusions drawn from the testimony and from the estimate made by the engineer. The margin for the whole indebtedness is in the first instance—that is, as our lien now exists—six million dollars, and seventeen million dollars in addition may be gained by extending the lien. That is the case as its stands in its worst aspect. There is a table in the report to which I wish to call the attention of the House. It is open to criticism; I say that at the outset; it may be open to very serious criticism, and yet it is a fair way to present this subject. Let others draw their own conclusions if they choose; these are the conclusions that I think may fairly be drawn. Estimating by averaging the value of the unaided line from its cost of reproduction and from its earning capacity, we have a lien upon 1,430 miles only.

Taking that at $40,000 per mile, you have a valuation of $57,200,000. Taking the value of the unaided portion upon the same basis, we have an addition of $15,400,000. Everybody who has investigated the subject admits that the terminals, the large depots and shops, and the land which the road has at Omaha, at Kansas City, and at Denver are together worth $15,300,000, and that the Omaha bridge is worth $2,000,000; add the 2,761 miles of branch lines at $25,000 per mile, equals $69,000,000, and we have $158,900,000. This is the property which the engineer estimates could be reproduced for $120,000,000.

Then the companies have what they term land assets, unsold lands, and land contracts amounting to about $30,000,000. They have also stocks and bonds and various outside investments, which they claim cost them $20,000,000, but which are not worth more than half that amount, if so much. In making up your estimate you can put those assets in or leave them out, as you think best. I have put them in at $10,000,000, and these estimates give a total valuation for the Union Pacific system of $198,000,000.

Now, if you take the same figures, the same basis of valuation, you will find that upon the portion of the road on which the Government has a lien there would not be a sufficient amount to pay the indebtedness of the Government; there would be a deficit of about $29,000,000. Giving these valuations to the line of road upon which we have a lien, and taking the whole system upon which it is proposed that we shall have an additional lien if this adjustment is to be made, you have, to be deducted from this total valuation of $198,000,000, Union Pacific bonds valued at $49,575,000, including $4,423,000, collateral trust bonds secured by first mortgage or branch lines $5,975,000; Kansas Pacific Railroad bonds $26,813,927; Union Pacific Railroad Company, $4,858,000; branch line bonds afloat and stock afloat, $25,000,000, or a total of $106,346,927 to be deducted from the $198,600,000, leaving a value upon this estimate of $92,253,073 to secure the indebtedness of the Government.

The present value of the Government's indebtedness is about $53,000,000, which would leave about $39,000,000 of surplus; whereas taking the aided lines upon the same value we have a deficit of $29,000,000; in other words, the security is of more value to the Government than that which we now have to the extent of $68,000,000.

If you choose to adopt a lower valuation—if you say that this road ought not to be valued at $40,000 per mile, but only $30,000 per mile, nearly the same ratio will be observed throughout and the same result will be shown; that is, that the security we now have is not ample and the security we expect to get is ample.

The SPEAKER. The hour has expired.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. KILGORE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (H. R. 3508) for the relief of William G. Galloway, late captain Fifteenth, United States Army.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills. My object is to reach the Military Academy appropriation bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Inasmuch as the Committee on Military Affairs is anxious to take up now this bill, which is one of the regular appropriation bills, I wish to give notice that on Thursday next I shall ask the House to consider the homestead bill.

The motion of Mr. TOWNSHEND was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. BLOUNT in the chair.

Bills of the following titles, having been reached in their order on the Calendar, were, on motion of Mr. TOWNSHEND, by unanimous consent, passed over:

A bill (H. R. 5415) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889; and

A bill (H. R. 6833) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union proceeded to the consideration of the next bill, being the bill (H. R. 6894) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. There is no desire on the part of the committee to enter upon any general debate on this bill, as it is practically the same bill which was passed at the last session. I will therefore ask that the bill be now read by paragraphs for consideration under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The following was read:

For repairs and improvements, timber, planks, boards, joists, wall-strips, laths, shingles, slate, tin, sheet-lead, zinc, nails, screws, locks, hinges, glass, paints, turpentine, oils, varnish, brushes, stone, brick, flag, lime, cement, plaster, hair, sewer and drain pipe, blasting-powder, fuze, iron, steel, tools, mantels, and other similar materials, renewing roofs, and for pay of overseer and master builder and citizen mechanics and labor employed upon repairs and improvements that can not be done by enlisted men, $13,000.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to move the following amendment:

After the word "tools," in line 64, insert "machinery."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Printing: For printing and binding, type, materials for office, diplomas for graduates, annual registers, blanks, and monthly reports to parents and cadets, $1,000.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am instructed by the committee to move the following amendment:

After the word "office," in line 87, insert "including motor."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the department of modern languages: For stationery, text-books, books of reference for the use of instructors, and for printing examination papers, $200; office furniture for section-rooms, $150; in all $350.

Mr. TILLMAN. By instruction of the committee I offer the following amendment:

After "section-rooms," in line 107, insert "including type-writer."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For renewing furniture (desks and benches) in section-rooms, and repairing the same, $500.

Mr. TILLMAN. By direction of the committee I offer the following amendment:

In line 272 strike out the words "desks and benches."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For contingent funds, to be expended under the direction of the academic board; for instruments, books, repairs to apparatus, and other incidental expenses not otherwise provided for, $1,000.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to move to amend by inserting after the paragraph just read the following:

Provided, That all technical and scientific supplies shall be purchased by contract or otherwise, as the Secretary of War may deem best.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. TILLMAN. I move pro forma to amend by striking out the last word in the last paragraph. I make this motion for the purpose of submitting to the House a short explanation of the details of this bill. As chairman of the subcommittee charged with the preparation of the bill I did not make to the House any detailed written report, allowing the bill to speak for itself, and following the precedents which were set in the last and preceding Congresses.

Those members who have a copy of the bill before them will observe by turning to page 15 that the expenditures proposed in the bill are about $105,000 less than those provided for in the bill passed at the last session. However, about $130,000 of the appropriations of last year was for the erection of permanent buildings and quarters on the Academy grounds. The committee, after full conference with the Superintendent of the Academy and correspondence with several of the professors, and after consultation with the Secretary of War, deemed it advisable to insert about $25,000 more of appropriation than was made by the bill of last year. The first of the items which go to make up this amount is $2,858 for field musicians. This, Mr. Chairman, is really no increase of expenditure. Heretofore these field musicians were carried on the Army appropriation bill, but the Secretary of War has insisted that, as said musicians were used at the Military Academy, they should be paid for out of the Military Academy appropriation fund, and not be longer carried on the Army roll.

The next most important item is an appropriation of $3,000 for repairs of buildings. That item was inserted in consequence of the Superintendent telling the committee that many buildings on the grounds had not been re-covered in the last forty years, and that the roofs of some of them were leaking and badly needed repairs. They asked that $5,000 should be appropriated for that purpose. We have given them only $3,000 now, and allowed them to wait for the other $2,000 until next year.

The next item is one of fifteen hundred dollars. It is in the department of philosophy. Some years ago a railroad company was permitted to cut a tunnel through the Academy grounds, and in doing so went so near the observatory as practically to destroy it. It had, therefore, to be removed to another site at the expense of the railroad company, and in putting it up anew the professor of astronomy thinks it indispensable the Government should have erected there two collimating piers, in order that astronomical observations may be taken with more accuracy and facility than can now be done.

The following letter will explain the matter fully:

UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY,
West Point, February 6, 1888.

GENERAL: In explanation of the necessity of the appropriation applied for, for the construction of the collimating piers for the transit circle of the new observatory, I have the honor to say:

1. The transit room in the observatory building was originally constructed for the small transit instrument which had been in use in the old observatory for the past thirty years. Congress appropriated money several years ago for a transit circle, an instrument combining the functions of the mural circle and the transit, which is now mounted in the new observatory building. To use this valuable instrument with precision it must constantly be held in the meridian, and the piers necessary for this purpose must be erected north and south of the transit room. In the old observatory the transit was collimated by being directed on cross-marks cut on the mountains south and north of the observatory some 3 or 4 miles distant. Owing to the location of the new observatory these marks are no longer available, and a similar method of collimation is neither practicable nor desirable.

2. There is but a single officer on duty at the observatory, and having no assistants to aid him, all the labor must be done by himself. At every observation with the transit circle he has to make the adjustments, and the appropriation asked for is to enable him to accomplish the necessary preliminary work with facility and accuracy. If the appropriation be withheld another year, the use of this exceedingly valuable and important instrument is very much interfered with, and another application will have to be made next year. I am sure that a knowledge of the necessity and importance of this adjunct to the observatory on the part of Congress would result in favorable action. The appropriation asked for has been carefully considered and is the least amount that can be economically expended for the purpose.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

PETER S. MICHIE,
Professor of Philosophy.

General JOHN G. PARKE,
Superintendent United States Military Academy.

There are several smaller items, involving only a few hundred dollars, about which I will say nothing unless some gentleman desires to have any one of them explained. They are printed on pages 14 and 15 of the bill.

I will next comment briefly on two large items, one amounting to a little over $5,000 and the other to $6,150. The latter amount is intended to cover the expense of erecting a coal shed. It is a little singular, but the fact was vouched for by the Superintendent of the Academy, that they have not now and have never had any place to store coal in except such temporary sheds as could be devised for that purpose. The committee thought it a legitimate appropriation to insert in the bill.

The other item of about $5,000 is for a cadet laundry. It was recommended to the committee as necessary for washing machines and ironing machines and other machinery needed in the laundry. From the representations made the committee thought the additional laundry facilities ought to be provided, and accordingly have an appropriation for it.

Having completed what I had to say, if no gentleman desires further explanation in reference to the items covered by the bill, I will withdraw the pro forma amendment and move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLOUNT reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6894) making an appropriation for the United States Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, in which concurrence was requested.

The amendments were agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and also move to lay that motion on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

APPROVAL OF BILLS.

A message was received from the President, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announcing approval of the following bills and joint resolution:

An act (H. R. 2457) to increase the pension of Hubert M. Potter;

An act (H. R. 221) increasing the pension of John C. Johnston;

An act (H. R. 2467) to amend chapter 191 of the private acts of the Forty-ninth Congress, passed at the second session thereof, concerning James H. Young;

An act (H. R. 363) granting a pension to Mrs. Eliza L. Mace;

An act (H. R. 365) granting a pension to John Humes;

An act (H. R. 880) granting a pension to Mary Everingham Brown;

An act (H. R. 440) granting a pension to Mary C. Knight;

An act (H. R. 5617) to provide for the leasing of premises for the Washington City post-office;

An act (H. R. 120) for the relief of Charlotte Caroline Hackleman; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 117) to enable the Secretary of the Interior to utilize the hot water now running to waste on the permanent reservation at Hot Springs, Ark., and for other purposes.

ACTUAL SETTLERS ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 7901) to secure to actual settlers the public lands adapted to agriculture, to protect the forests on the public domain, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, on some accounts it will be desirable that there should be a more extended discussion and possibly a further explanation of the pending bill; but the time of the House is becoming very valuable. This bill has been pending for a month, and its provisions are no doubt well understood by the members.

I ask unanimous consent, therefore, there being quite a large number of amendments pending, and it being understood that discussion to the extent of fifteen minutes for and against may be had on each if desired, that general debate be dispensed with, and that the amendments be taken up and considered in the order in which they will appear in the bill if adopted; that is, in the order of the sections of the bill.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, let me make a parliamentary inquiry. On the last legislative day, when this bill was up for consideration, as I remember, unanimous consent was given and an order entered by which amendments were to be voted upon in the order in which they were presented. I desire now to ask if that order is in force?

The SPEAKER. That is the order made by the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. And I have requested that it be reversed.

Mr. PAYSON. I desire to suggest that, perhaps, it would be better to ask unanimous consent that the amendments be presented and voted upon in the order in which they would apply to the sections of the bill.

The SPEAKER. That is the gentleman's request, which the Chair will again submit to the House.

There being no objection, the amendments were ordered to be considered and voted upon in the order as suggested.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now report the first amendment.

The Clerk read as follows: Amendment proposed by Mr. CUTCHEON:

Insert in line 3, section 1, after the words "United States," the following: "Now belonging to the public domain, or which may hereafter be restored to the public domain, or lands heretofore granted to any State or corporation for the purpose of aiding in the construction of any railroad or other public improvement."

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, it occurs to me that the gentleman from Michigan can abbreviate that amendment very materially by making it apply to those lands now belonging to the public domain or which may be hereafter added to the public domain. Would not that be sufficient to cover the point to which he wishes to apply the amendment?

Mr. CUTCHEON. If the gentleman from Indiana will allow me a moment, the object of the amendment is simply this: This bill speaks in the present tense. A very large amount of land is now segregated from the public domain and held in abeyance for the promotion of railroads and other internal improvements. My amendment, offered out of abundance of caution, is that when these lands, or any of them, shall be restored to the public domain at any future time, they shall at once come under the operation of this bill. That is all. It may not be necessary, but it can do no harm to adopt it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection whatever to the object sought to be accomplished, and only suggested that I thought the amendment could be abbreviated somewhat. Perhaps the gentleman would be willing to insert after the words "United States" the words:

Now belonging to the public domain, or which may hereafter be added to the public domain.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I have no objection to that form, and modify the amendment accordingly.

The amendment as modified was adopted.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Can amendments still be offered to the bill?

The SPEAKER. Under the order of the House, amendments were sent up on the day when this bill was up for consideration, to be printed in the RECORD; but of course until the previons question is ordered, which would cut off all amendments except those pending at the time, other amendments would be in order in their proper time and place.

The Clerk will report the next amendment, offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 1 by adding after the words "United States," in line 3, the words "including No Man's Land, or the neutral strip lying immediately south of Western Kansas and Eastern Colorado."

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest to the gentleman from Kansas that that would be covered by the amendment just adopted.

Mr. PETERS. I think, sir, that it is covered by the amendment that has been made. My object in offering that was to provide that there should be no question as to this strip of land that has been apparently outside of the United States. But I think the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan virtually covers the purpose I had desired to accomplish, and hence I withdraw the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JACKSON:

Amend section 2 by inserting in line 3, after the word "nickel," the words "fire-clay;" making it read:

"That all public lands, chiefly valuable for mineral deposits, namely, iron, coal, gold, silver, cinnabar, lead, copper, nickel, fire-clay and tin;" etc.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker, I do not know to what extent the public lands of the United States may be valuable in this direction, but in my section of the country this is quite an important and valuable mineral deposit. I do not understand either that it is a mineral of very general distribution throughout the country; and I can well see how a deposit of this mineral substance now becoming so valuable, the manufacture of which is very extensive, and it is an extensive article of commerce, may become quite an important item in our public-land system to the extent that in a new part of the country the securing of land holding such a deposit under the operation of the homestead or other laws may be detrimental to the best interests of the community. The amendment is simply to add that one additional article to the enumeration embodied in the bill.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that amendment ought to be adopted. I know it is the case in my country that we have some deposits of fire-clay upon lands that are agricultural lands. It seems to me that certainly ought not to be adopted unless there is some good reason given to sustain it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to say but a word upon this point. It will be seen by an examination of the bill that the subject of mineral lands and all other subjects in the bill are made subordinate to the great principle of the homestead law, and it was not the opinion of the committee, I think, that the subject of fire-clay was of sufficient importance to take that plan out of the operation of the homestead provisions incorporated in the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. JACKSON].

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the following amendment, offered by Mr. MACDONALD:

Strike out the word "contiguous," in third line of section 2, and insert the same in line 4, after the word "in" and before "legal."

Mr. MACDONALD. That is merely a verbal amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following amendment, offered by Mr. SMITH, of Wisconsin:

Amend section 2 by striking out the word "coal," in said section, and all of the section after the word "provided," in the seventh line, and add at the end of the section:

"The title of all coal lands or any coal that may exist in the public lands shall from and after the passage of this act remain in the United States; but such lands shall be subject to a lease to any person, persons, or corporation at a price not less than 25 cents per net ton of 2,000 pounds, and such leases shall not exceed a term of ten years."

Mr. SMITH, of Wisconsin. I withdraw that amendment, and offer another in lieu of it, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all of the section after the word "provided" and inserting as follows:

"Provided, however, That all deposits of coal or iron on the lands of the United States are hereby reserved to the United States, and no future grant or patent from the United States shall be held to include such deposits: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent the owner of any land acquired subject to the exceptions and reservations of this section from using such deposits for his own private use: And provided further, That neither the right of the Government of the United States to control and regulate the use and disposition of such deposits and working thereof, nor the right of said Government to enter upon the lands containing such deposits, either by its officers, agents, or lessees, shall ever be questioned, and the provisions of this section shall be expressed in all grants and patents for lands hereafter disposed of by the United States."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. PAYSON. I think some explanation ought to be given of that amendment. It works a very radical change in the title, as well as the right of settlers to iron and coal deposits hereafter.

Mr. SMITH, of Wisconsin. In answer to the gentleman from Illinois, I will state the object of the amendment is to reserve the title of coal and iron in the people. We have lately seen a spectacle in the Reading investigations that causes everybody to stagger at the audacity of the gentlemen who now control this product of nature that comes home to every man's household. My amendment is to the effect that the title thereof shall never be parted with by the Government; and that at any time whenever it is necessary for the welfare of the people the Government can step in and regulate its production, distribution, and compel its disposition at humane rates. One of the great economic questions of the day for two-thirds of the people of this country is fuel, and not only is this so for private use, but wherever steam is used to propel machinery and for other purposes it is of great import. Again, in our prairie States and Territories the question of fuel ranks next to bread.

Mr. HOLMAN. The purpose had in view by this proposed amendment undoubtedly is very desirable if practicable, inasmuch as the monopoly of the iron and coal lands is calculated to be a great evil. But as the vast body of the coal lands in this country are unsuitable for agriculture, it would seem to be almost entirely impracticable, with the present knowledge we have of our public lands and their quality, to make a provision of this kind unless you are willing to withdraw all lands adapted to agriculture as well as other lands from the market. And as the purpose of this bill is to secure the lands that are adapted to agriculture or may be made adapted to agriculture to homestead settlers, that mode of diffusing that form of public wealth is about as beneficial and effectual as any that can be resorted to.

It is impossible for a government of our extent to go into such details. The Government has never sought to adopt any such policy. Our gold and silver mines have been sold at nominal prices. From the beginning we have never attempted to adopt what has been the policy in some other countries, of the Government holding the mines and seeking to make a profit from the operations of mining. And I do not believe we would find it a very practicable method of dealing with our public lands now.

Mr. WEAVER. It can not be denied but that we are face to face in this country with a very serious problem—the question of fuel supply. The large cities, and in fact the whole country, is at the mercy of a few coal barons, who are as void of mercy as midwinter is of warmth. We will have in the year 1910 in this country one hundred and twenty millions of people, it is estimated, and it does seem to me to be the proper thing to do now, in dealing with the remnant of the public domain, to make some provision or include some reservations that will give the Government the power hereafter to control the disposition of our great coal-beds.

Suppose this had been the policy from the commencement. Suppose such a reservation had been made of the great coal-fields of Pennsylvania, the spectacle which was recently presented in the Reading coal region never could have occurred, for the power would have remained in the Government to interpose and prevent it. We may lease the lands if that is thought to be the best method, but I quite agree with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that it is not the province of a great government like ours to enter into the business of leasing mines or mineral lands. The reservation of the sovereign power to control is the main thing in this amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SMITH]. It wisely reserves the coal and the iron deposits, and reserves to the Government the right to enter at any time and control them.

It in effect provides that the consumer shall not be imposed upon, and also that the product shall be disposed of under proper regulations. It seems to me to be a wise and humane amendment, and one which ought to be adopted. The experience that we have passed through thus far in the history of our country demonstrates the wisdom of some such provision. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. SMITH, of Wisconsin. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to express the earnest belief that this amendment should be adopted. The experience of the Eastern States in the matter of coal lands, and more particularly in connection with the anthracite coal-fields, shows clearly that the usual rule is for such lands to be held at any time by but few individuals and ultimately by a few powerful railroad corporations. The same experience will be had in the West unless provision is made against it. This amendment will, if adopted, apply only to coal lands which have not yet been taken by individuals.

So far as such lands have been taken in the West, they have been taken, as a rule, either directly by the railroad companies or else by them indirectly through other corporations, in which the members of the railroad companies or their favored friends are corporators. So that up to this time in the settlement of the new country, wherever coal-fields are known to exist they have been taken and are controlled either directly or indirectly by the railroad companies. Certainly this indisputable fact only needs to be understood to enable every person to see that when the West is settled as densely as is the East to-day, or even less densely, the experience of the East will be repeated there.

I understand the gentleman in charge of the bill [Mr. HOLMAN] to say that as to coal and iron lands it was not deemed expedient by the Committee on Public Lands to make such provision as is proposed in this amendment, and yet the committee have made an exactly analogous provision as to timber lands. This bill as submitted by his committee does not give the title of timber lands to a purchaser. It simply gives to any one who may obtain a timber claim upon a particular tract of such land the right to cut the timber, but the title to the land itself, as I understand the bill, still continues and remains in the Government. That being the case, I can see no inconsistency whatever between that provision as to timber land and this proposed amendment as to coal land; but, on the other hand, I can see a very great necessity why, in seeking to secure to the people the benefit of the public domain, and to secure for the hundreds of millions who will inhabit this continent in the near future the benefit of cheap fuel, there should be some such policy adopted as is contemplated in the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

If gentlemen will cast their eyes forward fifty, forty, thirty, or even twenty years, they must see that by that time under the present system the great corporations will have absolute control over the coal lands of the West, and with that prospect in view I am sure they will see the very great propriety, the very great wisdom, and very urgent and universal necessity that we should, by our legislation to-day, provide some protection for the people in the future by the adoption of the amendment now before us.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this amendment be left pending, and that we proceed with the consideration of the remainder of the bill. It must be admitted that this is a very important proposition. Whether the House will find it practicable to adopt a measure which will accomplish the object in view is to my mind still doubtful; but the subject is certainly worthy of careful consideration, and I therefore ask unanimous consent that it be passed over for the present, while we proceed with the bill.

Mr. PAYSON. I think we may as well dispose of this now.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] object to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. PAYSON. I do not care to object, but if I may make a suggestion to the chairman of the committee, I think we may as well conclude the consideration of this proposition now.

Mr. WEAVER. I wish the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] would consent to let it be passed over for the present, because other gentlemen desire to speak upon it.

Mr. PAYSON. Very well, then. I will not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois, that this amendment be passed over for the present?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. FELTON. I desire to offer an amendment, to insert, after the word "tin," in line 3, section 2, the words "or other valuable mineral deposits."

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope so broad a proposition as that will not be adopted.

Mr. MCRAE. I concur with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] in hoping that this amendment will not be adopted. If the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. FELTON] is not able to specify by name the deposits which he wishes to have protected, he ought not to expect an honest, hard-working farmer, who knows nothing about minerals and mineral ores, to know whether the special mineral which the gentleman may have in view exists on a particular tract of land or not.

Mr. FELTON. I have no desire to interfere with the rights of the "honest farmer" or any other honest man. But in looking over this bill I observed that the committee had seen fit to change the corresponding section of the existing law by omitting these words, and I was unable to find in the bill any provision with reference to a certain class of deposits which are valuable, including oil, salt, sulphur, borax, and minerals of that kind which may be in deposit on these lands. Such provision is contained in the existing law; and I desire to know from the chairman of the committee whether it was omitted in this bill intentionally or for any good reason?

Mr. HOLMAN. It was omitted intentionally.

Mr. FELTON. I would like to hear the reason.

Mr. HOLMAN. The object of the committee was to restrict the term "mineral lands" as much as would be entirely safe. Mineral lands, after all, are sold at a nominal price; and the purpose of the committee in framing this bill has been to make the homestead feature the controlling feature. We have, therefore, simply excepted coal, iron, gold, silver, nickel, copper, and tin. As to all other minerals we propose to let them go with the land.

The homestead principle is, after all, the best and most effectual method we have ever adopted for diffusing the public wealth. It accomplishes the object much better than it could be accomplished under a mineral law. For these reasons, and perhaps many others, it was thought best to restrict the term "mineral lands" to lands containing the mineral deposits named. The present law, which enumerates all valuable mineral deposits, has, in many instances, created great uncertainty as to the rights of citizens who have undertaken to purchase homes.

Mr. FELTON. The gentleman is aware that under the existing law lands containing these minerals are sold at $5 per acre.

Mr. HOLMAN. Five dollars and $2.50 per acre.

Mr. FELTON. Five dollars is the price of the class I speak of.

Mr. HOLMAN. As to lode mines the price is $5, and placer mines $2.50.

Mr. FELTON. Mr. Speaker, there is no comparison in value between an acre of land containing these mineral deposits and an acre of arable land; and the question is whether in this disposition to diffuse the magnificent charities of the Government which are bestowed upon any man, though he may only yesterday have declared his intention to became a citizen, we shall give away at a nominal price lands which may be worth vastly more. Having called the attention of the House to this point, it is immaterial to me personally how the question may be decided.

Mr. HOLMAN. On that point I wish to say a single word. The committee has sought to eliminate from this bill the idea of making the public lands the source of profit, except as to lands which clearly ought not to be denominated agricultural lands. The whole idea of deriving revenue from the public lands adapted to agriculture is in this bill abandoned. The main object of the measure, I repeat, is to secure homes for our people.

Mr. FELTON. This is a very wide departure from the principles on which the Government has thus far disposed of the public lands—a very wide departure.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. FELTON. And it seems to me an unwise one. Undoubtedly the bill will be a great advantage to any one who, under its provisions, may obtain land at a nominal price per acre and discover upon it valuable mineral deposits. But in my opinion the Government in such a case should be well reimbursed for the land which it parts with. If the gentleman proposes to allow this class of lands to be taken up as homesteads, he ought, in justice to the general Treasury, in justice to the whole people, to put a price on the land commensurate with its value.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the gentleman refer to farming lands?

Mr. FELTON. No, sir; these lands containing mineral deposits, which are now sold at $5 an acre. In this bill you propose that they shall be sold at $1.25 an acre.

Mr. HOLMAN. As I have said, $2.50 per acre is now the charge for placer-mining claims, and $5 an acre for lode mines. But is it not far better in disposing of the public wealth to look mainly at the idea of securing homes for our people rather than to opening up portions of those lands for speculation? You can not adopt any system by which you can prevent mining claims from being accumulated to an almost unlimited extent in the hands of a few persons; and the wealth that the Government might derive from them is a matter of no great moment in comparison with the other purpose, that of securing homesteads for our people. The homestead idea, as I have said, has been the leading one in the framing of this bill.

Mr. MORROW. How can a person obtain title under the homestead laws to these lands containing valuable mineral deposits? Take, for instance, the fields containing borax, located almost in a desert, where people go simply for the purpose of taking out the mineral deposits, not with any view to residence or settlement, the country being too inhospitable. How can a person obtain title to borax lands under the homestead law?

Mr. HOLMAN. I suppose these lands would be classed as desert lands, and would come under the provisions with reference to such lands.

Mr. MORROW. Does the gentleman mean they would have to be taken up by bringing water upon them?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORROW. No, sir; the borax lands are taken up by simply going upon them and taking out the borax.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not sufficiently familiar with the subject of the borax lands to say anything about them; but if the gentleman thinks that borax lands especially should be excepted, I have no objection, so far as I am concerned, to an amendment of that kind, because it is a subject that I do not know anything about.

Mr. FELTON. That is the difficulty.

Mr. MORROW. I think such an amendment is very important.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the land is valueless for agriculture and has value as mineral land, I think the exception ought to be made.

Mr. FELTON. Lands containing these mineral deposits are in many cases utterly valueless for any purpose whatever except the taking out of those deposits. Where such deposits are found the country is frequently a desert for miles around, there not being a blade of grass or a particle of timber to be found.

Mr. HOLMAN. What mineral deposits would the gentleman name as desirable to be excepted?

Mr. MORROW. Borax, for one.

Mr. FELTON. Cinnabar and sulphur.

Mr. HOLMAN. Cinnabar is already in.

Mr. FELTON. And coal-oil.

Mr. HOLMAN. Coal-oil is found in various places throughout the country.

Mr. FELTON. There are petroleum lands in our part of the country which are good for nothing else.

Mr. HOLMAN. If it be desired that land containing deposits of borax shall be reserved—if gentlemen think that necessary—I shall have no objection to such an amendment, although I have no authority to express the views of the committee on the subject.

Mr. SYMES. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a word in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from California. I concur in what has been said by the distinguished chairman of the committee [Mr. HOLMAN] as to the desirability of preserving the public lands, as far as possible, for homestead settlement. I am only surprised, Mr. Speaker, so many years have passed in this House and these gentleman, who have had this matter in charge, have not before provided for saving the lands for actual settlers.

Now, what I desire to say in regard to this amendment is this: I would not, for one, favor it if I thought it would take away from any agriculturist or actual settler any homestead which it was practical for him to locate and live upon anywhere in this country. But we all know that the different character of minerals mentioned in the amendments of my friend from California [Mr. FELTON]——

Mr. TAULBEE. I rise to a point of order. It is impossible to hear what is going on in the House.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen will resume their seats, and the gentleman from Colorado will proceed.

Mr. SYMES. I might raise my voice so as to be heard in every portion of the House, but I do not desire to subject myself to the ridicule of gentlemen in the gallery by unnecessarily doing so.

Now, let me say that the public lands containing the different character of minerals which have been indicated in the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. FELTON], and also in the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW], are, as is known to everybody familiar with the parts of country where they are to be found, absolutely worth nothing for agricultural purposes. If the gentleman will only agree to insert they shall be excepted only where the lands can not be used or utilized by homestead settlers I would not object. If they could be used or utilized by actual settlers for agricultural purposes I would be entirely willing to leave the amendment out. If these lands could be occupied by homestead settlers for agricultural purposes, and they could live on them, and by boring into the earth should happen to strike a deposit of any of the minerals referred to and in that way secure a fortune, I should be glad of it.

But what I desire, Mr. Speaker, to impress on the House is the necessity of making some provision in reference to lands containing valuable mineral deposits, and which can not be utilized for agricultural purposes by which the Government may sell them and derive some revenue from them. I therefore hope the amendment will be adopted including these mineral lands which are indicated by the amendment, and bring them within the operation of this bill and allow them to be disposed of as other mineral lands are now disposed of under the general law.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would like to have my friend from Colorado indicate the minerals he would include. I believe the general law is too broad, and that the homestead settler should know exactly and precisely what lands are classified as mineral lands.

Mr. SYMES. It is exceedingly difficult, Mr. Speaker, to make the designation asked for by the gentleman from Indiana. There are deposits of petroleum, deposits of borax, deposits of salt and soda, and other deposits which I could indicate, but I would not undertake to include them all and properly classify them on the spur of the moment. This is legislation of too important a character not to consider it with care and have every provision indicated with accuracy.

I would except all lands containing valuable mineral deposits; that is, all lands which are more valuable for their mineral deposits than they are for agricultural purposes. If that amendment were included in the bill I do not think there would be any objection to it, but that, on the contrary, it would be explicit and satisfactory.

Now, let me say that where these mineral lands are found there will necessarily arise conflicts, and the conflicts will be all the greater where these mineral deposits are found to increase in value. Some conflicts are inevitable in the nature of things.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does it not make the uncertainty still greater by adopting general terms?

Mr. SYMES. No; I think not. If I thought there were any agricultural lands which actual settlers would be deprived of I would not agree to any such amendment, for I am as deeply interested in the welfare of the actual settlers as the gentleman from Indiana or any other member can be.

Mr. FELTON'S amendment and Mr. MORROW'S amendment were again read.

Mr. FELTON. If soda and petroleum could be added to the amendment of my colleague I would like to accept it as a modification of mine.

The question recurred on Mr. FELTON'S amendment.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 53, noes 37.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PAYSON. Since the amendment of the gentleman from California has been adopted it seems to me that the specification of all the minerals named in lines 2 and 3 ought to be stricken out, for it is scarcely necessary to retain them. I move, therefore, to strike out of lines 2 and 3 all after the word "deposits," in line 2, down to the word "and," in line 3.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope my friend will not insist upon pressing that amendment. It does no harm as it is, and upon further reflection it may be found desirable to make these more specific by additional amendments hereafter.

Mr. PAYSON. But the language of the amendment of the gentleman from California specifies all mineral deposits. Why, then, is it necessary to retain the specific names of these minerals? The term used in his amendment would cover all.

Mr. PETERS. The reason why that should be retained is because it would have an effect upon the construction of the language put in by the gentleman from California.

The SPEAKER. The language of the amendment is "mineral or other deposits."

Mr. PAYSON. If it tends to any embarrassment I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. FELTON. It is precisely the language of the statute as it now exists.

Mr. PAYSON. Very well; I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk read the next amendment, proposed by Mr. FELTON, as follows:

Strike out the words "or who has filed his declaration of intention to become such, as required by the naturalization laws," where they occur in lines 5 and 6, on page 2; lines 5, 6, and 7, on page 8; and lines 7, 8, and 9, on page 12.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I wish to inquire of the gentleman in charge of the bill whether, consent having been given, action should not be taken upon the amendment in regard to coal lands offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin, and, as this section 3 applies to these lands, whether he would not consent that the amendments now pending and one other that I shall offer myself may be passed over for the present and be considered hereafter.

Mr. FELTON. That is satisfactory to me.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think we had better take a vote upon the amendments in their order.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order on so much of this amendment just read as does not apply to the third section of the bill. Under the order of the House these amendments are to be considered in the order in which they apply to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. NELSON. I now desire to discuss the pending question. I ask the attention of the House for a moment, and shall briefly call its attention to the character of that amendment, which, as I understand it, relates to lines 5 and 6 of the third section of the bill. Under existing laws there are two entries, if I may use the expression, in reference to homestead settlements, the first being the preliminary entry made at the land office.

Under the law as it now exists and has existed for years native-born citizens or those who have declared their intention to become citizens of the United States have always been held competent to make the preliminary entry; but the final entry, made after the expiration of the five years of settlement, when the final proof is made and the man appears at the land office and says tha the has complied with the law—in that case, before he can make this final entry and obtain his title, he must be a fully naturalized citizen of the United States.

Mr. MCRAE. Let me interrupt the gentleman to say that section 3 provides for the sale of the lands at once, and there is no five years about it. He purchases the lands and takes the title at once.

Mr. NELSON. I understand that under the pre-emption law and under the cash-entry law, which existed for years, all persons who had declared their intention to become citizens of the United States have always been competent to make these entries; that is to say, the pre-emption and cash entries.

Now, I do not know what you people in the older States may think of this matter, but I have lived and grown up in two of the Western States. I have seen Wisconsin and Minnesota grow up from the wilderness by the aid of a laborious and extensive class of foreign emigrants who have settled in those States. They came to this country and declared their intention to become citizens of the United States, and have become good law-abiding citizens. They have occupied lands under the pre-emption and cash-entry laws, have improved them, have built up the country, and are amongst our best and most law-abiding citizens. I am sick and out of patience with that maudlin sentiment which has grown up in this country since a few anarchists made that little raid in Chicago.

Gentlemen ought to remember that the very policemen who were shot down and killed by these people during that riot were foreign-born themselves, and the very sheriff who put the rope around the necks and hung the anarchists in Chicago was a foreigner, who came over to this country on the same ship with myself. [Applause.] I repeat that I am tired and sick of this maudlin sentiment that would attach such odium to a large class of our best citizens and revolutionize our land laws, simply because a few crazy anarchists in Chicago took the course they did; and, Mr. Speaker, why did they take it? I will tell you the reason. Chicago had something worse than the anarchists themselves. It had Carter Harrison [laughter and applause], who had nursed them for years here, and got them to believe that they had come to this country to do anything under the sun except pay attention and be respectful to the flag of the United States.

We had better incorporate into the land laws that men like Carter Harrison should have no business in this country. This country needs that legislation more than protection against foreigners who come here and go into that wild western region and settle up the whole country, build up its improvements, and make it as good and valuable as any country in the United States.

I have lived in Minnesota since 1871, and have watched our foreign immigration into that State. Our public-school system is as good as any that is operating in this country to-day. It depends and has depended for its success on the energy, intelligence, and good-will of these people in the respective school districts.

I have gone into school districts in that State in which there is not a native-born citizen, and they have as good a set of common schools there as you have away down in your boasted New England. And these are the men you are to legislate against under this morbid system which has grown up since this matter at Chicago.

The bonanza nabobs, in their anxiety to get the "blarsted" Englishmen to sink their money in their mines and mining stock out West, have this session secured legislation in order that Englishmen may get into their big bonanza stock offices. They are perfectly willing that the Englishmen shall have a sink-hole in America in which to deposit their English guineas; but when poor fellows want a piece of land to cultivate you must refuse them and put a black mark on their foreheads! This country has grown in twenty-five years as no country under the sun has grown. And it is not the tariff that has caused this. It is the throwing open of our great free public lands and the great immigration which has been the agent that has built up this country, and not your tariff taxes. [Applause.]

Mr. TAULBEE. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Minnesota be extended.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has not expired.

Mr. NELSON. I do not desire to occupy the attention of the House any further. I have not been in the habit of taking much time in the discussion of public questions, but I have taken some interest in them. Under the very laws which these modern reformers propose to enact I would have been an outcast. In the year 1849 there was a poor widow and her boy six years old who landed at Castle Garden, and if these new rules of the modern reformers had been then in force we would have been shipped back, mother and I, to the country from which we had come. I do not know that we have done a great deal of good, but certainly we have not been dangerous people to this country.

Mr. Speaker, with these old laws and these old landmarks that we have had for the last forty years under the old pre-emption law from 1841 to the present day the country has grown and prospered. The best part of the foreign element consisted of those who went out West and entered the public lands under those laws. You have got the poorer class of the foreign element in the East, and are welcome to them. But give us our land laws as we have had them, and we will continue in the future as we have in the past, and get the best class of foreigners, and with them we can survive even a Carter Harrison or a high-tariff tax. [Laughter and applause.]

The question being taken on the amendment, it was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The next amendment, offered by Mr. SMITH, of Wisconsin, was read, as follows:

Amend section 3, in line 9, by striking out the words "or coal."

Mr. SMITH, of Wisconsin. I withdraw that amendment. Let it go with the other.

Mr. LIND. I desire to offer an amendment to the third section, to be added at the end of it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed first with the amendments already pending to this section:

The next amendment, offered by Mr. NUTTING, was read, as follows:

Strike out the words "or who has declared his intention to become such," in lines 5 and 6, page 2.

Mr. MCRAE. I make the point of order that that has already been voted upon.

The SPEAKER. This is the same amendment which has just been voted upon. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The next amendment, offered by Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, was as follows:

Amend by striking out the words, in lines 6 and 7 of section 3, "or any association of persons severally qualified as above;" and in lines 12 and 13 of section 3 the words "or 320 acres to such association."

Mr. HOLMAN. The Committee on Public Lands recommend that this should be adopted.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana to the fact that there is now pending an amendment relating to coal lands, offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SMITH]. I ask that this amendment be considered in connection with that of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the following amendment, offered by Mr. LIND:

Add to section 3 the following:

"Provided, however, That Congress shall always have, and does hereby reserve, the power to regulate, by laws general in their provisions, the management and conduct of the business of mining coal on any of the lands entered under this act, and also the right to prevent any person or corporation engaged in operating or mining on such lands from charging an unreasonable price for the production thereof."

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that that amendment be passed over, to be considered with the others which have been passed over.

There was no objection.

Mr. PAYSON. I offer an amendment which has been agreed to by the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of section 3 add, "but no patent shall issue except to a citizen of the United States."

Mr. WEAVER. I understood the whole section was passed over.

The SPEAKER. Some amendments were passed over, but not the section.

Mr. NELSON. I make the point of order that the substance of that amendment has been acted on.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the other amendment related to the entry, while this relates to the issue of the patent.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Let the amendment be again read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to say a word in reference to this amendment. A prior amendment referring to an entry made at the time has just been voted down. It is not an entry that presupposes any immediate settlement or cultivation.

It is made "immediate" at the land office, and the duplicate receipt is issued thereon. The House by its vote has said that it will allow not only citizens of the United States, but those who have declared their intention to become such, to enter these lands. The act is consummated when they go to the land office and make their entry and the duplicate receipt is issued. The local land officers make the return to the General Land Office, and, in the dilatory manner in which entries have been disposed of lately, it takes about two years; but we hope that under the new Secretary of the Interior it can be done inside of a year. In due course of proceeding at the Land Office the patent will issue. A man can declare his intention after he has been here six months and make his entry, and in the course of a year the Land Office is ready to issue the patent; but a man can not become a full citizen until he has been here five years, and the result of this amendment would be that he would have to wait five years before he could get his patent.

Mr. STRUBLE. Would not his land during that period remain untaxed?

Mr. NELSON. The general rule and the practice in the West is that whenever an entry is made at the land office, and before the patent is issued, the lands are assessed and taxed.

Mr. RYAN. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. DORSEY. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] is right. That is the law of our State.

Mr. NELSON. As soon as the entry is made the land is taxable. Now you would keep a man's entry hanging between heaven and earth, which would be very unjust to him, and I think it would have been much more consistent to have adopted the amendment which I opposed awhile ago.

Mr. STRUBLE. In case of a homestead entry, does not the land remain untaxable?

Mr. DORSEY. Yes, a homestead entry does.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, I submit to the judgment of this House that this amendment should receive its approval. We are providing by this bill for the easy and cheap acquisition of the most valuable portions of the public lands, namely, those containing deposits of iron and coal, and I submit, sir, that we ought to provide in the statutes of the United States that no man may acquire 160 acres of coal or iron lands in this Union unless he will swear to support the Constitution and the laws thereof. In other words, whether it is a sentimental view or not, that no foreigner, by simply declaring his intention to become a citizen, an act which imposes upon him no obligation whatever, shall be allowed under the provisions of this bill to acquire a valuable portion of the public lands for a nominal consideration—that he shall not be allowed to acquire these lands unless he has assumed the duties and burdens of citizenship. That is my doctrine. If it is sentimental, it is the kind of sentiment that ought to appeal to the judgment of the Representatives of the American people in Congress assembled.

Further than that, let me say that no enactment has been passed here for a long time that has so commended itself to the judgment of the people all over the land as the bill passed in the last Congress prohibiting aliens from acquiring title to any land wherever the flag floats. This amendment ought to be adopted. It does not touch the idea which the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] has discussed here, that people coming from abroad who desire to settle upon homesteads, farm-lands, here and there, should have an opportunity of acquiring their homesteads while their citizenship is maturing under the general law. This applies only to coal and iron lands, and I submit again—and the submission of the proposition is the strongest argument which can be made for it—that no man should be allowed to acquire title to these mineral deposits unless he assumes the burdens as well as the privileges of citizenship.

Mr. LIND. Mr. Speaker, there is a practical question presented here which I believe the House ought to take into consideration before it votes upon this proposition. We all understand, as was remarked by a gentleman who spoke a few moments ago, that in the process of acquiring title to agricultural lands under the homestead law there are two steps. There is the preliminary entry or filing, as it is ordinarily denominated, and there is the final proof. A person of foreign birth, in order to be entitled to make a filing, is required to have declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States; but before he can make final proof and receive his patent he must, in the case of a homestead entry, have taken out his final papers as a citizen.

With reference to entries of coal or iron lands only one step is required. The party merely goes into the land office, makes application for a piece of coal land or iron land, pays the fee of $15, or whatever it may be, and gets his certificate. That is the sole act necessary for acquiring title to a piece of land of this character. Now, if you wish to give the immigrant, who has come here intending honestly and faithfully to become a citizen, the privilege of making this entry, why do you tell him in the next breath that the entry shall not be available for five years to come; that during this time his entry shall be of no use to him in the market; that it shall not benefit his heirs if he should die before the expiration of the five years? I see no sense in the discrimination which is thus made. Why do you not draw the line against the man who wants to till the soil as well as against the man who wishes to invest in mineral lands in the Territories of the West?

I am not here to discuss this question from any sentimental point of view; I am not in a position to appeal to feeling one way or the other; but I submit that the House should exercise good judgment and consistency in disposing of this question. If you wish to say to the immigrant that he shall till the soil and do nothing else, say so; but if you want him to assist in developing your coal or iron mines or other mineral wealth give him a decent show.

A gentleman suggests to me that this proposition does not prevent that. It does so in this manner: The immigrant is prevented from saying that he is the owner of the land until the lapse of five years, assuming that he makes entry as soon as he has declared his intention.

Mr. FELTON. But he has the use of the land.

Mr. LIND. He has the use of the land; but of what value is it to him so long as he has not the ownership of it?

Mr. FELTON. It might be very valuable to him.

A MEMBER. He may sell his coal or iron in the mean time.

Mr. KERR. I wish to ask the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LIND] whether the law does not give to any foreigner coming to this country the privilege of becoming a citizen after he has been here five years?

Mr. LIND. It does.

Mr. KERR. Well, then, the man who enters these mineral lands knows that he will get title as soon as he becomes a citizen.

Mr. LIND. But in the mean time he is deprived of using his property in the same manner that other persons entering similar lands can do.

Mr. CUTCHEON. He will have an equitable title all the while.

Mr. STRUBLE. I wish to ask the gentleman from Minnesota whether, for the sake of the immediate convenience and benefit of foreigners who may come here and wish to take up these mineral lands, he would sacrifice the principle advocated here of withholding titles from aliens settling on the public lands until they have become naturalized?

Mr. LIND. I would not. But, sir, I have grown up in Minnesota. I have resided in a county where there are perhaps as many foreign-born persons to the acre as in any county in the United States; and I never knew an instance where a man who had declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States proved disloyal to the country—never. Who can point to any instance in which a person who has come here and declared his intention to support this Government and the flag which waves there [pointing to the flag back of the Speaker's chair] has proved disloyal? Disloyalty does not come from men who have had the enterprise and courage and grit to cross the Atlantic in order to help make this country what it is. I do not propose to be disloyal; and I know that none of my kith or kin, none of the people that I live with, will ever become disloyal, whether they have at the present time simply declared their intention or have been fully naturalized.

Mr. MACDONALD. Mr. Speaker, I suppose it is necessary that Minnesota should be heard from on this side of the House. I wish to say that I agree with what my colleagues on the other side [Mr. NELSON and Mr. LIND] have said with reference to the first amendment, proposing to strike out the words with reference to declaration of intention, and therefore I voted against that amendment.

But I can not agree with the language of the last part of the proposition. I am in favor of extending all the liberality provided in the last part of it, so far as may be, to foreigners coming here and declaring their intention to become citizens of the United States. But, sir, it occurred to members of the committee, and it certainly does to me, that there need not be any sentiment of patriotism or love of country on the part of native American or naturalized citizens brought into the discussion of the bill. The important question here presented to the committee was whether we would allow foreigners or citizens or subjects of other countries to come into our midst and acquire title to our mineral lands. It was proposed that we should qualify it so it would not be easy to do so. The only means we could devise as a check was to agree that the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois should be added to the section, and that is the only reason for it. And I can not see any good reason, as a foreign-born citizen myself, why the amendment should not be adopted. When we allow any of these immigrants to come to this country and declare their intention to become citizens and to acquire title to land, there is nothing to prevent their disposing of their right which they have acquired whenever they may choose to do so.

Mr. LIND. Suppose a party declares his intention to become a citizen and makes entry and dies prior to the time when he would become a full citizen?

Mr. MACDONALD. I will answer the gentleman, so far as that is concerned, he can propose another amendment to cover that point, and move it to come in after the other amendment.

Mr. LIND. If there is anything done it should be done now in this regard, because the language of the bill does not cover it.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. Speaker, I should like to see the American Congress consistent in its action upon questions of this character. Any foreigner who lands in New York City may go to one of the Territories of the United States, and by declaring his intention to become a citizen of the United States and by residing in such Territory three to six months qualify himself to vote and hold office. These privileges are guarantied by the laws of Congress and the laws of the Territories. (See sections 1859 and 1860 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.) Under these laws I have for nearly twenty years seen men of foreign birth go to my Territory, and though clothed with full citizenship so far as the right to vote and to hold office is concerned soon after their arrival, yet I have failed to see any evil come of it. We do not object to his voting and holding office. We should not object to his acquiring title to land.

Now, what do we have proposed by the amendments which are before the House? It is to debar any one before he has become a naturalized citizen from acquiring a patent to the lands he seeks under this provision of the bill.

The proposition will to this extent stop the settlement of the Western Territories. Such provisions of law will retard in a measure the building up of Western homes and the development of mines by the worthy immigrants who land upon our shores and declare their intention to become citizens of the United States.

Before such bills become laws I ask you to go to the growing empires of the West and see for yourselves what has already been accomplished by the beneficent policy under which we have heretofore lived. Go and see the great States which have grown up in the West under the existing wise land laws, and I do not believe this House will favor the kind of legislation proposed by the amendment.

Do we mean to say that those who are not native born in this country, and who come from other countries to live with us, shall not settle down and attach themselves to the soil; that they shall not be permitted to have the right to hold real estate until they have become full citizens of the United States? I believe the adoption of any such principle by Congress would be a great wrong to the Western States and Territories. It is opposed to the policy of the land legislation of the Government from its foundation to the present time.

Mr. MACDONALD. Is the gentleman in favor of foreigners coming in and acquiring titles to such lands?

Mr. CAREY. Yes, if they come to be citizens.

Mr. MACDONALD. Is the gentleman in favor of non-residents who do not intend to make this their home coming here and acquiring titles to these lands?

Mr. CAREY. I have not said or intimated anything of the kind; but what I did say was that foreigners who come to this country intending to make it their home and who declare their intention to become citizens of the United States should be permitted to acquire title to lands and to occupy them whether they are full-fledged citizens or not. Nor am I opposed to non-residents investing their money in the mineral lands of the United States. I have seen no evil grow out of the fact that foreigners have been permitted to come to this country and invest their money in our mineral lands.

I fail to discover any reason why they should be prohibited from purchasing and developing coal and iron lands. So far as I have been able to discover no monopoly of coal lands or mineral lands has resulted from the investment of non-resident capital in the development of these resources of the West. On the contrary, they have been of the greatest advantage to the Western people. In nine cases out of every ten where foreigners have come to the country to invest their money they have returned to their native land and left behind them not only the lands and mines which they had acquired, but also their capital.

It is true that many may come and engage in speculation, but it is also true, as I have stated, that 90 per cent. of the money invested in this country by foreigners in the development of mineral lands has been lost to the investors. The West needs the capital and has always striven eagerly to obtain it, and has reaped the benefit of the money.

I believe this class of legislation will put the Government in the place of a great monopolist. Why should the Government desire to hold on to these lands? If citizens of the United States, or aliens who have declared their intention to become citizens, desire the public lands and will develop them, it will assist in the growth of the country, and draw population from the overcrowded East and will increase the wealth and population of the sparsely-settled West.

If the experience of the country shows that the legislation for the disposition of the public lands has resulted to the disadvantage of the people of this country, then repeal the existing laws. If this legislation has been to the advantage of the people and the Government, why not leave the laws on the statute-books until some sufficient reason is seen on the part of Congress for making such radical changes as are proposed by this bill.

Mr. PAYSON. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. CAREY. Certainly.

Mr. PAYSON. I wish to inquire of the gentleman, as the representative of one of the Territories, whether he approves of the policy announced in the alien land law as to the agricultural lands.

Mr. CAREY. I believe that the whole law has been wrong from its very inception.

Mr. PAYSON. Well, the gentleman has answered my question.

Mr. CAREY. Not only in reference to the mineral but to the agricultural lands.

Mr. PAYSON. Well, allow me another question: Does the gentleman think that it is an advantage to the State of Colorado that the Earl of Dunraven owns now the whole of that great tract known as Estes Park?

Mr. CAREY. If the Earl of Dunraven owns the park I suppose he acquired it through the United States by violating the land laws of the United States. I know nothing about it, but I will say they are a poor class of people in Colorado if they can not compel the owner to part title if the ownership is wrong or a material injury to the State; if in no other way, they can tax the land out of existence.

Mr. PAYSON. The gentleman evades the question. I ask if he thinks it an advantage to have a foreigner the owner of this vast body of land?

Mr. CAREY. Well, I do not know, to begin with, that he is the owner of it. I know nothing about it.

Mr. PAYSON. Then I assert it for the information of the gentleman as a fact.

Mr. CAREY. And I do not believe that the disadvantage, if it is a disadvantage to the people of Colorado, is near so great as the disadvantage which has arisen to the great interests of the Territories by reason of the placing of the alien law on the statute-books. The West demands that it be radically amended.

Mr. PAYSON. Well, the gentleman has answered my other question. Such, I think, is not the sentiment of the American people.

Mr. STRUBLE. Mr. Speaker, if there is a last word, I move to strike it out. [Laughter.]

This case has been well and most forcibly presented by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON], and I desire to add only a few words in the line of his remarks.

The point of the controversy as I appreciate it is this: Under this bill those who come here from foreign nations may at once, upon filing a declaration of their intention to become citizens, make an entry upon the mineral lands contemplated by this bill. They can not, under the law, acquire their full citizenship until the lapse of five years from the date of the declaration; but under the bill, or the law, if it were not for the naturalization statutes they might acquire title sooner.

Now, our friends who have spoken against this idea seem to think that the policy of the Government, as declared in the alien land bill, should be sacrificed, as I construe it, to the opinion that these people should have immediately the same right to acquire a full title that the American citizen has.

I do not think we can be charged in this country with the passage of illiberal statutes towards those who come here from abroad and locate among us and undertake to become a part of us. We have been exceedingly liberal in our legislation towards them; and I feel, upon this point, that we are not asking those gentlemen who may see proper to enter mineral lands under this bill to forego too much, or to assume too great a hardship, when we simply ask them, before they attain the title in full, that they shall be inducted into full citizenship in the United States.

Mr. MCADOO was recognized.

Mr. NELSON. I wish now to offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can send the amendment up and have it printed in the RECORD.

Mr. NELSON'S amendment is as follows:

Add to the amendment offered by Mr. PAYSON the words "or when he has declared his intention to become such."

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, submitted the following amendment; which was also directed to be printed:

Amend section 3 by striking out all after the words "United States," in line 2, and insert the words "is hereby repealed."

Mr. HOLMAN. Inasmuch as it is now 5 o'clock, and the officers of the House will need time this evening to prepare the Hall for the funeral services of the Chief-Justice, I shall move an adjournment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey has been recognized.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then after he has concluded I will submit the motion.

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that any gentleman upon this floor should speak in opposition to the spirit that actuated the law-making power in passing the anti-alien bill in the Forty-ninth Congress. I do not suppose that the members of this House, especially those who come from the East, and have not investigated the subject, know of the evils that existed before the passage of that act. It is a well-known fact that under the law of England—the law of primogeniture—the younger sons of the land-hungry nobility are cut off from inheritance in the lands. Among others, these young embryo landlords invaded our public domain. It had grown to be a question of such magnitude that it called forth this repressive legislation. Against this measure severe strictures appeared in the London Times. The Tory journal rebuked us for preserving America for its own citizens and repelling the advances of British landlordism with its Pandora's box of evils.

This foreign speculation in American lands had gone on to such an extent that the amount of lands that had been acquired by English, Scotch, and Irish cions of nobility, of the land-seeking and land-dominating brood, as well as their kind on the continent of Europe, was almost fabulous in amount. I find, sir, that there has been growing up a restless spirit in the Western Territories, especially in the mining and land-speculative centers, against this righteous and popular law.

It was shown in a debate in the other end of the Capitol that a desperate effort was to be made to secure the repeal of the existing law. Some of our Western friends seem to think that by the passage of this act they may be cut off from an opportunity of mining speculations with foreigners; that by means of this unhallowed and in the end to us unprofitable alliance a feverish speculative and unhealthy development may be stopped. As to this looking to the future I for one have no regret.

Mr. Speaker, the land of a country is its life, and its preservation in the hands of the small freeholder dwarfs all other issues, and no country can be really free unless the people who till the soil or who live upon it are the owners of it; and no land can in truth be called free—its people can only have a sham freedom—where the stability of its institutions and the material prosperity of its people, which rest on the land, are held in the hands of foreigners. Why, sir, Thomas Jefferson indignantly spurned the offer of a French company who volunteered in the early days of the Republic to come to the then unknown territory on the Ohio River for the purpose of locating unless they would become citizens of the Republic; and I shall for one, while I have a seat on this floor, protest by my voice and estop by my vote, as far as I can, any attempt to modify or repeal one of the most popular and beneficial acts that ever passed Congress—the anti-alien land-owning bill. We welcome to this land of ours the honest, liberty-loving man, whether he be Celt, Saxon, or Norseman, Sclav or Latin, so long as he comes here to obey our laws, uphold our institutions, and become of us and with us against all the world. But we reject the alien in heart who hates our country and would only make gain by his relations with us.

I think our Western friends are making a very great mistake. This country is developing rapidly enough. There is no difficulty in the United States about disposing of the surplus lands. The natural increase of our population is tremendous, and the phenomenal immigration which is pouring upon our shores makes it, in my opinion, the right policy that we should for the present rather stop and retard than advance the settlement of the public lands.

There is sufficient capital in these United States, sufficient American capital in the hands of Americans, to develop the mining resources of the West. Instead of appealing to the capitalists of London and other European cities to take up our mining and other lands and invest their money in them, we can do that with our own men and our own money, and our country will advance fast enough in mining as well as in agriculture if we cut off the foreigners who come here for the purpose of speculation from taking the life-blood out of the country. Hands out to the intelligent, industrious, freedom-seeking, law-abiding emigrant to our shores; bars up stiff and strong against the land-hungry, liberty-hating, landlording dukes, earls, and such like, and the anti-American land-grabbing speculator and his brood.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The following additional amendments were handed in at the Clerk's desk:

By Mr. VANDEVER:

Add the following proviso to the last line of the bill:

"Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to legalize assignments heretofore made by claimants under the desert-land act of the rights acquired by them as locators on these lands."

By Mr. SMITH, of Arizona:

At the end of section 4 add:

"Provided, however, That timber not of commercial value as sawed or hewed timber growing on public lands wholly unfit for cultivation shall be free to the domestic use of any bona fide resident of the Territory in which said timber on such land is found."

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Pending the motion to adjourn,

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 907) to provide for the erection of a public building at Charlotte, N. C.; and

A bill (S. 2458) to amend an act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Eastern Branch of the Potomac River at the foot of Pennsylvania avenue east.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. ENLOE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 4327) regulating the construction of bridges over the Muskingum River, in Ohio.

TRICHINOSIS IN GERMANY, ETC.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which, with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from Hon. George H. Pendleton, our minister to Germany, dated January 30, 1888, from which it appears that trichinosis prevails to a considerable extent in certain parts of Germany, and that a number of persons have already died from the effects of eating the meat of diseased hogs which were grown in that country.

I also transmit a report from our consul at Marseilles, dated February 4, 1888, representing that for a number of months a highly contagious and fatal disease has prevailed among the swine of a large section of France, which disease is thought to be very similar to hog cholera by the Commissioner of Agriculture, whose statement is herewith submitted.

It is extremely doubtful if the law passed April 29, 1878, entitled "An act to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States," meets cases of this description.

In view of the danger to the health and lives of our people and the contagion that may be spread to the live stock of the country by the importation of swine or hog products from either of the countries named, I recommend the passage of a law prohibiting such importation, with proper regulations as to the continuance of such prohibition, and permitting such further prohibitions in other future cases of a like character as safety and prudence may require.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 27, 1888.

THE LATE CHIEF-JUSTICE WAITE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints on the committee to take action relating to the funeral of the late Chief-Justice Waite Mr. PLUMB, of Illinois, instead of Mr. CANNON, of Illinois, who is excused, and Mr. ROMEIS, of Ohio, instead of Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa, excused.

The motion to adjourn was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow at half past 11.

PRIVATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills and joint resolutions of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. CATCHINGS: A bill (H. R. 8968) for the relief of Jackson Briscoe—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CLEMENTS: A bill (H. R. 8969) for the relief of the heirs of James A. Stewart—to the Committee on War Claims.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, March 28, 1888.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock and 30 minutes a. m.

PRAYER.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Oh God, in whom is no darkness at all, we thank Thee for light from Thy throne upon the clouds and darkness, upon the conflict and turmoil that gather around our life. Oh Thou, who art the light of the world, we pray Thee give us grace to walk in Thy light, sitting at Thy feet, humbly and teachably, learning of Thee, who art meek and lowly in heart, that we may find rest for our souls—so walking in Thy steps through life self-forgetful, having God governing our hearts, constrained by divine love, that our lives may be made a benediction to men.

We thank Thee for the comfort that comes to us in the midst of life's bereavements. We bless Thee for the things that are real and substantial and abiding, for that world in which there is no darkness at all; and we pray Thee help us so to order ourselves here that when life's toilsome day is ended we may enter into rest.

Bless us each one to-day. Sanctify to us Thy providences. Teach us heavenly wisdom.

O God, our life is in Thy hand. We would use it for Thy glory in the service of men, laboring to keep our consciences right with God, praying for deliverance from all the power of darkness, passion, and sin; and so walking humbly and trustingly and lovingly before Thee, that the peace which God alone can give may keep our hearts and minds.

We ask these blessings, with guidance and grace and all else that we need, in the name of the great Intercessor, to whom, with Thee, O Father, and the ever blessed Spirit, be all the praise, world without end. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of yesterday, when, on motion of Mr. EDMUNDS, and by unanimous consent, its further reading was dispensed with.

FUNERAL OF THE CHIEF-JUSTICE.

Mr. CLARK, the Clerk of the House of Representatives, appeared below the bar of the Senate and delivered the following message:

Mr. President, I am directed by the Speaker to inform the Senate that the House of Representatives is now in session and ready to receive the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Pursuant to order, the Senate will now proceed to the Hall of the House of Representatives, to attend the funeral of the Chief-Justice.

The Senate, preceded by its Sergeant-at-Arms, proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

At 12 o'clock and 51 minutes p. m. the Senate returned to its Chamber, and was called to order by the President pro tempore.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 52 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, March 29, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, March 28, 1888.

The House met at 11.30 o'clock a. m.

The proceedings were opened with prayer by Rev. J. H. CUTHBERT, D. D., of Washington, D. C., as follows:

Our Holy Heavenly Father, in whom we live and move and have our being, draw nigh unto us as we attempt in our weak and imperfect way to draw nigh unto Thee. Again we would recognize Thy hand in the removal of Thy servant the late Chief-Justice of the United States. Again we thank Thee for that life, for its illustration of the eternal principles of righteousness and truth. The memory of the just is indeed blessed. We thank Thee for the peaceful close of that life. We believe that it was indeed well with him, that it was indeed better to be absent from the body of sin and of death and to be present with the Lord. The Lord's blessing rest upon his bereaved family, present or absent. Be a very present help unto them. Bless Thy servants before Thee, all of them, and whether we have ten talents or five or but one committed to our trust, merciful Father help us to be faithful to that trust, and take us at last to Thyself, for the sake of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of yesterday.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I move that the reading of the Journal be postponed until to-morrow.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as a member of the committee on the part of the House to take action in relation to the funeral of the late Chief-Justice the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. MONTGOMERY, in place of the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, who is unable to serve.

The following was the order of proceedings agreed upon by the joint committee of the House and the Senate:

The ceremonies will be under the control of the Supreme Court. Bishop Paret, of the Protestant Episcopal Church, will conduct the religious ceremonies, and will be assisted by Rev. Dr. Leonard, of St. John's; Rev. Mr. Mott, of Epiphany, and Rev. Dr. William B. Bodine, president of Kenyon College, Ohio.

Both Houses of Congress will assemble at their Halls at 11.30 o'clock. On notice from the Speaker of the House of Representatives that they are ready, the Senate will proceed to the House in a body, and will be assigned seats on the west and right sides.

The diplomatic corps will assemble in the robing-room of the Supreme Court, and the President and Cabinet in the room of the House Committee on Military Affairs, and from there will join the procession.

The funeral cortege will arrive at the east front of the Capitol and enter through the east entrance of the Rotunda, and be met there by the joint committee of Congress. The procession will then be formed, under the direction of the marshal of the Supreme Court, in substantially the following order:

Officiating clergy.
Committees of both Houses of Congress.
Casket containing the remains.
The justices of the Supreme Court as pall-bearers, with messengers of Supreme Court as body-bearers.
Family and relatives of the Chief-Justice.
President of the United States and members of his Cabinet.
Lieutenant-General of the Army and Admiral of the Navy.
Diplomatic corps.
Court of Claims.
Supreme court of the District of Columbia.
Members of the Interstate Commerce Commission.
Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.
Commissioners of the District of Columbia.
Committee of ten, representing the bar of the United States Supreme Court.
Committee of ten, representing the Yale alumni.

On entering the Hall of the House of Representatives the different bodies will be conducted to the seats reserved for them. The casket will be placed directly in front of the Clerk's desk, and the family and the relatives will occupy seats on each side thereof and near thereto.

Members of the Senate and House will occupy the entire west and right of the Hall to the rear of the bar of the House.

The President of the Senate and Speaker of the House will occupy the Speaker's platform, and the officers of those bodies will be seated below and near them.

The officiating clergy will occupy the desk of the Clerk of the House.

The Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States and their families will occupy the space on the west and left of the Speaker, in front of the space allotted to the Senate and House.

The President and Cabinet, Lieutenant-General of the Army, and Admiral of the Navy will occupy the space on the right and east of the Speaker's desk, within the bar of the House.

The joint committee of the two Houses of Congress will occupy the area in front of the casket and within the bar of the House.

The diplomatic corps will occupy the front rows of seats on the right and east side of the House, and the other delegations and committees will be seated in the rear of them.

The choir will be stationed in the gallery alongside the clock and in front of the Speaker's desk.

The press gallery will be under the exclusive control of the press committee.

The Executive gallery will be reserved for persons having tickets calling for that gallery and indorsed by Col. Daniel S. Lamont.

The diplomatic gallery will be reserved exclusively for the families of members of that corps and having tickets calling therefor.

At forty minutes past 11 a. m. the Doorkeeper announced the Senate of the United States. The President of the Senate was escorted to a seat beside the Speaker's chair.

As the several invited bodies and individuals entered they took the seats assigned to them.

At ten minutes past 12 o'clock the casket was brought in, accompanied by the officiating clergymen.

The funeral service, which was conducted according to the ritual of the Protestant Episcopal Church by Bishop Paret and assistants, began at fifteen minutes past 12 o'clock.

At the conclusion of the service the casket was removed, preceded by the joint committee of the two Houses of Congress.

The several bodies and individuals named below then left the Hall in the following order:

The Justices of the Supreme Court.
The President and his Cabinet.
The Lieutenant-General of the Army and the Admiral of the Navy.
The members of the diplomatic corps.
The Senate.

The House then, on motion of Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky (at 1 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.), adjourned.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, March 29, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ADJOURNMENT OVER GOOD FRIDAY.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, to-morrow being Good Friday, I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Saturday next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Saturday next.

Mr. SAULSBURY. What is the motion? To adjourn to next Saturday?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Saturday next.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If I may have unanimous consent I will state that it was thought by gentlemen on this side, all being willing to adjourn over Good Friday, that we might go on with the Calendar on Saturday and get through a considerable amount of the minor business of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am willing for that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting in response to a resolution of March 7, 1888, an estimate of the cost involved in providing approaches and roadway to the Aqueduct bridge, Georgetown, D. C.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1657) for the relief of William Bayard, a citizen of the United States, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2805) granting a pension to Martha F. Woodrum, widow of James Woodrum, deceased, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1501) for the relief of James Downing, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; which was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. I am also instructed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 592) for the relief of Isaac O. Savage, to report it back with a recommendation that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. I have prepared a favorable report on the bill. It appears to be a just bill in every way; but it seems to be fairly within the jurisdiction of the Military Committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Committee on Claims will be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. STANFORD, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1846) for the erection of a public building at New London, Conn., reported it back with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1200) for the erection of a public building in the city of Lansing, in the State of Michigan, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 839) for the relief of Daniel B. Washburn, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2200) to amend paragraph 1 of section 4821, chapter 2, of the Revised Statutes, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. DANIEL, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2164) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Norfolk, in the State of Virginia, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

MEMORIALS AS TO SABBATH OBSERVANCE.

Mr. CULLOM. During the present session at different times there have been quite a number of memorials presented by different Senators and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, remonstrating against the running of interstate Sunday trains, mail trains, and against military drills, etc., on the Sabbath. That subject has for a number of years been under the control of the Committee on Education and Labor. I understand that committee has now the general question under consideration, and is having hearings upon it. Therefore, on behalf of the Interstate Commerce Committee, I ask leave to report these memorials back to the Senate, and move that they be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection.

Mr. CALL. I object.

Mr. BLAIR. I present a memorial of 127 citizens of Litchfield, Ill., and a memorial of 70 citizens of the United States, on the same subject, which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Florida to object to the reference suggested by the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. CALL. I do object. The Committee on Education and Labor, I think, have nothing whatever to do with the laws to regulate the observance of the Sabbath. On the contrary, I hope that the Committee on Interstate Commerce, which does regulate the matter of interstate commerce and the running of trains on Sunday and other days, will be required to take jurisdiction of this subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on Interstate Commerce having reported back the memorials, it is for the Senate to decide whether they shall be referred, or lie on the table, or what disposition shall be made of them.

Mr. BLAIR. I ought to state that the first I knew of such memorials being sent to the Senate was at the last Congress, when they were sent in large numbers. They were then referred to the Committee on Education and Labor. They reached that committee late in the Congress, and there was no hearing upon the questions involved.

The subject-matter is the question of labor upon the Sabbath; and the labor organizations and churches and citizens of the country generally who are interested in these memorials discuss the subject mainly from the standpoint of labor, and I suppose the memorials should go to the Committee on Education and Labor. Some of these memorials have been referred to that committee at this Congress, and I am pressed by parties in various portions of the country to give hearings. It is necessary to know where the memorials are to finally locate in order that justice may be done to the memorialists.

Mr. CULLOM. I only desire to say that I asked this change of reference after conference with the chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, and after having been informed that that committee is investigating the subject. The Committee on Interstate Commerce is not disposed to shirk any duty, but it is not in the interest of good legislation to divide up a question and have two or three committees investigating the same subject. That is the only reason why I reported the memorials back and asked that they be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois, by direction of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, moves that the memorials be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 6894) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed an enrolled bill (H. R. 4327) regulating the construction of bridges over the Muskingum River, in Ohio; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. FRYE (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2539) to authorize and direct the purchase of part of a lot adjoining the Senate stables for their ventilation, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. DAWES introduced a bill (S. 2540) for the relief of Edward L. Keyes; which was read twice by its title, and, together with the papers on file in the case, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2541) to establish courts for the Indians on the various reservations and to extend the protection of the laws of the States and Territories over all Indians, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. DAWES. I desire to say in reference to this bill that it has been prepared by a committee of very able lawyers from Philadelphia, Boston, and New York, assisted by some gentlemen who have devoted very much time to what is needed for the care and protection of the Indians. I am entitled in no respect to any merit for what is in the bill, but the source from which it comes entitles the bill itself to the careful consideration of the Senate.

I am somewhat at a loss to know to what committee the bill ought to be referred. It proposes to treat the Indians under an entirely new policy, and therefore would naturally go to the Committee on Indian Affairs; but it proposes to do so by extending over them in a body all the laws of the States and Territories where they reside, and therefore would more naturally be referred to the Committee on Territories; but it proposes to do this by the establishment of a new system of judicature, and therefore one would think that it would be better considered by the Committee on the Judiciary.

To whatever committee it may be referred, it is possible there may be found some provisions in it that I could not myself support, and, therefore, I take the liberty to withhold my judgment upon the bill until after a report of such committee as the Senate shall conclude it had better go to shall be communicated to the Senate itself.

These remarks I felt were due to the high character of the gentlemen who invoke the judgment of the Senate upon the bill. I venture to move its reference to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART introduced a bill (S. 2542) to reimburse certain persons who expended moneys and furnished services and supplies in repelling invasions and suppressing Indian hostilities within the territorial limits of the present State of Nevada; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DAVIS introduced a bill (S. 2543) granting a pension to Seymour Saxton; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FARWELL introduced a bill (S. 2544) authorizing and directing the President of the United States to make proclamation prohibiting the importation of products of foreign states in certain cases, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2545) granting to Stephen H. Losee an honorable discharge from military service dating as from June 28, 1864; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 2546) to appropriate $12,000 for completing the public building at Peoria, Ill., and increasing the limit of cost of said building; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. CAMERON introduced a bill (S. 2547) to increase the pension of Mrs. Matilda Wilkins Emory; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BLAIR introduced a bill (S. 2548) for the relief of Patrick Larkin; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 2549) for the relief of Belle R. Clements; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

CIVIL-SERVICE INVESTIGATION.

Mr. HALE submitted the following resolution; which was considered, by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Select Committee to Investigate the Operations of the Civil Service be authorized to have printed for the use of the committee the testimony taken before it from time to time during the progress of the investigation.

MEETING OF WASHINGTON LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Whereas it is provided in section 1846 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as follows:

"SEC. 1846. The legislative power in each Territory shall be vested in the governor and a legislative assembly. The legislative assembly shall consist of a council and house of representatives. The members of both branches of the legislative assembly shall have the qualifications of voters as herein prescribed. They shall be chosen for the term of two years, and the sessions of the respective legislative assemblies shall be biennial. Each legislative assembly shall fix by law the day of the commencement of its regular sessions. The members of the council and of the house of representatives shall reside in the district or county for which they are respectively elected."

And whereas the last biennial session of the Legislative Assembly of Washington Territory adjourned sine die in the month of February, 1888; and

Whereas on the 1st day of February, 1888, said Legislative Assembly of Washington Territory passed the following act, which was on February 2 approved by the governor of said Territory, to wit:

"An act to fix the times for the meeting of the Legislative Assembly of Washington Territory.

"Be it enacted by the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Washington: SECTION 1. That the next session of the Legislative Assembly of Washington Territory shall begin on the second Monday of January, 1889, at 12 o'clock noon, and the Legislative Assembly shall meet at noon on the second Monday of January, and biennially thereafter.

"SEC. 2. All acts and parts of acts in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

"SEC. 3. This act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage and approval.

"Passed the House February 1, 1888.

"W. M. CLARK,
"Speaker of the House.

"Passed the Council February 1, 1888.

"JOHN R. THOMPSON,
"President of the Council.

"Approved February 2, 1888.

"[SEAL.] EUGENE SEMPLE, Governor."

Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Territories be, and they are hereby, instructed to inquire into the validity of said act of the Legislative Assembly of Washington Territory, providing that the next session of such Legislative Assembly shall begin on the second Monday of January, 1889, at 12 o'clock noon, and to report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Let that resolution go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution goes over under objection.

Mr. PLATT. I was about to ask that it might lie over so that I could examine it.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have no disposition to press the consideration of the resolution this morning. I ask that it may lie over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution lies over under the rules.

THE MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. PADDOCK. Some time since I entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the resolution submitted by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] January 30, 1888, relative to the inefficiency of the postal service. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON] gave notice of his intention to speak on the resolution.

Mr. PADDOCK. The Senator from Maryland has indicated to me his willingness that the motion should be withdrawn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed will be withdrawn, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 6894) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR.

Mr. HOAR. When the Senate the other day agreed that the constant business in order last week, the Calendar, should continue through the present week the reason was suggested among others that two members of the Finance Committee, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], would be absent, and also the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS], who had taken an active part in the discussion of the financial bill. That reason applies as well to the morning hour of course as to the time after 2 o'clock. I therefore ask unanimous consent that that understanding may apply to the time in the days this week after the conclusion of the morning business, of course reserving the right of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] to address the Senate to-day according to the notice he has previously given.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and such will be the order.

CONFERENCE WITH SOUTH AMERICAN COUNTRIES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. FRYE, Mr. DOLPH, and Mr. BROWN the conferees on the part of the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1473) authorizing the President of the United States to arrange a conference for the purpose of promoting arbitration and encouraging reciprocal commercial relations between the United States of America and the Republics of Mexico, Central and South America, and the Empire of Brazil.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

Mr. BERRY. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to call up the resolution of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] to refer the President's message to the Committee on Finance, with a view of making some remarks upon the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas asks that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of a resolution, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. SHERMAN December 19, 1887, as follows:

Resolved, That the President's annual message be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. BERRY Mr. President, I think it can be truthfully said that at no time since the close of the civil war have the people of the United States been so thoroughly interested in questions of Federal taxation, the manner in which such taxes are imposed, and the effect of their imposition upon the business affairs and the material prosperity of the country as we find them at the present. This interest is not confined to those who are commonly called politicians; it extends to all classes and excites the attention of those engaged in all pursuits. The manufacturer and the merchant, the mechanic and wage-worker of the North, the cotton-planter and the farmer and farm laborer of the South and West are all looking to Congress to ascertain, if possible, the probable legislation upon this the most important of all questions presented for our consideration. The almost universal interest excited by the message of the President of the United States, the attention it attracted, and the large number of persons who read and studied it, were due in part to the strong and vigorous language in which undisputed facts were presented and the bold and fearless manner in which the President discussed a great public question, but it was partly attributable to the fact that public attention was already turned to this subject, and many felt and believed that the time could not much longer be delayed when some change in our present system of taxation would be imperatively demanded.

To those who believe the present system is a wrong system, unfair and oppressive in its methods and in its details, this interest shown by the people is a cause for well-founded hope, for the reason that we believe if it is thoroughly canvassed and once fully understood, its injustice will become so apparent that the people will compel a complete change, or at least a decided modification of the present laws. Several causes have united in the last twenty-three years to prevent this question of taxation from becoming the leading question and leading issue in political contests. Prominent amongst these causes, and probably the principal one, was that from the close of the war until 1876 the people of all sections of the Union were kept in a continual state of excitement and alarm over questions growing out of the civil war; questions of reconstruction; questions arising from Congressional control of the local affairs of the Southern States; questions of the power of the General Government to disfranchise citizens, to dissolve legislatures, and to make and unmake governors. And the people of the South especially had neither the time nor the inclination to devote thought or study to a system of Federal taxation, however injurious to their permanent prosperity, while their property was being systematically confiscated by the payment of taxes to the State, county, and municipal governments for the benefit of those whom Congress had appointed to rule over them. The less and indirect wrong was unknown, ignored, or forgotten in their efforts to rid themselves of the greater one, with which they daily came in direct contact.

Their time was constantly occupied in a contest with poverty and with those who were seeking to force from them under the forms of law the little that the fortunes of war had left them, and when they finally obtained possession of their State governments it took years to repair the damages inflicted by eight years of misrule. Another cause that operated to prevent the question of Federal taxation from becoming the all important one was that however great the amount of revenue collected, the excess could be constantly applied to the payment of the public debt, and the attention of the people was not thoroughly attracted until the time came when there was no public debt to which it could be applied, and it became evident that a large surplus, probably $100,000,000 annually, must either accumulate in the Treasury, and thereby so contract the currency as to destroy the business of the country, or that the Secretary of the Treasury would be compelled to go upon the market and purchase bonds at such price as the holders of Government securities might demand; and then the people very naturally inquired why a system should be retained that produced such an excess of revenue—and although the questions presented in the President's message as to the manner of imposing taxes have been debated since the foundation of the Government, yet we now have for the first time in more than a quarter of a century a fair prospect of making a contest involving the election of the chief executive officer of the Government, with the tariff as the principal and most important issue. Both parties have often expressed a willingness to make the fight on this line, and I trust the issue may be fairly presented and squarely met without evasion or subterfuge.

Mr. President, I agree with those who believe a tariff should be imposed upon imported goods and taxes laid on domestic products for revenue purposes only, and that our present system of levying taxes on imported goods is utterly indefensible; that it is fundamentally wrong in principle and doubly wrong in its details. The power to lay and collect taxes is derived from the following clause in the Constitution of the United States:

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defence and general welfare of the United States.

The only object and purpose that those who framed that clause had in view was to provide a way by which money could be collected from the citizens for the public purposes named in the clause of the Constitution which I have quoted; the object was to raise money and not to enhance or depreciate the price of any product or commodity. It was no part of their purpose that the power to collect taxes should be used when no money was needed for public purposes, nor that it should be used to compel one citizen to contribute a portion of his money or his labor to increase either the profits or wages of another citizen.

The principal issue, as I understand it, between the friends of revenue reform and the friends of a high protective tariff, when it is freed from all disguise and freed from the mystery and obscurity with which the friends of protection have surrounded and enveloped it, is simply this: whether a tariff or taxes shall be imposed only to obtain a revenue for public purposes, or whether the taxing power shall be used to confer benefits upon one class of citizens engaged in one pursuit at the expense of another class of citizens engaged in a different pursuit under the pretext of protecting American labor. I agree with some one who said that it is not within the power or ingenuity of man to frame laws that will take from one class of citizens a portion of the fruits of their labor and give it to another class of citizens without doing more injury to a greater number of the class from whom it is taken than it will be possible to confer benefits upon the class to whom it is given, and the power was never intended by the Constitution to be conferred upon Congress to make the attempt. Such is neither the language nor intent of the clause that I have quoted, and yet it is from this clause that the right is claimed to lay taxes and imposts where the sole purpose is protection.

The words therein used, "to provide for the common defence and general welfare," have no reference to the act of levying and collecting the taxes. This is never supposed to be for the welfare of any one, but these words refer solely to the manner of appropriating the money after it is collected; and whether this power of appropriation is unlimited or is confined to the objects enumerated in the Constitution is not material to this argument. The friends of protection claim, however, that the Government can lay and collect taxes not required for public purposes, in order that the price paid for manufactured goods by the consumer shall be increased, and they call this providing for the general welfare. When a sum sufficient for public purposes is obtained Congress has no right to go beyond that. Those who framed the Constitution did not so intend—and it is unfair and a discrimination without excuse to justify it—to force by governmental power taxes from one class of citizens not to be used for the common good of all, but for the purpose of increasing the profits or wages of another class, where both classes owe allegiance to the same government and are entitled to equal privileges and equal protection.

Nor can this wrong be excused or palliated by the fact that the result is accomplished by the indirect method of increasing the cost of an article which one class has for sale and the other class is compelled to buy. The friends of protection know that if it is admitted that such is the effect of the present tariff laws that they can not remain as they are; that the universal love of justice and fair play common to most men is such, that if it was fully understood they would not tolerate a system that enables the Government to force a laborer on a farm who receives $20 per month to pay $15 for a given amount of the necessaries of life which would otherwise cost him but $10 for the sole purpose of giving the manufacturer $5 additional profit, and hence they deny that such is the effect of the laws that impose taxes on imported goods. Many of them admit that the theory of protection is wrong, but insist that in practice it is highly beneficial, and constantly assert that all of the prosperity which the nation has enjoyed is attributable to protection, but say all of the difficulties encountered and the evils that have fallen upon us are attributable to some other cause, and they are driven to all manner of inconsistencies to sustain their position.

They constantly assert that any material reduction of the tariff will so reduce the price of American goods that the manufacturer will be compelled to either reduce the wages of the laborer or quit the business; and they profess to be greatly concerned for the laborer, and say that prices must be kept up for his benefit; yet the same parties who make this argument as confidently assert that the tariff laws do not increase the price of American goods; that a reduction would not benefit the consumer, but, in fact, he would be compelled to pay more for his goods; and they argue themselves into the belief that a reduction of the tariff would compel the man who sells to receive less, while the man who buys would pay more for the same article. Just how they reconcile these two propositions is one of the mysteries pertaining to the subject that no ordinary man can understand. It is an impossibility that both propositions can be true, yet both are asserted and elaborately argued, and long tables of figures are presented to prove that both are true.

If those engaged in the manufacture of goods receive more for them by reason of the tariff laws some one pays this extra sum, and it is impossible to show that it is paid by any other human being except the consumer; and a large proportion of it unfortunately falls upon those engaged in agricultural pursuits—those who have no protection, and who have for years appealed to Congress for an even chance. The fact that a large amount of foreign goods are annually imported, paying the cost of transportation, paying the import duties, and are still sold in competition with American goods, is a complete answer to the assertion that manufactured goods can be purchased for as small a sum of money in the United States as in any foreign country. If the statement constantly made by the friends of protection that the tariff laws were not for the benefit of the manufacturer but for the laborers employed in these manufactories were true, it would be no justification.

There is no reason why one class of laborers should be protected when it imposes burdens on another class. The native-born citizens who work upon the farms of the South and West have the same rights, are entitled to the same privileges, and should receive the same consideration from the Government that is given to those who labor in any other field of industry. There is no reason why our sympathies should be enlisted for one class of laborers only, and when the power of the Government is used to increase the wages and resources of one class by decreasing the purchasing power of the wages paid to the men who labor on the farm from twelve to fourteen hours per day, it is an injustice that no pretended friendship for labor can conceal and no amount of false reasoning justify. It is not equality under the law; it is certainly not equality under equal laws. Laws that bear unequally upon the citizens are admitted by all to be unjust laws, and the people of a nation, however seemingly prosperous, will never be a happy and contented people when the Government interposes to secure advantages to one class of citizens and thereby deprives another class of an equal chance in the contest for wealth and power.

Mr. President, the present tax laws are not only wrong because they are based upon wrong principles, but in the methods and details by which these taxes are levied and collected they are peculiarly objectionable. They are so framed as to bear unequally upon the poorer classes—so framed as to take from those who are least able to pay and give to those who can best afford to be without it. They seem to have been framed upon the principle that it is the duty of the Government to take care of the rich and to trust to the generosity of the rich to take care of the poor. It was said by the Senator from Ohio that import duties were imposed mainly upon luxuries. I shall not attempt to go into the details of the manner in which they are levied at any length. Nor will I undertake to state the amount of capital invested in manufacturing, the value of the plant, the cost of labor and raw material, the wages paid to the laborer, or the profits of the manufacturer; but I will, with the consent of the Senate, insert a short table taken from the speech made by the Senator from North Carolina on the 13th of January last, with a few comments of that Senator:

IRON AND STEEL.

Amount imported in 1887	$50,618,985
Duty paid thereon	20,713,233

Being an average of 41 per cent.

JEWELRY AND PRECIOUS STONES.

Amount imported in 1887	$10,981,191
Duty paid thereon	1,162,300

Being a duty of 10½ per cent.

This shows, whatever be the excuse for it, that the iron and steel, without which no industry can move, and which are an absolute necessity of life, are made to pay four times as much as the adornments of the rich.

	Per cent.
Wool hats:
Valued at 40 cents per pound and under	75.00
Valued at from 40 to 60 cents per pound	73.00

All above 20 cents per square yard	59.00
All woolen goods or mixtures of alpaca and other material:
Weighing 4 ounces or less per square yard	83.00
Weighing over 4 ounces per square yard	69.68
Blankets:
Worth 30 cents per pound or under	79.66
Worth from 30 to 40 cents per pound	63.85
All worth above 80 cents per pound	70.00

Whilst the woolen shawl of the poor woman is taxed 88 per cent. the silk shawl of her wealthier sister is taxed only 50 per cent.

Whilst the cheap alpaca of the laborer's wife is taxed 83 per cent. the silk or velvet dress of his employer's wife and the laces and ribbons with which it is trimmed are taxed but 50 per cent.

Whilst the plow-boy's coarse wool hat is taxed 75 per cent the shining silk beaver of the dude is taxed only 50 per cent.

Files are taxed 56 per cent.; trace-chains, 47 per cent.; horseshoe-nails, 76 per cent.; whilst sporting fire-arms, pistols, etc., are taxed only 35 per cent., and iron rails continue to pay 93 per cent. and steel rails 84.

Window-glass:

16 by 24 inches	20.15
Plate-glass, polished and silvered:
10 by 15 inches square	10.85
16 by 24 inches square	18.44

These are only a few items showing the manner in which these taxes are levied, and how any one so thoroughly familiar with the whole subject as the Senator from Ohio can conclude that these taxes are levied mainly upon articles of luxury is another mystery that the friends of protection can alone explain. The heavy taxes placed upon iron, farming implements, cotton-ties, coarse blankets, and coarse woolens, and the comparatively light tax upon jewelry, plate-glass, silks, and velvets contradict the proposition and show that it is the reverse of true. The effect of this arrangement of duties is, whether intended or not, to compel the poor and laboring classes to pay not more taxes to the Government perhaps, because they purchase but few imported goods, but to pay to the manufacturers of American goods a sum far in excess of the entire sum collected by the Government upon imported goods over and above that which they would be compelled to pay for these necessaries if this duty was not imposed. And the amount paid the Government as a tariff upon imported goods is about $220,000,000 annually.

Mr. Calhoun argued more than fifty years ago, with a power and force of logic never surpassed, that such a system could produce but one result, and that it was only a question of time when the agricultural States would be impoverished and the manufacturing States grow rich; and the mortgages held by the citizens of Eastern States upon the fertile lands of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Kansas, and the cotton plantations of the South, and the fact that our foreign market for wheat and other farm products has been destroyed and that wheat commands less money to-day than at any time for one hundred years, prove that Mr. Calhoun more than any other statesman of his day was able to foresee the evils that would flow from a wrong system founded upon principles of injustice. Yet it has been said upon this floor that the farmer more than any other man is interested in retaining a protective tariff, and that the manufacturer has the least interest of all men in its preservation. If this is true, it is somewhat remarkable that both farmer and manufacturer are so ignorant of their true interest that the farmer as a rule is seeking to change or modify it, while the manufacturer is bending all of his energies to retain it, and, if possible, to increase it.

It is also remarkable that the representatives in Congress of the manufacturing States are its most earnest advocates, and the representatives of many of the farming States are equally earnest in their advocacy of a change of those laws; but I hardly think the Senator from Connecticut could have been serious when he said that the farmer, more than any other man, was most benefited by protection. The Senator from Colorado, I presume, takes a different view, as he said in effect—I do not pretend to quote him literally—that if the farmers of the South were not prosperous, they alone were to blame; that if farming did not pay, they should engage in manufacturing.

So, Mr. President, might the manager of a great railroad corporation say to the farmer who complains of excessive freight charges, "If you can not farm and pay these exorbitant charges, you had better quit farming and run a railroad." It is simply mockery to say to the farmers of the South, "Quit farming and engage in manufacturing," when they have neither the capital nor the skill for such an enterprise. It is but saying to the man who complains of the wrong and the injustice of which he is the victim, "Your only chance is to join those engaged in perpetrating that wrong." It is but saying to the man who objects to being robbed under the forms of law, "Your only resource is to become one of those for whose benefit the robbery is committed."

The strong and convincing arguments made by the President in the message now under consideration in favor of a reduction of revenue and against the injustice and gross inequalities of our present system can not be answered by asserting that the message is approved by England or any other foreign nation. It is neither a strong nor a convincing argument against a proposition to say that it is approved by some one against whom we have a prejudice or with whom we are not in sympathy. It is wholly immaterial whether it is approved or disapproved by the English press. The question is, has the President stated facts, and can his argument, based upon those facts, be shown to be unsound or illogical? Nor can it be answered by misrepresenting his position, by applying to him the epithet of free-trader, or by placing him upon a platform different from the one he has chosen for himself.

The fact that his opponents have delivered long and elaborate arguments to show that the President was in favor of absolute free trade, when there is not one word in the message or in his public acts to justify such a conclusion, is an admission upon their part that they can not meet and refute the arguments that he has made, nor successfully assail the position that he has assumed; that is, that taxes imposed to meet the necessities of the Government in time of war can not be continued in time of peace without great danger to the prosperity of the country.

Mr. President, the amount of taxes annually collected from all sources is so much in excess of that which is required by the Government, the surplus is such a standing menace to all business interests, that all parties admit that some change and some reduction is an absolute necessity; but those who have so long been the beneficiaries of the tax levied upon imported goods, those who have for so many years constantly grown rich from the toil and labor of their less fortunate countrymen are unwilling to yield one inch of the advantages they now possess, and they turn to their only resource and say remove the "internal-revenue taxes;" take the tax from whisky, beer, tobacco, and cigars. Not all protectionists openly advocate this, but the Republican party is rapidly approaching this position.

Many of those who have heretofore claimed to be the especial friends of temperance and the sworn enemy of all intoxicating liquors, in order to save the tariff, say give us free whisky, free beer, free tobacco, and free cigars, rather than free farming implements, free clothing, and free food. They have suddenly discovered that it is a great crime, and a national disgrace, to collect taxes from whisky and beer, and it must therefore be made free and so cheap that a man of the most limited means can effectually ruin himself and family for a comparatively small sum of money. They assert that it is no crime to force the farmer to pay an increased price for his farming implements, for the clothing he wears and the blanket that protects him and his family from the cold, but decidedly wrong to increase the price of whisky and beer.

It would seem to me that taxes can be imposed upon whisky and beer with less injury to the deserving citizen than upon any other articles consumed by the human family, and so long as it is necessary to collect taxes for the use of the Government it is utterly indefensible to say that the tax shall be removed and the price of whisky and beer reduced while articles indispensable to every family shall bear an increased cost by reason of the tax imposed upon them.

Mr. President, the wrong and injury perpetrated upon the consumer, and especially upon the agricultural classes, is not the only evil that flows from a high protective tariff. It is the parent of many other evils. It has placed in the Treasury of the United States a sum of money largely in excess of the amount required for the legitimate expenses of Government. The effect of this surplus is to encourage a spirit of extravagance and reckless expenditure that will increase with increasing years, and will continue so long as the cause exists. Appropriations will be made for objects that otherwise would not receive consideration if the money was not already in the Treasury.

This surplus, I fear, has sometimes induced the friends of protection to favor appropriations of doubtful merit to prevent such accumulation as would injure the business of the country, or such an accumulation as would furnish an argument in favor of a reduction of the tariff; and that which is worse, the injustice of the protective system has sometimes induced those who are utterly opposed to its principles to favor appropriations of doubtful constitutionality and still more doubtful merit as the only hope of returning to their people a small portion of the money that it has so unjustly taken from them. The protective system has encouraged all monopolies, and enabled a few individuals to accumulate vast fortunes, and these few are now combining, forming pools, creating trusts, with the avowed purpose of dictating the price of the food, the fuel, and the clothing of the people. We have the iron trust, the sugar trust, the coal trust, and the coal-oil trust, and perhaps many others, and unless they are crushed or can be broken to pieces threaten to control all trade.

Protection has destroyed our ships, crippled our commerce, and so utterly ruined our carrying trade that scarcely an American flag is seen upon foreign seas. It has arrayed capital against labor, created dissension and dissatisfaction, which is constantly shown by lockouts and by strikes, which grow more threatening and dangerous to the peace of the country each succeeding year. It has encouraged a species of paternalism which threatens to destroy the power of the States, change the very frame-work of our institutions, and build up a strong consolidated government with unlimited power and without constitutional restraints. Its tendency is to destroy that independence and that self-reliance of the individual citizen which has been the chief strength of the Republic in the past, and it encourages him, instead of depending upon his own energy, his own labor, and own skill, to appeal to the Government for all manner of impossible benefits which the Government has no power to confer.

It has encouraged those who control large capital and who are interested in the sale of one article of food to appeal to Congress to impose a tax, which the Government does not need, upon another article of food much purer and by far more wholesome, for the sole reason that the one tends to reduce the price of the other; and this demand is earnestly made notwithstanding the fact that such legislation would inflict a serious and lasting injury upon the farmers of the South.

These are a few of the evils that flow from the attempt to give one class of citizens advantages and privileges under the law not accorded to all other citizens. And who can doubt that these evils will grow and multiply so long as the cause continues? And when a bill so meritorious, moderate, and conservative in its character as the one prepared by a majority of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives is so bitterly assailed by the friends of protection we may expect that all the money, power, and influence that class legislation has enabled the manufacturers to acquire and accumulate will be brought to bear against any change of the present unjust laws. I hope, however, that the time will soon come when taxes will be imposed for the purpose of revenue only, and that no greater sum will be collected than will be required for the administration of public affairs, and that they may be collected from such articles as whisky, beer, and cigars—articles that but few are compelled to consume, and upon such imported goods as are used and consumed only by the wealthier classes, and not upon such necessities as the great mass of people are compelled to buy for their daily use. And in addition to these I would impose an income tax upon all incomes above three thousand dollars per annum, sufficient to produce, at least, the eighty millions of dollars annually required for the payment of pensions.

If such legislation as this could be secured and Congress would cease to control by legislative enactment the business of the country, and leave trade and commerce to flow in its natural channels, depending alone upon the law of supply and demand, it might not, and probably would not, cure all evils and secure perfect justice and equality. I do believe, however, that all general discontent would cease, and that an era of prosperity would follow, unequaled in the past, and the hopes of the founders of the Republic, that all citizens should be free and that equal rights should be secured to all and special privileges to none, would be to a large extent, if not fully, realized.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DANIEL. I ask leave to call up out of order Calendar No. 433, being the bill (S. 1211) for the completion of the monument to Mary, the mother of Washington, at Fredericksburgh, Va.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can not entertain that motion without unanimous consent of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that we go to the Calendar. Unanimous consent was given that we should go to the Calendar this morning.

Mr. DANIEL. I was not present when that understanding was arrived at.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first bill on the Calendar under Rule VIII will be stated.

EDWIN DE LEON.

The bill (S. 630) for the relief of Edwin De Leon was announced as first in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider it. It provides for the payment of $479.11 to Edwin De Leon, late consul-general of the United States in Egypt, being the balance found due him on adjustment of his official accounts by the First Comptroller of the Treasury.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANK BAKER.

The bill (H. R. 3749) for the relief of Frank Baker was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for a credit to Capt. Frank Baker, Ordnance Department, United States Army, with $172.52, being a sum of money stolen from him while acting commissary of subsistence at Fort Fred. Steele, Wyo.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TREATY WITH GREAT BRITAIN.

The resolution submitted by Mr. RIDDLEBERGER January 31, 1888, to amend Rule XXXVII so as to allow treaty pending between Great Britain and the United States to be considered in open Senate was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that resolution be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be passed over.

The resolution submitted by Mr. RIDDLEBERGER January 31, 1888, to consider treaty between the United States and Great Britain in open session was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The same order will be made in regard to this resolution.

RAILROAD RECEIVERS.

The resolution submitted by Mr. CALL January 31, 1888, relative to the management of railroads by receivers appointed by United States courts was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be passed over.

LAND COURT.

The bill (S. 2042) to establish a United States land court, and to provide for the settlement of private-land claims in certain States and Territories, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CALL. I ask that that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

AMERICAN TRUST COMPANY.

The bill (S. 116) to incorporate the American Trust Company of the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to hear an explanation of that bill.

Mr. CHACE. Let the amendments be first disposed of.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia was, in section 2, line 15, after the words "appointment of," to strike out "executors" and insert "executor;" and after the word "or," at the end of line 15, to strike out "administrators" and insert "administrator;" so as to read:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall authorize said company to engage in the business of banking; and the said company is hereby authorized to accept and execute trusts of any and every description which may be committed or transferred, with its consent, to it, by any person or persons whomsoever, bodies corporate or political, or by any court in the District of Columbia or in any one of the United States, and to accept the office and appointment of executor or administrator of any kind or nature whenever such appointment is conferred or made by any person or persons, or by any orphans' court or other court, either of the District of Columbia or of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 13, after the word "additional," to strike out "securities" and insert "security;" and in line 20, after the word "also," to strike out "if deemed necessary;" so as to read:

That the said court may, and shall if deemed necessary, require further additional security, and may from time to time, and at least once in every year, shall appoint suitable persons to investigate the affairs and management of said company, who shall report to said court the manner in which such investments are made and the security afforded to those for whom its engagements are held; and the expenses of such investigation shall be defrayed by such company; and the court may also examine the officers of said company, under oath or affirmation, as to the security aforesaid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, line 2, after the word "each," to strike out "being $3,000;" in line 4, after the word "time," to strike out "to increase" and insert "of increasing;" and in line 5, after the word "any," to strike out "sum" and insert "amount;" so as to read:

SEC. 5. That the capital stock of said company shall consist of three thousand shares of $100 each, with the privilege from time to time of increasing the same, at an annual or special meeting, to any amount not exceeding in the aggregate $1,000,000; and the corporators, or a majority of them named in this act, shall have the power to accept such subscriptions as they may deem expedient.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, line 2, after the word "two," to strike out "papers" and insert "newspapers;" and in the same line, after the word "published," to insert "daily;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 7. That ten days' notice shall be given, by publication in two newspapers published daily in the city of Washington, of the time and place of the annual election, which election shall be conducted by three stockholders, one of whom shall act as judge and the other two as inspectors.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "stock," at the end of section 9, to insert:

Which individual liability shall be, first, a security for the faithful performance of the trust obligations, and, secondly, for the benefit of depositors, as provided in section 8.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 9. That the stockholders of said company shall be held individually responsible, equally and ratably, and not one for another, for all contracts, debts, and engagements of said company to the extent of the amount of their stock therein, at the par value thereof, in addition to the amount invested in such stock, which individual liability shall be, first, a security for the faithful performance of the trust obligations, and, secondly, for the benefit of depositors, as provided in section 8.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHACE. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] asked for an explanation of the objects and purposes of this institution. It is not to do a banking business. This is a kind of institution that has now become common all over the country, and such corporations are very beneficent in their influence on the interests of the community. They are something in their functions between a bank of issue and a savings-bank.

The Senator will observe that there is oftentimes great difficulty in procuring proper persons as executors and administrators to take charge of various trusts, to act in a fiduciary capacity. The difficulty is dependent upon the uncertainty of human life. The difficulty is that persons will pass away, fail, or remove, and so be unable to act. Here is a corporate person which is continual, always ready to act.

There is also the additional security that the funds of this corporation are to be invested under the supervision of the Comptroller of the Currency, and the securities will be lodged in his hands, to be held as a guaranty for the faithful performance of the trusts provided for under the act of incorporation and as security for depositors.

I believe that covers the general scope of the bill. I wish to say, in reply to the inquiry of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], who asks me in regard to the experience relative to these trust companies in the States, that institutions of this character are in existence all over the country in all the principal cities of the Union, and by common consent they are found to be among the most useful of our financial institutions.

Mr. HOAR. A measure of this general character—I have not compared the particular details of this bill with the former one—was before the Senate some years ago, and I believe it generally met the approbation of Senators; but it was thought best to wait before passing the measure here until there had been some more experience of the system in the States. So far as I know, there has been no complaint of the workings of the system as far as it has been established, and there is no reason, so far as I am concerned (though I had objection at that time), for delaying the legislation. There is no reason, if the bill has been carefully considered by the committee, why it should not become a law.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN MOORE.

Mr. COCKRELL. In regard to the next bill, Order of Business 366, being the bill (S. 766) granting an increase of pension to John Moore, the report does not show that any application has been made since 1883. The Pension Office has ample jurisdiction to consider the matter, and I object to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

HOMESTEAD AND PRE-EMPTION ENTRIES.

The bill (S. 1588) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide additional regulations for homestead and pre-emption entries of public lands," approved March 3, 1879, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CALL. I ask whether there is a report accompanying the bill.

Mr. PADDOCK. There is no report with this bill. It was reported to the Senate by a unanimous vote of the Committee on Public Lands. Letters were sent from the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office recommending the passage of the bill. All the new law there is in it, I will state to the Senator from Florida, is a proviso simply to give, in cases where accidents or unavoidable delays have prevented the applicant or witnesses from making proof on the date specified, a discretion to the local land officers to extend the time.

Mr. CALL. I have no objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SWAMP AND OVERFLOWED LAND GRANT.

The bill (S. 758) for the relief of purchasers and other grantees of the United States of certain swamp and overflowed lands, and to reimburse and indemnify certain States, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Public Lands reported an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof to insert:

That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to adjust the claims of any State against the United States for any lands which have been sold or otherwise disposed of by the United States that were included in any grant of swamp and overflowed lands to such State, and, in making the adjustment, the State shall have indemnity in cash to the full amount of the purchase-money received by the United States for all lands sold for cash; and for all such lands as have been otherwise disposed of by the United States, except by grants to such States or by homestead entries, for which indemnity has not been granted and allowed, such State shall have indemnity in cash at $1.25 per acre: Provided, That all claims under this act shall be presented with the necessary proofs to the Secretary of the Interior within three years from the approval of this act.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior shall, when adjustments and allowances are made by him under this act, report the same to the Secretary of the Treasury, showing the amount ascertained to be due from the United States to such State on account of lands sold or otherwise disposed of, and together with a statement of the year in which the same was sold or otherwise disposed of; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause such State to be credited with the amount or amounts so reported by the Secretary of the Interior as of the last day of the year in which it was received or the lands otherwise disposed of, as the case may be, and apply the same on the payment of any debt of the State to the United States, if any, but not on any tax the payment of which was not assumed by such State, and pay the balance, if any, over to the treasurer of said State.

SEC. 3. That the acceptance of any State of the indemnity provided for by this act shall be a relinquishment and waiver of all its right, title, and interest in and to all lands which have been disposed of by the United States and which were included in any grant of swamp lands to such State, and an acknowledgment and confirmation of the title thereto in the grantee or grantees of the United States.

SEC. 4. That all selections of lands heretofore made and all indemnity proofs heretofore taken in accordance with the rules of the Department, and not rejected, may be considered in making adjustments under this act.

SEC. 5. That on the surrender of any indemnity land scrip heretofore issued under the provisions of the act of 1855 which could not be satisfied by reason of there being no lands in the State to which the same was issued subject to location thereunder, the value of the same, at the rate of $1.25 per acre, shall be paid to the State so surrendering the same when accompanied by proof of ownership.

SEC. 6. That the provisions of the act entitled "An act to enable the State of Arkansas and other States to reclaim swamp lands within their limits," approved September 28, 1850, are hereby extended to the States admitted into the Union since the 17th day of March, 1860, and said States shall be entitled to indemnity under the provisions and limitations of this act for all swamp and overflowed lands within the meaning of said act of September 28, 1850, sold and disposed of by the United States since the admission of said States.

Mr. CALL. Let the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Let it retain its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be the order.

Mr. PADDOCK. I hope the Senator from Florida will not insist on his objection.

Mr. CALL. I can not withdraw it. The bill is one of very considerable importance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

DISTRICT TAX ARREARS.

The joint resolution (S. R. 42) extending the provisions of an act entitled "An act relating to arrears of taxes in the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1887, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It declares that the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act relating to arrears of taxes in the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1887, shall be extended so as to apply to all general taxes in arrear on the 1st day of July, 1888, and to all special assessments due the District of Columbia, and which may be paid on or before the 1st day of July, 1888.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISPOSAL OF FORT WALLACE RESERVATION.

The bill (S. 2005) to provide for the disposal of the Fort Wallace military reservation in Kansas was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to amend section 1 by inserting after the words "range 39," in line 12:

And also plots numbered 36, 44, 48, 49, 51, and 52 in the city of Wallace as known and designated on the map of said city.

Mr. CALL. I object to that. That is special legislation granting privileges to a town.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not hear the Senator.

Mr. CALL. I understand it is granting certain privileges to a town.

Mr. PLUMB. The Fort Wallace military reservation was a tract of land in Kansas which was reserved by executive order for military purposes in 1864, and has not been occupied by the Government for the last six or seven years. About three years ago it was turned over to the Interior Department under a law of Congress, not being longer needed for military purposes. The Union Pacific Railway Company was on this land, and in the progress of time and by reason of the settlement of the country it became desirable to have some facilities for the transaction of business there, and people went in and squatted on the land adjacent to the depot and have adapted themselves to regular formation of streets and avenues, with a town on the reservation, although having no title.

This bill authorizes the entry of about 200 acres for town purposes under the general town-site act, for the benefit of the occupants only. It authorizes the city of Wallace to take for cemetery purposes 40 acres now used for a cemetery, and in which some soldiers and many immigrants and others are buried, and it authorizes the remainder of the tract to be entered under the general land laws of the United States, giving to the Secretary of the Interior the right to restrict the amount which any one may acquire to 40 acres within a certain distance from the town-site.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] asks me if the Secretary of the Interior has not done anything with the land since it has been turned over to him; and I say he has not. There is no desire to use it for any purpose. On the contrary, the Department desire that it shall be made subject to the settlement laws. It is now occupied by forty or fifty families who have settled upon it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT HELENA, MONT.

The bill (S. 1941) for the erection of a public building at Helena, Mont., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest that on this call of the Calendar, where there are amendments reported, the first formal reading be dispensed with and the amendments reported be acted on as they are reached in the reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection that order will be made, and amendments will be acted on as they are reached in the reading of the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments, in line 4, after the word "site," to strike out "for" and insert "if necessary;" in line 9, before the word "Government," to insert "necessary;" and after the word "Government" to strike out "offices" and insert "uses;" and in line 13, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "eighty;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase a site, if necessary, and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the Legislature, the governor and secretary, United States courts, internal-revenue offices, post-office, United States marshal's office, and other necessary Government uses, at Helena, Mont. The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed, for the site and building complete, the sum of $80,000, which said sum is hereby appropriated therefor: Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than 40 feet, including streets and alleys; and no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN N. QUACKENBUSH.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I appeal to the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL.] I ask to call up the motion made by him to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill (S. 1226) touching the grade of commander in the Navy, and to correct an error in relation to an appointment therein. I have the record from the Secretary's desk showing that the bill has been returned from the House of Representatives, having been sent there, and is on the Calendar with a pending motion to reconsider. I ask now that that motion to reconsider shall be taken up, and I will not ask that the Senate go into a debate on the subject. I hope that will satisfy the Senator from Florida.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is that in order?

Mr. CALL. I have no objection to the motion to reconsider being called up. If the Senator wishes it to go on the Calendar I have no objection. But the unanimous consent under which we are proceeding is for the consideration of bills on the Calendar, I think. If the Senator will make his motion towards the close of the day I shall have no objection; indeed, I have none now, but other Senators wish to go on with the Calendar.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I will not be an objector to considering the Calendar; but I can not see why we should not take up that motion to reconsider, and have a yea-and-nay vote upon it. I did not consent for one, and yet I did not object to any arrangement; but I did not know that any particular rule prevailed until this moment. I think when a motion to reconsider has lain upon the table it ought to have some proper consideration. You only give a Senator three days in which to make a motion for reconsideration, and certainly when the motion is made and has lain on the table, the matter should be settled.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The practice in regard to a motion to reconsider has been that it is regarded as to a certain extent a privileged motion, but not to affect the course of business. The rules, however, do not permit debate on it. The Chair would suppose that under the order which has been taken, the motion of the Senator from Virginia would not be strictly in order to-day, but the Chair has no authority to enforce a unanimous agreement.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. A mere motion to take up I know is not debatable; but can I not make a motion to take up the motion to reconsider?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia undoubtedly has the right under the rule to make the motion he does. In connection with that, however, the Chair would state that it would be in violation strictly of a unanimous agreement of the Senate that the consideration of cases on the Calendar under Rule VIII be continued for this day.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I do not want to interfere with any proceeding ordered by the Senate. I was not here when the agreement was made to proceed with the Calendar. I shall not press the matter now, but will ask the Senate at the first opportunity to take up this motion to reconsider.

PETER MARCK, THOMAS J. WRIGHT, AND OTHERS.

The bill (H. R. 3597) for the relief of Peter March, Thomas J. Wright, administrator, and others, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment of certain amounts to persons named as compensation in full for time and commutation for rations while held as prisoners of war after being captured from the steam-boat Prima Donna, in 1864, as will appear in the findings of facts by the Court of Claims in Congressional case No. 123, certified to the committee by that court on the 18th of February, 1886 (Miscellaneous Document No. 126).

Mr. MANDERSON. The word "March," where it occurs in the fifteenth line, and in the title of the act, should be "Marck," and I ask that that amendment be made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Peter Marck, Thomas J. Wright, administrator, and others."

EMMA H. FISH.

Mr. COCKRELL. The next order of business, the bill (S. 1445) for the relief of Emma H. Fish, is reported adversely.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be passed over.

SAMUEL STRONG.

The joint resolution (S. R. 26) to arbitrate and settle the questions at issue between the District of Columbia and Samuel Strong was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the matters in controversy, as shown by the pleadings, between the District of Columbia and Samuel Strong, known in the circuit court of the District of Columbia as causes at law numbered 14706 and 14736, be submitted to the arbitration of three persons to be appointed by the President of the United States, and the award of said arbitrators, or a majority of them, shall be final and conclusive as to the matters in issue between the parties under the pleadings in said causes, which award shall be filed in the papers of the said causes in the district court of the District of Columbia, and noted on the records of said court, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed, should the award be in favor of the said Samuel Strong, to pay said award, when duly certified to him by the clerk of said court, in the same manner that judgments against the District of Columbia are paid when rendered by the Court of Claims.

SEC. 2. That it shall be lawful for said arbitrators to consider any competent evidence heretofore taken either before any of the courts where said causes were pending, or before any of the referees heretofore appointed, including the evidence taken before William Penn Clark, Albert E. Payne, and Edward Clark, and if, in the judgment of said arbitrators, further evidence shall be deemed necessary, the same may be taken by them, under the rules now governing the taking of evidence, to be used before the courts of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 3. That before the President of the United States shall appoint the said arbitrators, the said Samuel Strong shall consent in writing to the selection of the said arbitrators as provided in this joint resolution, and, further, that any award made by them, or a majority of them, shall be final and conclusive as to matter in issue between the parties to these causes, which consent shall be entered of record in the court in which the cases are pending, and shall be certified by the clerk of said court to the President of the United States.

SEC. 4. That the said arbitrators in passing upon any questions of law involved in the pleadings in said causes shall be controlled and guided in making their award by any judgment or decision heretofore rendered in the said causes, or either of them, by the supreme court of the District of Columbia in general term, and in stating the account between the parties shall credit the District of Columbia with the face value of the certificates issued.

SEC. 5. That the compensation of said arbitrators shall not exceed the sum of $1,000 each.

Mr. FAULKNER. In line 3 of section 3 there is a typographical error which I desire to correct. In that line I move to strike out the word "selection" and insert "appointment;" so as to read:

The said Samuel Strong shall consent in writing to the appointment of the said arbitrators, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FAULKNER. In line 3 of section 4 I move to strike out the words "be controlled" and insert "follow." This is merely a verbal correction. In the same line I move to strike out "guided" and insert "bound."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

BERNARD AND ANTHONY LAFFOND.

The bill (H. R. 4556) to confirm New Madrid location survey, No. 2889, and to provide for issue of patent therefor, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to confirm the action of the recorder of land titles of Missouri, in the case of Bernard and Anthony Laffond, under the act of Congress approved February 17, 1815, in pursuance of which survey numbered 2889 was made, and patent certificate issued by the recorder of land titles, numbered 367, as the same are now on file in the General Land Office of the United States. A patent is to issue therefor, as in other cases, according to the survey, any question of the regularity of the proceedings, in view of the absence of the relinquishment of one of the original owners, to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The last clause of this bill seems to present a question which I should like to have some explanation about. This directs a patent to be issued to the parties named in the bill. It says:

And patent shall issue therefor, as in other cases, according to said survey any question of the regularity of the proceedings, in view of the absence of the relinquishment of one of the original owners to the contrary notwithstanding.

That would seem to involve a judicial question, or a question of personal rights in connection with this land, and if so, we are to have it resolved by an act of Congress. I would like to have the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] explain that provision of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will explain it. The New Madrid law was passed in 1815, granting to certain persons whose lands were injured by the earthquake other lands in lieu. The recorder of land titles, created under one of the laws in regard to the disposal of the Louisiana purchase, was a judicial officer. He was not a mere register or receiver. This law declared that these sufferers by the earthquake should appear before the recorder, and should file their proof, and that he should seal a certificate of location, and then they should go and locate the land and report back to him, and then he was to direct the surveyor-general of the Territory of Missouri, as it was then, to make a survey of the land; and when the survey was returned to his office he issued what was called a patent certificate for the land.

In this case all this was complied with fully, but after the patent certificate was sent to the General Land Office the General Land Office made a rule that they would go back of the action of the recorder of land titles and inquire whether the sufferers by the earthquake had made a written relinquishment of their title to the injured land back to the Government. That is what the Land Office here required. They investigated whether the owners of the injured land had made a written conveyance back to the United States of the title to the injured land. The law said explicitly:

And provided also, That in every case where such location shall be made according to the provisions of this act, the title of the person or persons to the land injured as aforesaid shall revert to, and become absolutely vested in, the United States.

They made that requirement and went to the recorder's office of the county where the records had been destroyed, and they found that out of 300 arpents there was supposed to be an outstanding title, in some man, for 60 arpents, and they would not issue the patent in consequence of it. It is to remove that technical objection of the Department here that this bill has been presented. The parties have been in uninterrupted and unbroken possession of this land for sixty-three years. This man who is supposed to have some outstanding interest in 60 arpents of the 300 that were injured has never made any claim, directly or indirectly; and the recorder certified that he had evidence before him that these parties were the real owners of the injured land.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If that is the only obstacle in the way of the issuance of this patent I shall not object to the passage of this bill, inasmuch as the issuance of the patent, under the operation of this bill, can not affect any right that the party referred to may have.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly not.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Because that must be judicially determined, and the issuance of the patent under this act would bring about an earlier resolution of that than it would without. Therefore I shall not object.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL CEMETERY AT PINEVILLE, LA.

The bill (H. R. 1481) making an appropriation to construct a road and approaches from Pineville, La., to the national cemetery near that town was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

KATE Q. DALZELL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1338) granting an increase of pension to Kate Q. Dalzell. It proposes to increase the pension of Kate Q. Dalzell, widow of James E. B. Dalzell, late adjutant of the Fourth Regiment of Pennsylvania Cavalry Volunteers, to $50 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK.

The bill (S. 283) to amend sections 2474 and 2475 of the Revised Statutes of the United States setting apart a certain tract of land lying near the headwaters of the Yellowstone River as a public park was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Territories with amendments.

Mr. MANDERSON. I understand that by unanimous consent the bill is being read with the amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOLPH in the chair). The amendments will be stated as they are reached in the reading of the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment reported by the Committee on Territories was, in section 2, line 1, after the word "hereafter," to strike out "be known as 'The National Park' and;" in line 9, after the word "district," to strike out "of" and insert "in which said park is hereby located in;" in line 10, after the word "the," to strike out "Territories" and insert "Territory;" and in the same line, after "Wyoming," to strike out "or Montana, in which the park or any part thereof is located;" so as to read:

SEC. 2. That the said park shall hereafter be under the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, and that all the laws applicable to places under the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, except so far as modified by this act, shall be in full force and effect in said park. That nothing in this act shall be construed to forbid the service in the park of any civil or criminal process of any court having jurisdiction in the county or district in which said park is hereby located in the Territory of Wyoming.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 30, before the word "committee," to strike out "felonies" and insert "indictable offenses;" so as to read:

All fugitives from justice taking refuge in said park shall be subjected to the same laws as refugees from justice found in the Territory of Wyoming; that until otherwise provided by the laws of Wyoming Territory, the said park, for all the purposes of this act, shall remain and constitute a part of the third judicial district of said Territory; and the district court of the said judicial district, when exercising the jurisdiction of a district or circuit court of the United States, shall have jurisdiction of all indictable offenses committed within said park.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 2, after the word "park," to strike out "shall be" and insert "is hereby;" after the word "park," at the end of line 4, to strike out "pleasure ground;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That all of the territory embraced within the limits of the park is hereby reserved and withdrawn from settlement, occupancy, or sale under the laws of the United States, and dedicated and set apart as a public park for the benefit and enjoyment of the people of the United States; and the territory so set apart shall be under the control of the Secretary of the Interior, and subject to all the provisions of sections numbered 2474 and 2475 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, except as herein otherwise provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, line 17, after the word "troops," to insert "to act as superintendent of the park under the instructions of the Secretary of the Interior and;" in line 18, after the word "to," to strike out "appoint" and insert "employ;" and in line 19, after the word "exceeding," to strike out "three" and insert "five;" so as to read:

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Interior shall make and publish such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary and proper for the management and care of the park, especially for the preservation from injury or spoliation of all timber, mineral deposits, natural curiosities, or wonderful objects within said park, and for the protection of the animals and birds in the park to prevent their capture or destruction. He shall cause all persons trespassing upon the park to be removed therefrom, and shall take all measures which he may think necessary to carry out the purposes of this act; and the Secretary of War is hereby directed to make such detail of troops as the Secretary of the Interior, with the approval of the President, may require to preserve order, protect the game and objects of curiosity and interest and the public property, and enforce the rules and regulations for the government of the park. It shall also be the duty of the officer in command of such troops to act as superintendent of the park under the instructions of the Secretary of the Interior, and to employ not exceeding five persons from civil life to act as policemen and scouts within the park, who shall be familiar with the roads and trails and well acquainted with the different localities therein, and who shall receive not more than $900 each annually for their services.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, line 23, after the word "services," to strike out "to be paid from the Treasury upon certificate of such commanding officer, and the approval of the Secretary of the Interior indorsed thereon," and insert in lieu thereof:

And the Secretary of the Interior shall make annual estimates for the payment of the salaries of the said policemen and scouts, for their proper equipment and for other incidental expenses, and for the care and preservation of the park, the same to be disbursed according to the provisions of law by the officer in command of the troops charged with the protection of the park. All sums received by the Secretary of the Interior from rents in the park, or arising from fines or forfeitures for violation of the laws and regulations made for the government of said park, shall constitute a separate fund and be applied to the care and preservation of the park in its natural condition, and to provide for the convenience and safety of visitors; and the officer or officers collecting said forfeitures shall pay the same to the Secretary of the Interior for the purpose aforesaid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, line 9, before the word "nets" to strike out "seins" and insert "seines;" in line 11, after the word "than," to strike out "twenty" and insert "fifty;" and in line 12, before the word "hundred," to strike out "one" and insert "two;" so as to read:

SEC. 5. That all hunting, or the killing, wounding, or capturing, at any time, of any wild animal or bird, except dangerous animals, when it is necessary to prevent them from destroying human life or inflicting an injury, is prohibited within the limits of said park; nor shall any fish be taken out of the waters of the park by means of seines, nets, traps, or by the use of drugs or any explosive substances or compounds, or in any other way than by hook and line. Any person willfully violating the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction, shall be fined for each offense not less than $50 nor more than $200, or by imprisonment for not more than three months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, line 29, after the words "in the name of the United States," to strike out:

The amount collected from the party offending to be paid into the Treasury of the United States;

So as to read:

Any person or persons, or stage, express, or railroad company receiving for transportation any of the said animals, birds, or fish shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall forfeit and pay for every such offense the sum of $250, to be recovered by a proceeding in the nature of an information before any Territorial or United States district court within whose jurisdiction such offense was committed, or, when the offense is committed within the park, before the commissioner appointed under section 7 of this act; and it shall be the duty of the district attorney of the United States for such Territory or district to institute and prosecute said proceeding in the name of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, line 3, after the word "exceeding," to strike out "ten" and insert "twenty;" and in line 4, after the word "one," where it occurs the second time, to strike out "place" and insert "locality;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Interior may lease small portions of ground in the park, not exceeding 10 acres in extent for each tract, for a period not exceeding twenty years, to any one person or company at any one locality, on which may be erected hotels and out-houses and such other buildings as he may deem necessary for the use of the public.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, line 10, after the word "within," to strike out "one-quarter" and insert "one-eighth;" and in line 12, after the word "or," to strike out "within three hundred feet of;" so as to read:

But such lease shall not include any of the geysers or other objects of curiosity or interest in said park, or exclude the public from the free and convenient approach thereto, or include any ground within one-eighth of a mile of any of the geysers, the Yellowstone Falls, the Grand Cañon of the Yellowstone River, or the Mammoth Hot Spring; nor shall any hotel or other buildings be erected within the park until such lease shall be executed by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, line 15, after the words "Secretary of the Interior," to insert:

Provided, That such leases shall contain proper provisions for the forfeiture thereof in case of breach of any conditions or covenants therein contained: And also provided, That no such lease shall be assignable, nor shall said premises, or any part thereof, be sublet without the written consent of the Secretary of the Interior first had and obtained.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, line 10, after the word "any," to strike out "misdemeanor within the park" and insert "non-indictable offense, or with the violation of the rules and regulations, or with the violation of any provision of this act prescribed for the government of said park;" and in line 15, after the words "as in," to strike out "the next section" and insert "this statute;" so as to read:

That the President shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a commissioner, who shall reside in said park, and who shall have jurisdiction to hear and act upon all complaints made of any and all violations of the law or of the rules and regulations made by the Secretary of the Interior for the government of the park and the protection of the game and objects of interest therein. He shall have the power, upon sworn information, to issue process, in the name of the United States, for the arrest of any person charged with the commission of any non-indictable offense, or with the violation of the rules and regulations, or with the violation of any provision of this act prescribed for the government of said park, and to try the person so charged, and, if found guilty, to fix the punishment as in this statute provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, line 18, after the word "any," to strike out "felony" and insert "indictable offense;" and in line 30, after the word "like," to strike out "felonies" and insert "offenses;" so as to read:

The said commissioner shall also have power to issue process, as hereinbefore provided, for the arrest of any person charged with the commission of any indictable offense within the park, and to summarily hear the evidence adduced; and if he shall determine that probable cause is shown for holding the person so charged for trial, he shall cause such person to be safely conveyed to a secure place of confinement within the jurisdiction of the district court having jurisdiction as provided by the first section of this act, and shall certify the record of his proceedings and a transcript of the testimony in the case to said court, which court shall have jurisdiction of the case and proceed therein as provided by law in chapter 18, Title XIII, and chapter 3, Title LXX, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, the punishment inflicted to be the same as prescribed in said chapters for like offenses.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, line 33, before the word "park," to strike out the word "said" where it twice occurs; and in the same line, before the word "therein," to strike out the word "police" and insert "policeman;" so as to read:

All process issued by the commissioner shall be directed to any sheriff or constable in the counties of Montana or Wyoming nearest to said park, or to the policeman therein, who shall have the same power to execute the same as is vested in the marshals and deputy marshals of the district courts of the United States for the execution of writs from said courts; but nothing herein contained shall be construed as preventing the arrest without process of any person taken in the act of violating the law or any regulation for the government of the park.

Mr. VEST. I see that the word "policeman" is in the singular. I think it ought to be in the plural—"policemen." There will be more than one policeman under this bill in the Yellowstone Park. It ought to be "policemen."

Mr. MANDERSON. Yes; it ought to be in the plural.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the amendment will be so modified. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Territories was, in section 7, line 46, after the word "Territories," to insert "and no other compensation, fee, or allowance;" so as to read:

The forms and proceedings had before said commissioner shall conform, as near as may be, to the forms and proceedings in criminal cases before commissioners appointed by the courts of the United States as now provided by law; and the said commissioner shall receive the annual salary of $2,000, to be paid quarterly, as in the case of judges of Territorial courts for the respective Territories, and no other compensation, fee, or allowance.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 8, line 4, after the words "Department of Justice," to strike out "and;" so as to read:

That all costs and expenses arising in cases under this act and properly chargeable to the United States, shall be certified by the commissioner to the Department of Justice; if approved by the proper officers of that Department, shall be paid by the marshal of the United States for the Territory of Wyoming as other such costs in the United States courts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 8, line 7, before the word "violation," to insert the word "willful;" so as to read:

The willful violation of any regulation made and published by the Secretary of the Interior, etc.

Mr. VEST. I hope that amendment will not be agreed to. I think that is a very objectionable phrase to use in any enactment. It leaves a loophole for the escape of every offender. As a matter of course, unless the intent exists there can be no punishment; that is an axiomatic principle of law; but if you insert the word "willful" it opens the door to proof being admitted, and to the claim being asserted that unless the party did the act willfully, without knowing what the law was, for instance, he should not be punished. To my judgment it violates all the principles of law in quasi criminal proceedings.

Mr. MANDERSON. I quite agree with the Senator from Missouri in his suggestion, and as the one who reported the bill I hope the amendment will not be agreed to by the Senate.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment of the Committee on Territories was, in section 8, line 9, after the word "park," to strike out "and the protection of the animals, birds, fish;" and in line 11, after the words "declared to be," to strike out "a misdemeanor" and insert "an offense;" so as to read:

The violation of any regulation made and published by the Secretary of the Interior in regard to the control and management of the park and the property therein is hereby declared to be an offense, and the party convicted shall be punished for each offense by a fine of not more than $100, and be committed until such fine is paid, or by imprisonment for not more than three months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 10, line 2, after the word "engineers," to insert "who shall reside in the park at least three months in each year, and;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of War shall detail an officer from the Corps of Engineers, who shall reside in the park at least three months in each year, and whose duty it shall be to survey and lay out suitable roads in said park and select the proper location for bridges therein; and the Secretary of War shall, upon the report of said officer, make annual estimates for the cost of such improvements, and communicate the same to Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 10, line 8, after the word "Congress," to strike out:

With such other recommendations in regard to the park as he may deem proper; and all sums received by the Secretary of the Interior from rents in the park, or arising from fines or forfeitures for violation of the laws and regulations made for the government of said park and protection of animals, birds, fish, and public property therein, shall constitute a separate fund and shall be applied to the improvements hereinbefore mentioned; and the officer or officers collecting said fines and forfeitures shall pay the same to the Secretary of the Interior for the purpose aforesaid.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANDERSON. That disposes of all the amendments proposed by the committee. I move, in section 7, line 31, after the word "to," to strike out the words "any sheriff or constable in the counties of Montana or Wyoming nearest to said park, or to the policemen therein," and to insert in lieu thereof, "the marshal of the United States for the Territories of Montana or Wyoming, or to the policemen herein provided for."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REV. CORYDON MILLARD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary calls the attention of the Chair to the fact that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER], who reported this bill, left an amendment changing the name, which he will now report.

The SECRETARY. In line 6 strike out "Oredsnick" and insert "Ouradnik."

Mr. DAVIS. That is undoubtedly right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Frank Ouradnik."

JOHN M'KERNAN.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1325) for the relief of John McKernan. It proposes to place the name of John McKernan, of the Soldiers' Home, Washington, on the pension-roll, on account of disability contracted while in the service of the United States as a second-class private of ordnance in the Ordnance Department of the Army, at Benicia Arsenal, California.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROBERT H. STURGESS.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, in section 1, line 8, after the word "sum," to insert the words "to wit, the sum of $200,000;" so as to read:

That the amount heretofore fixed as the limit of cost for the erection of a public building by the United States Government at Troy, N. Y., be, and the same is hereby, increased to $500,000, and that sum is hereby fixed as the limit of cost for the erection of said building and for the payment for the site thereof; and said additional sum, to wit, the sum of $200,000, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be used and expended for the purposes provided in this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING IN SAN FRANCISCO.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SIOUX CITY, IOWA.

The bill (S. 288) for the erection of a public building at Sioux City, Iowa, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 4, after the word "purchase," to insert the words "or acquire by condemnation;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase, or acquire by condemnation, a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the United States district and circuit courts, internal-revenue office, post-office, and other Government offices, at the city of Sioux City, Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 12, before the word "hundred," to strike out "one" and insert "two;" so as to read:

The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed for the site and building complete the sum of $250,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 21, before the word "hundred," to strike out "one" and insert "two;" and in the same line, after the word "hundred," to insert "and fifty;" so as to read:

And no purchase of site, nor plan for said building, shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $250,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 21, after the word "Provided," to insert:

That of said sum not exceeding $50,000 shall be expended for the acquisition of said site: And provided further.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 34, before the word "hundred," to strike out "one" and insert "two;" so as to read:

For the purpose of this act the sum of $250,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CHEYENNE, WYO.

The bill (S. 1333) for the erection of a public building at Cheyenne, Wyo., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, in line 4, after the word "purchase," to insert the words "or acquire by condemnation;" so as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase, or acquire by condemnation, a site for, and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the post-office and other Government offices, at the city of Cheyenne, Wyo. The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed for the site and building complete the sum of $80,000, which sum is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That the site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than 40 feet, including streets and alleys; and no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY L. WILLIAMS.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COLUMBIA RIVER BRIDGE.

The bill (S. 560) to authorize the Columbia River Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Columbia River between the State of Oregon and the Territory of Washington, and to establish it as a post-road, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 6, line 3, after the word "whenever," to strike out the word "Congress" and insert the words "the Secretary of War;" so as to read:

That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act, or to require any changes in such structure, or its entire removal at the expense of the owners thereof whenever the Secretary of War shall decide that the public interest requires it, and the right to prescribe such rules and regulations in regard to toll and otherwise, as may be deemed reasonable, are expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add as an additional section:

SEC. 7. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPRESENTATIVES OF S. W. MARSTON.

The bill (S. 464) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to settle the claims of the legal representatives of S. W. Marston, late United States Indian agent at Union agency, Indian Territory, for services and expenses was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to cause to be examined and audited the claims of the legal representatives of S. W. Marston, late United States Indian agent at Union agency, Indian Territory, for services rendered and expenses incurred by him in the months of July, August, September, and October, 1878, which claims were transmitted to the office of Indian Affairs about November in that year, and to pay to his legal representatives whatever sum of money may be found to be justly due to him for such services and expenses, not exceeding in amount $448.10.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ST. LOUIS AND SAN FRANCISCO RAILWAY COMPANY.

The bill (S. 1697) to grant the right of way through the Indian Territory to the St. Louis and San Francisco Railway Company, for the purpose of constructing a railway, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 13, after the word "river," to strike out "in the Chickasaw Nation," and insert "at or near said Denison;" so as to read:

That the St. Louis and San Francisco Railway Company, a corporation duly created and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Missouri, be, and the same is hereby, authorized to survey, locate, construct, own, operate, and maintain a railway and telegraph and telephone line through the Indian Territory, beginning at a point on the St. Louis and San Francisco Railway, as now constructed, near Kosomo station, in Jacks Fork County, Choctaw Nation, Indian Territory, thence by the most practicable route southwestwardly in the general direction of Denison, in the State of Texas, to a point on Red River, at or near said Denison, the estimated length of said road being about 75 miles; with the right to construct, use, and maintain such tracks, turn-outs, and sidings as said company shall deem it to its interest to construct on and along the right of way and depot grounds hereby granted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] to the suggestion of the Secretary, that in line 12 of section 6 the word "month" should be "months;" so as to read "within six months thereafter." The correction will be made, if there is no objection.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, in section 9, line 3, before the word "years," to strike out "three" and insert "two," and after the word "act," in the same line, to insert "and the remainder thereof in one year thereafter;" so as to read:

That the said railway company shall build at least 25 miles of its said railway in said Territory within two years after the passage of this act, and the remainder therof in one year thereafter, or this grant shall be forfeited as to the portion not built; that said railway company shall construct and maintain continually all highway crossings wherever said highways may cross said railway's roadbed, or may be by the proper authorities laid out across the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add to section 10 the following additional proviso:

And provided further, That nothing in this act contained shall be construed to impair any rights granted by law to the Choctaw Coal and Railway Company.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to ask the Senator from Massachusetts what rights are covered by this second proviso at the close of section 10, which reads:

And provided further, That nothing in this act contained shall be construed to impair any rights granted by law to the Choctaw Coal and Railway Company.

Mr. DAWES. The Choctaw Coal and Railway Company is a corporation which we have previously authorized to go through that Territory in that vicinity. I think it is a useless provision, but still for the purpose of greater caution it was put in, so that the other company, which preceded this in constructing a railroad in that vicinity, might not be construed to have any rights it had cut off. No rights that I know of would be affected, but the provision was inserted in order to quiet all apprehension that either of them was authorized to go through there for the purpose of cutting the other out, and that each might have its rights.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It seemed to me that there might be some difficulty growing out of this proviso in connection with the power of Congress over the legislation under which that company takes its rights, inasmuch as it expressly provides "that nothing in this act contained shall be construed to impair any rights granted by law to the Choctaw Coal and Railway Company," which would seem to except it from the operation of the last section of the bill, which provides "that Congress may at any time amend, add to, alter, or repeal this act."

Mr. DAWES. The same provision was in the other bill.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. That is what I wish to understand. Otherwise it might be held that this exemption in the second proviso of the tenth section would take that company out of the operation of the last section of this bill.

Mr. DAWES. I speak from memory, not having the other bill before me, but I know it has been the purpose of the committee to report no bill which has not that provision.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The provision is identical.

Mr. DAWES. I think so.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. That is what I desired to be assured of.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. It is the very same.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to the fact that there is a difference in the spelling of the name of a place in the first and second sections of the bill. In section 1 it is "Kosomo," and in section 2 it is "Kosoma."

Mr. DAWES. I do not know which is right. Perhaps for variety sake it might be left as it is. I do not know which is the right spelling of the name. If no Senator knows which way to spell it, I would leave both spellings as they are.

Mr. COCKRELL. In section 5, line 36, after the word "prohibit," the word "any" should be inserted. I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. In line 8 of section 6 I move to strike out the words "aid of" and to insert "said;" so as to read: "shown by said maps."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. In line 11 of the same section, after the words "herein provided for," I move to insert a comma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BOUNDARIES OF KANSAS.

The bill (S. 1633) to extend the southern and western boundaries of the State of Kansas, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGREEMENT WITH INDIANS IN MONTANA.

The bill (S. 1824) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Gros Ventre, Piegan, Blood, Blackfeet, and River Crow Indians in Montana was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] who reported this bill is absent, and at his request I ask unanimous consent to substitute for it in consideration Order of Business 674, a House bill on the same subject, and to consider that instead of Senate bill No. 1824.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the House bill will be considered.

The bill (H. R. 1956) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Gros Ventre, Piegan, Blood, Blackfeet, and River Crow Indians in Montana was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DAWES. I ask that by unanimous consent the long list of Indian names signed to the agreement be omitted in the reading of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the reading of the names will be dispensed with.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment to insert as an additional section the following:

SEC. 3. The lands to which the right of the Indians is extinguished under the foregoing agreement are a part of the public domain of the United States and are open to the operation of the laws regulating homestead entry, except section 2301 of the Revised Statutes, and to entry under the laws governing the disposal of coal lands and mineral lands; but are not open to entry under any other laws regulating the sale or disposal of the public domain.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOWEN. I offer several sections as an amendment.

The proposed amendment was read, as follows:

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to appoint two commissioners who, with the agent of the Southern Ute Indians of Southwestern Colorado, shall constitute a commission, a majority of whom shall constitute a quorum, whose duty it shall be to negotiate an agreement with the Southern Ute Indians, for the removal of said Indians from their present reservation in Southwestern Colorado to such other place outside of said State as may be agreed upon by said commission and said Indians. The consent of two-thirds of the adult male Southern Ute Indians shall be necessary to the consummation of such agreement, which consent shall be made manifest in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior shall direct. When such agreement shall have been made and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, said Southern Ute Indians shall be removed from their present reservation, subject to the provisions set forth in this act: Provided, That if it shall be agreed to remove said Southern Ute Indians to the Uintah Valley reservation, in the Territory of Utah, instead of elsewhere, the consent of two-thirds of the adult male Indians of said Uintah Valley shall first be had, such consent to be made manifest in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may direct. The reservation so selected, when agreed to by said commission and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, shall, upon the removal and settlement of said Indians thereon, constitute the reservation for the Southern Ute Indians, to be held by said Indians by the same title and tenure as they now hold the lands from which they may be removed: Provided further, That the President may, in his discretion, reduce the area of said reservation if in his judgment it shall be found to be out of proportion to the number of Indians settled thereon and greater than their actual needs require: Provided further, That all improvements heretofore made by any settler who has made settlement in person upon any lands that may be included in said reservation, and has inhabited and improved the same, and erected a dwelling thereon, with the intention of acquiring title to the lands so occupied by him, under the laws of the United States, shall be appraised by said commission, and the rightful owners thereof shall be paid the appraised value of their respective improvements, by the Secretary of the Interior, upon satisfactory proof of such bona fide settlement, residence, and improvement; and for that purpose the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; and upon such payment being made all such settlers shall be required to remove from said reservation.

SEC. 5. That all improvements heretofore made by any Indian upon said present reservation shall be appraised by said commission, and shall, after such appraisement, be sold, for cash in hand, at public auction, at the city of Durango, county of La Plata, State of Colorado, by the agent for said Southern Ute Indians, to the highest bidder: Provided, That in no case shall such improvements be sold for less than such appraised value. That before said agent shall make such sales he shall give public notice thereof by publication in one or more weekly newspapers published in the city of Durango, aforesaid, and in one or more daily newspapers published in the city of Denver, Colo., for not less than six consecutive weeks, which notice shall state the time, place, and terms of such sales, and the name of each Indian whose improvements are to be sold. The improvements of each Indian shall be sold separately, and the proceeds of each sale shall be paid by said agent to the Indian whose improvements shall be so sold. That said agent shall give to each purchaser a receipt for the amount of money paid, which receipt shall entitle the holder thereof to the prior right to take possession of said improvements, and the land upon which the same may be situated, not exceeding 160 acres, and the right to perfect his title to said land under existing laws relating to homesteads and pre-emptions. The improvements so purchased shall, upon final proof, be treated and held to have been made by such purchaser.

SEC. 6. That all buildings and improvements at and about the present Southern Ute agency shall be sold as a whole, under the order and direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to the highest bidder, for cash, upon such public notice as he may prescribe, and the proceeds of such sale covered into the Treasury of the United States. The purchaser of such improvements shall be entitled to take possession of the same, and the land upon which the same may be situated, not exceeding 160 acres, and the prior right to settle on and perfect his title to said land under existing laws relating to homesteads and pre-emptions. The improvements so purchased shall, upon final proof, be treated and held to have been made by such purchaser

SEC. 7. That the lands embraced within the limits of the present Southern Ute reservation, in the southwestern part of the State of Colorado, shall, immediately after the removal of said Southern Ute Indians therefrom as provided for in this act, be held and deemed to be public lands of the United States, and subject to disposal under the homestead and mineral land laws of the United States providing for the disposal of the public lands under such laws, except that the lands taken under the homestead act shall be paid for at the rate of $1 per acre, and the proceeds arising from the disposal of such lands shall be set apart and held as a perpetual trust fund for the benefit of said Southern Ute Indians, to be paid and disposed of in such manner as is or may be hereafter provided by law: Provided, That the Government of the United States shall first be reimbursed from such fund for the expenses incurred and payments made under sections 1 and 11 of this bill.

SEC. 8. That the rights of the said Southern Ute Indians shall be the same after removal to their new reservation designated by this act as if no change of location had been made, and all treaties, agreements, and laws now in force affecting their interests and rights shall be deemed and held as unimpaired and unchanged.

SEC. 9. That the members of the commission who shall be appointed under the provisions of this act shall receive compensation for their services at the rate of $10 per diem while actually engaged in the performance of their duties, in addition to their actual traveling and other necessary expenses: Provided, That the agent of said Southern Utes shall receive no compensation except his regular salary and his necessary traveling and other expenses.

SEC. 10. That the Secretary of the Interior shall appoint a clerk for said commission, at a salary of $200 per month, in addition to his actual traveling and other necessary expenses, and who shall give bond in such amount and with such sureties as may be prescribed by the said Secretary of the Interior. Such clerk shall, in addition to his duties as such, act as disbursing officer for said commission.

SEC. 11. That said commission shall choose an interpreter, whose compensation shall be fixed by said commission, subject, however, to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 12. That if any of the said band or tribe of Southern Ute Indians shall not desire to be removed to the new reservation, as provided for in this act, but desires to remain on the present reservation, he or she shall be permitted to select and settle upon lands in the said reservation now occupied by them, in accordance with the provisions of chapter 119, 24 Statutes at Large, approved February 8, 1887; and the selection and settlement upon any land in said reservation by any of the said Indians shall be in accordance with the provisions of the said act, and allotments shall be made to them as provided therein.

SEC. 13. That the Secretary of the Interior shall make all needful rules and regulations for carrying this act into effect.

SEC. 14. That for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into effect the following sums, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and they are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior as follows, namely: For the payment of the salary of the commissioners, the clerk, and the interpreter, and the necessary traveling and other expenses of said commission, said clerk, said interpreter, and said agent, the sum of $13,000; for the cost of removal and settlement of said Southern Ute Indians, defining the boundaries of their new reservation, building agency house and other necessary buildings and fences, $37,000.

SEC. 15. That after the removal of said Southern Ute Indians, as provided for in this act, the Secretary of the Interior may, at his discretion, if said Indians so desire, invest any or all money said Indians may be entitled to receive, from time to time, in sheep for their use, in lieu of cattle, horses, and agricultural implements.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN].

Mr. DAWES. I wish the Senator from Colorado would not offer that amendment to this bill. It is an independent subject-matter which has been considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs, and a bill substantially like that has been reported and is on the Calendar. This is a House bill, and it ought not to be encumbered, as it may be, with this matter. If the Senator insists on offering it, I shall propose an additional section. I shall be compelled to oppose very strongly the adoption of this amendment without the additional section which I offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment, offered by the Senator from Massachusetts, will be read.

The Secretary read the proposed amendment to the amendment, as follows:

SEC. —. No action shall be taken under any agreement made with or concerning the Southern Ute Indians of Southwestern Colorado by authority of this act until such agreement shall have been reported to and ratified by Congress.

Mr. DAWES. I move that as an addition to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the preamble.

The preamble was agreed to.

Mr. BOWEN. The title should be amended by adding "and for other purposes."

The amendment to the title was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and ask a conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes.

The motion was agreed to; and, by unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. DAWES, Mr. DANIEL, and Mr. STOCKBRIDGE were appointed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOLPH in the chair). The bill (S. 1824) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Gros Ventre, Piegan, Blood, Blackfeet, and River Crow Indians in Montana will be indefinitely postponed.

THOMAS G. CORBIN.

The bill (S. 1232) for the relief of Thomas G. Corbin was announced as next in order.

Mr. REAGAN. I object to the consideration of that bill.

Mr. CAMERON. I trust the Senator will withdraw his objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

Mr. CAMERON. I ask that the bill remain on the Calendar without prejudice, to be called up at some other time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection to that suggestion, and the bill will retain its place on the Calendar.

SWAMP AND OVERFLOWED LAND GRANTS.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to ask unanimous consent to return to Order of Business 368. The Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] has indicated a disposition to withdraw his objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska asks to take up Order of Business 368, being Senate bill 758, which has been passed over.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 758) for the relief of purchasers and other grantees of the United States of certain swamp and overflowed lands, and to reimburse and indemnify certain States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment reported by the Committee on Public Lands in the nature of a substitute has been read.

Mr. CALL. I have examined the bill, and make no objection to it as amended by the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CALL. I move to amend the amendment, in line 12 of section 1, after the word "or," by inserting the words "to railroad corporations in such State."

Mr. PADDOCK. I have no objection to that amendment. The committee thought that point had been covered by the phraseology.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Florida state his amendment again?

Mr. CALL. In line 12 of section 1 of the amendment, after the word "or," I propose to insert "to railroad corporations in such State."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated from the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1 of the amendment, line 12, after the word "or," it is proposed to insert the words "to railroad corporations in such State;" so as to read:

And for all such lands as have been otherwise disposed of by the United States, except by grants to such States or to railroad corporations in such State, by homestead entries, etc.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask what would be the effect of that amendment.

Mr. CALL. The effect of the amendment is very simple. The provision now is:

And for all such lands as have been otherwise disposed of by the United States except by grants to such States.

Now I propose to insert "or to railroad corporations in such State;" in other words, if the United States has made grants to States embraced within the swamp-land grants, which grants have been given by the State to railroad corporations in the State, they shall be treated in the same manner.

Mr. SPOONER. That is all there is of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Should the word "State" be singular or plural?

Mr. CALL. It should be "in such State."

Mr. COCKRELL. "Such States" perhaps would be better.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on Public Lands report an amendment to strike out the preamble. The amendment will be agreed to, if there be no objection, and the preamble will be stricken out.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill to relieve purchasers of and to indemnify certain States for swamp and overflowed lands disposed of, and for other purposes."

EDWARD H. LEIB.

The bill (S. 119) for the relief of Edward H. Leib was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Military Affairs reported an amendment, in line 11, after the word "Army," to strike out "he would have held had he not been dismissed" and insert "held at the time of his dimissal;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of law regulating appointments in the Army are hereby suspended for the purposes of this act, and only so far as they affect Edward H. Leib, late captain, Fifth United States Cavalry, and brevet lieutenant-colonel, United States Army; and the President of the United States is hereby authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint said Edward H. Leib, late captain, Fifth United States Cavalry, to the grade and rank in the Army held at the time of his dismissal; and on account of his disabilities, incurred in the line of duty, the said Leib shall be placed upon the retired-list of the Army without regard to the limit fixed by law: Provided, That the said Leib shall receive no pay except from the date of appointment under this act, nor any pension from and after his full retirement as provided herein.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN W. GUMMO.

The bill (S. 120) for the relief of John W. Gummo was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to John W. Gummo, late of Company F, Twelfth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, $190, being the balance of bounty due him for services rendered the Government during the late war of the rebellion.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INCLOSURES AT GETTYSBURGH.

The joint resolution (S. R. 10) relating to the inclosure of certain points of especial interest on the battle-field of Gettysburgh, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that whenever the fence which now incloses Lafayette square, in the city of Washington is removed the Secretary of War shall deliver the same to the Gettysburgh Battle-field Memorial Association, at Gettysburgh, Pa., for the purpose of inclosing points of especial interest on the Gettysburgh battle-field.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WRECK OF STEAMER TALLAPOOSA.

The bill (S. 869) for the relief of the sufferers by the wreck of the United States steamer Tallapoosa was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CHANDLER. At the end of section 2, on page 5, I move to add the following additional proviso:

And provided further, That there shall be deducted from the sums allowed each of the parties named in this act whatever amounts may have been paid them under the provisions of existing law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS AT VALLEY FORGE.

The bill (S. 1803) in aid of the Centennial and Memorial Association of Valley Forge, and to secure the Washington headquarters mansion and grounds occupied by the Continental Army of 1877–'78, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $25,000 for the purpose of purchasing additional lands and improving and preserving them under the direction of the Centennial and Memorial Association of Valley Forge.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

EDWARD BRADEN AND JOB W. ANGUS.

The bill (S. 145) for the relief of Edward Braden and Job W. Angus was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay $2,006.17 to Edward Braden and Job W. Angus, that sum being found equitably due by the Court of Claims from the United States to Braden and Angus in the construction of quartermaster depot buildings at San Antonio, Tex., under contract of June 7, 1876, made between Braden and Angus and the Quartermaster-General.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

P. B. SINNOTT.

The bill (S. 570) for the relief of P. B. Sinnott, late Indian agent at Grande Ronde agency, State of Oregon, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Claims reported the bill with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to refund to P. B. Sinnott, late Indian agent at Grande Ronde agency, State of Oregon, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,146.39, being the amount of two judgments recovered against him and his sureties on his official bonds as such agent by the United States, in the district court of the United States for the district of Oregon, on the 15th day of January, A. D. 1886, and which amount was subsequently paid to the United States by said Sinnott pending the consideration by Congress of a bill for his relief, and is now covered into the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HEIR OF CATHERINE E. BABCOCK.

The bill (S. 1653) granting a pension to the heir of Catherine E. Babcock was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Catherine E. Babcock, widow of Maj. Charles P. Babcock, late of the Second Regiment Michigan Cavalry, at the rate of $40 a month, in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HEIR OF CONSTANTINO BRUMIDI.

The bill (S. 1764) for the relief of the heir of Constantino Brumidi was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Lawrence S. Brumidi, heir of the late Constantino Brumidi, $1,500, in five annual installments of $300 each, as payment in full for designs made by Constantino Brumidi for the embellishment of the belt of the Rotunda of the Capitol.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MONUMENT TO THE MOTHER OF WASHINGTON.

The bill (S. 1211) for the completion of the monument to Mary, the mother of Washington, at Fredericksburgh, Va., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $20,000, to be used in the completion of the unfinished monument to Mary, the mother of Washington, at Fredericksburgh, Va., and for grading and inclosing with stone curbing and iron fencing a space of 34 feet square around the base thereof, substantially in accordance with the recommendation of the Select Committee on the Washington National Monument in their report to the House of Representatives of June 1, 1874.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move to strike out section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. That this act shall be in force from its passage,

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DUPLICATES OF MEDALS.

The joint resolution (S. R. 39) authorizing and requiring the Secretary of the Treasury to have struck copies of certain medals, and to deliver the same to certain Departments and to the various States and Territories, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported from the Committee on the Library with amendments.

The first amendment was, in line 16, after the word "Washington," to insert "and to the Library of Congress;" so as to read:

And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required to distribute these complete sets, when made, as follows:

One set in the original metal, as first issued, to all the Executive Departments of the United States Government at Washington, and to the Library of Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 18, to strike out the duplicated word "and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the end of the joint resolution, to add:

And upon application to the superintendent of the mint at Philadelphia for a copy of any of the medals aforesaid, such copy shall be struck and furnished to such applicant upon his payment of the cost of the material and of the execution of such copy to be fixed by the superintendent of the mint.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to hear the preamble read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The preamble will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the preamble, as follows:

Whereas at various times, by order of the Congress of the United States, national medals have been issued in commemoration of great national events, deeds of valor of our naval and military heroes, important public services by citizens, and the administrations of our Presidents; and

Whereas it is believed that no complete set of these medals is in the possession of the United States Government, in the Mint or elsewhere; and

Whereas, in the interest of education and for historical reference, their careful preservation in some form accessible to all citizens is most important, as exact memorials of events and personages notable in our national history and to be remembered with patriotic pride: Therefore.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not care to inquire particularly into the possible expense of this work, but it will be very considerable. I doubt whether it is possible to carry out the joint resolution and furnish copies of all the medals which have been issued by the Government. But another consideration occurs to me. Perhaps the committee are satisfied upon that point. Unless there be something to mark these as duplicates and reproductions they will inevitably get into the market as originals, and be the objects of speculation, as we are providing by the joint resolution that anybody may order them. I do not know that it is worth while to have "duplicate" or "reproduction" or anything of that kind stamped upon the medals, but I submit that to the consideration of the committee.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

BRIDGES IN GEORGIA AND FLORIDA.

The bill (H. R. 3470) to authorize the construction of bridges over the rivers Saint Mary's, Satilla, Little Satilla, and Crooked, in the States of Georgia and Florida, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, in section 10, line 4, after the word "whenever," to strike out "Congress" and insert "the Secretary of War;" so as to make the section read:

That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved; and the right to require any changes in said structures, or their entire removal, at the expense of the owners thereof, whenever the Secretary of War shall decide that the public interest requires it, is also expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

REAR-ADMIRAL CARTER.

The bill (S. 71) for the relief of Rear-Admiral Carter was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to give Rear-Admiral Samuel P. Carter, of the United States Navy, the pay and compensation of a rear-admiral on the retired-list from and after the date of his promotion on the retired-list to the rank of rear-admiral.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the report read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLACKBURN February 24, 1888:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill for the relief of Rear-Admiral Carter, beg leave to submit the following report:

This is an anomalous case. Soon after the beginning of the late war (in July, 1861), S. P. Carter, then a lieutenant in the United States Navy and a citizen of Tennessee, was detached by the Secretary of the Navy and ordered to report to Hon. Simon Cameron, then Secretary of War, for special duty, and was by him directed to proceed to East Tennessee and organize and drill volunteers to be called into the service of the United States.

In September following he was made acting brigadier-general by General George H. Thomas, and was placed in command of the East Tennessee Brigade, which he (Lieutenant Carter) had organized.

On May 1, 1862, he was commissioned brigadier-general of United States Volunteers. He served during the war, being in command of brigades and divisions (infantry and cavalry), rising to the rank of major-general.

The records of the War and Navy Departments show that he performed his various duties with zeal and faithfulness. Early in 1866 he was honorably mustered out of the military service and returned to his duties in the Navy. In 1881 he was retired as commodore, and in the following year was nominated by the President, and confirmed by the Senate, as rear-admiral on the retired-list. During his service in the Army he, of course, lost all opportunity of being specially advanced in the Navy, as happened to numbers of his fellow-officers.

Believing, as the committee do, that this is an exceptional case and can not be considered as establishing any precedent for future action in such cases, because of the exceptionally distinguished and valuable services rendered by this officer, and believing, further, that it was not the intention of either the President or the Senate to confer a mere honor on this officer, whose whole record is so honorable, they, as an act of simple justice to him, recommend that this bill do pass.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have considered this case heretofore, and with every good wish for this admiral, and every personal liking for him, I do not think the bill is right. I do not suppose that my opinion will affect the Senate, but I feel bound to say that much.

This gentleman received the promotions and honors that belong to service in the Army while his fellows were fighting and working in the Navy; and now for him to go up ahead of those who were following their legitimate duties I do not think is fair. I say it with regret, because I have the greatest possible friendship and good-will to Admiral Carter. That is all I have to say.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I simply desire to say that it is true Lieutenant Carter received promotion more than once during the period he served in the Army, but at the end of the war he went back to his place in the Navy without any advancement. Whatever promotion he received in the military service as a soldier brought him no benefit after the war closed, and he went back to his old grade in the Navy.

One point more I want to call the attention of the Senate to, and it is this: Admiral Carter never asked to be detached from the Navy and assigned to duty in the Army. That was done without his request, without his connivance, and, so far as the record shows, without his wish. Believing that it was to the best interests of the service to do it, the Secretary of the Navy detached him, unsolicited, and ordered him to report to the then Secretary of War, who assigned him to the duty of raising and organizing and disciplining land forces in his State of Tennessee. He was then a lieutenant in the Navy. He worked his way (and we are forced to conclude that he did it because of his efficient service) to a brevet major-general's place in the Army. When the war closed he was mustered out of the military service and ordered to report back to the Navy Department where he was assigned precisely where he was three or four years before when the order of detachment came.

Whatever temporary advantage he may have gotten by reason of well-earned promotion in the military service, it brought no results to him in the profession of his life, which was that of a sailor.

He was nominated by the President to the grade and rank of a rear-admiral, and the Senate did advise and consent to that promotion. This bill does not propose to give him any rank that he does not hold to-day. It simply proposes to make good, so far as his remuneration and pay are concerned, the act of the President, confirmed by the action of the Senate, in conferring upon him this additional grade in the Navy. That is the whole object of the bill, and the committee felt warranted in recommending its passage.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Did he not while he was in the military service get the pay that belonged to the respective promoted ranks that he held?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly he did. I want to be fair about it. From 1861 to 1865, while he was detached from the Navy and in the Army, he did get the pay that attached to his promotions as they came to him one after the other; but after the war ended and he was ordered back to the Navy where he belonged, he went back shorn of all opportunities for promotion in the naval service, because he re-entered it in 1865 precisely where he left it in 1861. He lost all opportunity for promotion in the Navy, which was his life's profession.

This bill does not propose to give him any additional rank or promote him any further. The then President nominated him to the grade of rear-admiral, and the Senate advised and consented to that promotion. He holds that rank to-day. The only question presented by this bill, and the only point it seeks to accomplish, is to make this, not an empty honor conferred upon him by the President and Senate, but to give him the pay of a rear-admiral from the date that the Senate made him a rear-admiral in 1882.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does he not get the pay of rear-admiral from the time the President and Senate made him a rear-admiral? I should be glad to know where the law is that prevented that.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Here is the bill; it is only five lines long:

That Rear-Admiral Samuel P. Carter, of the United States Navy, be paid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the pay and compensation of a rear-admiral on the retired-list from and after the date of his promotion on the retired-list to the rank of rear-admiral.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Was he made a rear-admiral under a law?

Mr. BLACKBURN. A special act?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I can not answer. I have the report here before me. I can not say that it was by a special act.

Mr. VOORHEES. He ought to have pay from the time of his confirmation.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is the only point covered by the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It must be perfectly certain, unless there was a special act for a special individual under the circumstances as then supposed to be understood, that he got the pay of a rear-admiral on the retired-list from the time he became a rear-admiral on the retired-list, because that is the general law.

Mr. BLACKBURN. He only gets the pay of commodore.

Mr. HALE. A promotion on the retired-list of the Navy does not carry with it pay.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But this was not a promotion on the retired-list in the general course; but under some authority of law, special or general, this gentleman was made rear-admiral on the retired-list from a certain date.

Mr. HALE. That carries no pay. It requires specific legislation to carry pay for promotion on the retired-list.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But it was not a promotion on the retired-list, for he was not on the retired-list before; at least I so assume.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Senator from Vermont is mistaken. He was on the retired-list as commodore, and this was a promotion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then leaving the Army he became a commodore on the retired-list with the pay of a commodore.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the Senator will allow me, I will read, in answer to his suggestion, from the report:

Having passed through the grade of commander and captain, he was in 1878 promoted to commodore.

That was in 1878—

and in 1881 was retired in that grade.

He was retired in the grade of commodore. Then the promotion came to him on the retired-list, and under the law it carried no increase of pay.

Mr. EDMUNDS. When was he made a rear-admiral on the retired-list?

Mr. BLACKBURN. In 1882, but in 1878 he was made commodore, and in 1882 was retired as a commodore.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then from the time he left the Army and came back to the Navy he had got to be from a lieutenant to commodore on the active-list.

Mr. BLACKBURN. He passed the grades of commander and captain.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And was receiving in 1882 the pay of commodore on the active-list. Then he was retired, and afterwards he was promoted on the retired-list from commodore to rear-admiral, the general law providing that promotions on the retired-list do not carry increased pay; and now he wants increased pay for the time between the period when he was promoted on the retired-list to this time.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Senator states the case right.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why should not every other officer have the same thing? That is what I should be glad to know.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The Senator states the case exactly.

Mr. CAMERON. If the Senator will permit me a moment——

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. CAMERON. I will say that this gentleman, Admiral Carter, when he was sent to Tennessee, was sent there because he was a native of that region. He performed a duty there that no other man could perform, and having performed that he was prevented from the advance which he would have received in the Navy, thereby losing the position of rear-admiral on the active-list. He only became a commodore because his time was taken from him in the naval service and he performed military service.

Mr. DAWES. If I understand the case, he now receives the pay of a retired commodore.

Mr. CAMERON. He was retired as commodore.

Mr. DAWES. And is receiving that pay now?

Mr. CAMERON. He receives pay of a retired commodore, and does not receive the pay of a retired rear-admiral, which rank he holds.

Mr. DAWES. This bill gives him the pay of a retired rear-admiral from the day he was made a rear-admiral?

Mr. CAMERON. Yes, sir; that is it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I want the Senate to understand, and I desire the Senator from Vermont particularly to understand plainly, that this bill does not propose to give to this officer the pay of a rear-admiral from the date of his retirement as a commodore; not at all. This bill simply proposes to give him the difference between the pay of a commodore and the pay of a rear-admiral from the day he was made rear-admiral.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Not from the date he was retired as a commodore, but from the date of his confirmation by the Senate as a rear-admiral. It proposes to give him the difference from that day till now between the pay of a commodore and the pay of a rear-admiral.

Mr. WALTHALL. What is the difference?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not know that I can answer accurately.

Mr. REAGAN. The pay of a commodore is $5,000 a year, and of a rear-admiral $6,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. A thousand dollars a year difference.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The retired-pay is three-fourths of that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It makes the same ratio exactly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. A difference of $750 per annum.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What I should like to know is, first, whether this gentleman lost any promotion in the Navy during the time he was detached and served in the Army. I am assured by a gentleman who knows about these things that, as he understands it, Mr. Carter did not, and that he was continued to be promoted on the active-list of the Navy according to his rank and station in the regular way, and was not jumped by anybody; and so it was that he came to be a commodore soon after he returned to the Navy, and was retired as a commodore.

If that be so, I do not see the justice of a special case being made to give him the pay of a rear-admiral on the retired-list, which all his fellows who were promoted to be rear-admirals in the same regular way do not get. I am perfectly willing to do everything fair to all people who served their country; but if I am informed correctly, he having received his regular promotions in the Navy during the time he was acting in the Army and so he came to be a commodore and was then by act of Congress retired as a rear-admiral on account of his conspicuous service as an honor, why he should wish to be singled out, I do not know. I am sure he does not, because he is a gentleman, a very nice person; and so it is with a certain friendly regret that I say anything of this kind, but I am bound to do my duty as a Senator. Why he should be singled out from all the men who have been promoted on the retired-list, having lost nothing, as I am now informed, by his service in the Army in the way of regular promotion, and being finally retired as a commodore and then as a special mark of distinction being advanced on the retired-list without pay—for that is the law, it is a mere honor—why now we should be called upon to tax the people to pay him this sum of money I can not quite understand. I wish I could.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask the Senator to let me in half a dozen sentences state this case as it presented itself to the committee.

This officer was not promoted during the war from grade to grade in the Navy. Whilst he was serving in the Army he got no promotion in the Navy. He did not get out of the military service until 1866, and then he went back to the same grade in the Navy that he left in 1861. He went back as lieutenant.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How did he get up to be commodore?

Mr. BLACKBURN. It was after the war that he passed through the intermediate grades of commander and captain, and he was made a commodore in 1878 and retired in 1882.

I submit to the Senator from Vermont whether it is fair to conclude in regard to an officer with a record like this, detached from the naval service in the low grade of a lieutenant, assigned to military service on land, raising and organizing brigades and divisions, fighting his way (seaman as he was) in the land forces to the grade of brevet major-general of the United States Army—I ask whether it is fair to conclude that that man would not have moved up at least one grade during those four years of strife if he had been left in his place in the Navy, when the records are filled with officers of the Navy who were being jumped points and numbers over the heads of others because of conspicuous service or gallant conduct? Is it fair to conclude that this lieutenant would have staid in his place without promotion or advancement in the Navy when his case is marked as that of the only officer of the United States Government who ever showed conspicuous ability enough to leave the Navy in the position of a lieutenant and stand at the end of the war brevet major-general in command of a division in the field? It is fair to conclude that he would have had something like the same return in promotion, if he had remained in the Navy, as he received in the Army. Then he would have been retired before the close of the war as a rear-admiral.

But the committee believed and have instructed me to report to the Senate that, in its judgment, this is a unique case. It is a peculiar case. You can not show me another like it in the history of the war. There is not another instance in which a man was taken from the Army and assigned to the Navy, or taken from the Navy and assigned to the Army, without his request, that gained as much promotion and profited as little by it. That is the whole of this case.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to ask the Senator from Kentucky whether Rear-Admiral Carter has been receiving the pay of a commodore since 1882, the year in which he was promoted on the retired-list to the rank of rear-admiral?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I answer yes; three-fourths of the full pay.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The pay of a retired officer of that grade?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Is it the purpose of the committee to give him two salaries?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Oh, no.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Will not this bill do it?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I think not. The committee did not mean that.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. This bill provides—

That Rear-Admiral Samuel P. Carter, of the United States Navy, be paid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the pay and compensation of a rear-admiral on the retired-list from and after the date of his promotion on the retired-list to the rank of rear-admiral.

That promotion was had in 1882. Since 1882 he has been receiving the pay of a commodore.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I see the point the Senator from Iowa makes.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. There is no provision in the bill that the pay which he has already received shall be taken from that which this bill provides he shall be paid; therefore, there would be the pay of a commodore on the retired-list since 1882, and added to that the pay of a rear-admiral on the retired-list since 1882.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I see the point made by the Senator from Iowa. I am sure the committee had no such purpose, and I am very willing, and I am sure the committee will agree, that the amendment suggested by the Senator from Iowa shall be incorporated in the bill. Let there be inserted the words "less the amount he has already received." The committee did not intend to go further than simply to give him the difference between the pay of a rear-admiral and the pay of a commodore from the time of his promotion to the grade of rear-admiral until now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky move that amendment?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky will please state his amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move to add:

Less the amount received by him as the pay of a commodore on the retired-list during said period.

I offer that as an amendment to the bill, and then I will say but one word more.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the bill "less the amount received by him as the pay of a commodore on the retired-list during said period."

Mr. BLACKBURN. Now, I will add but a word. I beg the Senate to remember that from 1866, when he was mustered out of the military service and went back to the naval service of the country, until this promotion came to him in 1878, he was serving in a grade and rank and receiving pay very much below what he had held and received during the war in the land forces of the country.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I should like now to state, if anybody cares anything about it—because this will be a precedent for a good many other things—exactly what the official Navy Register of the United States of the 1st of July, 1887, shows about the naval history of this gentleman. I will begin at the beginning.

Samuel P. Carter; present residence: Washington, D. C.; retirement and subsequent promotions: commodore, 6th August, 1881; rear-admiral, 16th May, 1882; sea service, seventeen years and nine months; shore or other duty, eighteen years and four months; unemployed, eleven years and three months; appointed from Tennessee. He was made a midshipman on February 14, 1840; on the 11th of July, 1846, he was a passed midshipman; on the 12th of September, 1854, he wa made a master; on the 18th of April, 1855, he was made a lieutenant. on the 16th of July, 1862, he was made a lieutenant-commander; on the 25th of June, 1865, he was made a commander; on the 28th of October, 1870, he was made a captain; on the 30th of November, 1878, he was made a commodore. Then came the special act of Congress, which I need not refer to, for that has been spoken of.

So it does appear from this official document that this gentleman, during his service in the land forces, and getting, as he deserved, I have no doubt, great honor and applause and promotion and pay, etc., continued to have his grade go up in the regular order in the Navy, step by step by promotions, so that he came to be a commodore in the due course of regular promotion, exactly as he would have done had he never served on land at all. He did lose the chance that my friend has referred to of having been jumped over some of his comrades for some conspicuous act of gallantry, or, like some others of his fellows, for some conspicuous capacity of getting Senators and Members of Congress interested to push him forward.

We then find him returning to the Navy without having lost a single day or hour of promotion or any of the honors or emoluments of the grade to which he belonged; but he had lost the chance by his service in the Army of having been jumped over some of his fellows. Thus he came to be a commodore, and being a commodore on the active-list he was retired. Then, by the special persuasions brought to bear on Congress, he was promoted to be a rear-admiral on the retired-list, without the additional pay attaching to that rank, just as everybody else in the regular course is promoted to be a rear-admiral on the retired-list; only he got it by special act of Congress, out of his regular line; and now the question is whether we shall still further decorate him with the pay which nobody else gets in the same rank.

Mr. DAWES. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Vermont whether, if while he was in the land service those who were behind him on the list in the Navy had gone up and when he came back he started where he left off, the Navy Register would show that?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It would. He is shown by this Navy Register to have gone on in the regular course.

Mr. DAWES. So he would have gone on in the regular course if anybody who had been next below him when he was in the land service had taken the promotion which he would have taken had he been there. Would it not have appeared just the same in the Register? I do not know how the fact is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The fact is just this: It was impossible, according to law, for the President or the Secretary of the Navy to jump anybody over his head without a special act of Congress, for the reason that he was never off the Navy roll. There is where he stood all the time, and he took his regular promotion.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the Senator from Vermont let me call his attention to a date there, and I desire to call the attention of the Senate to it.

The Register from which the Senator reads shows that Carter, this officer, was a lieutenant in the Navy when he was detached in 1861 and sent to the land service. He never was made a commander until 1865, after the war was over, according to the date in the Naval Register; and of course it was subsequent to that that he was made a captain, and it was in 1878 that he was made a commodore. So I am not only substantially but literally correct when I say that at the end of the war he came back to the Navy with exactly the grade and rank in which he left it in 1861, and he was made a commander after the war closed in 1865, and he was made a captain subsequently to that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As this Register shows and as I believe the truth is, this gentleman did not lose his place in number or in rank among his fellows at all; and if it happened that there were one hundred lieutenants above him who were fighting at sea while he was fighting on land or doing whatever he could, and who were moved up, he followed in his regular order of time, so that he lost no place or station in the Navy either in number or rank during the whole period that he was in the Army.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, I desire to say a word about this bill. I will not discuss the merits of this particular case at all, but I have a word to say on another point.

I suppose it is hardly necessary for me to protest that I am against the idea of creating an American aristocracy or a privileged class, who are to live off the labor and earnings of other people because they happen to be more fortunate than others in getting high position under the Government and high salaries while in service. That being the case, when they are retired from service they expect to be supported off the earnings of other people. I have never been able to understand the reasons why this should be done.

It may be said that it is the duty of the Government to take care of gentlemen who have served in the Army or in the Navy during their vigorous manhood. The salaries paid to the officers of the Army and Navy now are sufficient, with reasonable economy, to enable them not only to live well during their service, but to have the means of living comfortably during the years that follow their active service. If they choose to squander those means in dissipation, in extravagant living, they have no right to ask that other people, as good as they are, should labor for their support.

If we are to support the officers of the Army and of the Navy after their service, why should we not support the private soldiers and the private sailors whose services and sufferings have been greater? And why should we compel any citizen to pay for the support of another citizen in idleness under our system of government?

I can understand why under the British Government it is done, because the policy of that government is to keep up an aristocracy, privileged classes, to be supported off the earnings of their people. They give titles and privileges in order to establish and maintain privileged classes, on which their system of government rests; but under our system of government it is entirely different, and no such thing existed here for three-quarters of a century after the adoption of the Constitution. Men served in office and received their pay, much less in former years than now, and when they went out of the public service they took care of themselves. We had not then reached the point of establishing an American aristocracy and a privileged class receiving the fruits of the labor of other people and doing nothing themselves—that very class that is being retired from the Army and Navy, many of them men of wealth, many of them men of vigorous capacity, but yet calling on the Government to support them.

This officer perhaps is as meritorious as any other. I am saying nothing against the merits or services of the officer. The service he rendered may have been such as to have met the approbation of the Government and the thanks of the country. That does not justify taking the money of the people to give him a gratuity.

Our system of government rests upon a people equal before the law in their rights, where exclusive privileges are not allowed to any, and where titles of nobility can not be granted by the Federal Government or by the States. And yet we have now more than four hundred Army officers on the retired-list; and we have very many on the naval retired-list; I do not know how many hundred. The record shows many of them retired on account of moral and intellectual unfitness for the service. That is shown by the list drawn out by a resolution of the House of Representatives.

Then we have the marine service, and we have the judiciary retired-list. We are thus building up an American aristocracy; I do not care by what name you call it. I know that when men have served faithfully in the Army or the Navy or any other branch of service there is something to command our respect. We all understand this; and so the honest citizen at home who discharges all the duties of a citizen, who rears a family, who performs faithfully all the duties devolved upon him, is entitled to our respect and our sympathy, and yet we do not give him a living off the labor of other people, but tax him to support others who have been favored above him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. REAGAN. I will only add that if I had been present when this bill was called up I should have objected to it, just as I objected to one like it a short time ago. I do not believe such bills ought to pass, and whenever it is in my power I propose to do anything I can do to impede their passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I think the feature of this case which struck the Naval Committee of the Senate, and which ought to be stated, is the remarkable record which Admiral Carter made in the Army, thereby evincing his great capacity. His service during the war was a most picturesque service, and, as the Senator from Kentucky has said, it has no parallel.

Undoubtedly Admiral Carter now, General Carter then, lost those early, active, strenuous years in which promotion came rapidly in the Navy. Many men who entered the service as lieutenants or who were found as lieutenants when the war began left it with its highest rank at the close of the war or a few years afterwards. Gallant service did it. The interposition of Congress in many cases did it. They were the precious years, the golden years of the American Navy; and Admiral Carter lost the promotion that such a man, it may be presumed, would have got by being out of the naval service.

I will tell the Senate in a moment what the Register shows. How much he lost no man can tell. But the committee were struck with the fact—I know I was—that such a man as he lost considerable of what might have been expected as promotion. The Navy Register shows this as bearing upon what I am saying: Admiral Carter, leaving the Navy at the beginning of the war with the rank he held, first received his promotion after the war ended, as the Register shows, as a commander on the 25th day of June, 1865. That was the first promotion that he received after the war. The Senator from Vermont says it was the same promotion he would have received presumably if he had remained in the service, unless he had been selected for special merit and been put over others of like rank.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Received lawfully and regularly.

Mr. HALE. Now, bearing upon that point, if the Senator will look a little lower in the Register he will find the names of Admiral Calhoun, Admiral Baldwin, and Admiral Shufeldt, who entered the service as midshipmen within a few months of the same time that Admiral Carter entered the service—I hope the Senator from Kentucky will bear this in mind—receiving their promotion in the grade of commander on the 17th, 18th, and 19th days of November, 1862, three years before Admiral Carter got his promotion as commander.

The conclusion is irresistible that this man in some way lost advantage which those other men entering almost at the same time secured. They were gallant officers, but no more so than he; and they got their promotion as commander, which set them on the high road to further promotion in the end, as they all became rear-admirals regularly by due advancement and the requirement of the law without special favor of Congress; they received that further promotion and became rear-admirals because of the fact that they got their rank as commander three years before Carter got his, and they had entered the service within a few months of the time he did.

That is the significant fact that has struck me all the way through: in some way this man did lose what Admiral Calhoun and Admiral Shufeldt and Admiral Baldwin got.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How did they get it?

Mr. HALE. They got it in regular course. It is all given here.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not in the regular course, but by special meritorious service.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly, but they got it by the regular course of law. They got the benefit; I do not care how they got it. They could not have rendered better service than Carter. They could not have been doing better work in the war than he. They became commanders three years before Carter. Is it not fair to suppose that such a man as this, rank in rank with them in the same service, would have received the same promotion at the same time that they did? Whether he would or not nobody can certainly tell, but his service was equally good.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I inferred from what the Senator from Maine said that Admiral Shufeldt, for illustration, stood below this gentleman in the order of his coming into the naval service, and had got ahead of him.

Mr. HALE. The Senator mistook me. Admiral Shufeldt, Admiral Baldwin, and Admiral Calhoun entered the service within a few months—I think it is the difference between October and February—a little in advance, but within a few months of the same time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is very important, because then they have not been jumped over the head of this gentleman. They have had their regular promotion and he has had his, and they were retired in the regular order, and he was retired in the regular order.

Mr. HALE. But why should they have got their promotion to the rank of commander nearly three years ahead of Admiral Carter, when they only entered the service a few months before him? There is where the disparity is shown. There is where the gap comes in; there is where Admiral Carter's loss comes in.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us see. They did not get their promotion to the rank of commander by the course of the regular order of the standing law; they got it by force of either a special act of Congress or a discretion that was allowed to the President of the United States to promote people in the Navy for special and gallant and meritorious service, one or the other, because it is perfectly manifest that under the regular order of service those who have been referred to, Shufeldt and the others, came in before this gentleman, and they came to be commanders before he did during the war, not by force of a regular promotion, but on account of the special, gallant, and meritorious service that in some way they were supposed to have performed or persuaded Congress that they performed, which possibly may have been the case. I do not remember anything about it. They may have got a favor of Congress which put them ahead of him, but finally he came into his regular promotions in the whole line of the Navy, was retired as a commodore with the full pay of a commodore, a quarter off when retired like all the other commodores of the Navy, unless in special instances Congress has been persuaded or overpersuaded to make invidious and improper distinctions. I want to stop that sort of business if my vote can do it.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, this case presents, as is stated in the report of the committee, an anomalous state of affairs. Here is a lieutenant in the Navy taken from his field of service, put into the military service and in command of land forces, and in a period of three or four years that lieutenant of the Navy becomes a brevet major-general in handling troops, and loses all the opportunities in the branch of service for which he was educated to have distinguished himself, as his conduct in the Army shows he was capable of doing. He won honor, distinction, and rank in the Army, all of which was surrendered and laid down when he went back into the Navy. Will anybody tell me that a man who has shown such ability as to be transferred to a branch of the service for which he was not educated would have come out of the war merely a lieutenant of the Navy, as he went in?

He was transferred from a field of service where he could have distinguished himself and won honors, as it was shown he did in "the tented field," and when the war closed the honors which he had won in the land service shriveled and perished; he had them not any longer; and he shrank back into the small rank of a lieutenant of the Navy, from which he had been taken and transferred to the land service. I repeat I do not believe any fair-minded man can doubt that he would have passed those three or four years in the naval service and emerged from it with more rank than when he went in. I know Admiral Carter. He would have won distinction alongside of other names that made our Navy immortal.

He gave up his chance; his opportunity was lost so far as any permanent aid to him in his old age was concerned; it was all lost to him. When he returned into the Navy, as I have remarked, he returned with the rank of lieutenant. As the Senator from Kentucky has said, he became a commander after the war closed. After he had got the rank of major-general in the Army he became a commander in the Navy, and then from 1866 to 1878, for twelve long years, he crept along the weary way of promotion from the rank of commander until he finally became a commodore, which he would have been before the war closed by every evidence he gave of capacity, courage, and fidelity. This bill makes him a meager compensation for the opportunity of which he was deprived by accepting service which brought him no permanent aid for his old age.

Now, a remark or two in reply to the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN]. I believe I love the democratic class as much as anybody, and am as much opposed to aristocracy as any one can be; but when I find a man, as I do here, who has given forty-seven years of his life to his country's service I am led to inquire what opportunity he has had to make provision for himself and his family in his declining days, and I am led to repudiate the idea that he should be denied his salary in the latter years of his life. It is not the establishment of a privileged class. It is paying, and paying poorly and meagerly, for long distinguished service for his flag and for his country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Senator will be allowed to go on.

Mr. VOORHEES. I hope the bill will pass.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill be engrossed and read a third time?

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 28, noes 12.

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and it was read the third time.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HAMPTON (when Mr. COLQUITT'S name was called). The junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT] has been detained at home by illness for several days, and he requested me to announce his pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB]. I should vote for the bill but for the pair.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. RANSOM (after having voted in the negative). I withdraw my vote. I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

Mr. SABIN (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question if present, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. PADDOCK. I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. I do not know how he would vote if present. I should vote "yea" if at liberty to do so.

Mr. CHACE. I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT].

Mr. CULLOM. I am generally paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. He is absent on committee duty, and, not knowing how he would vote, I decline to vote.

Mr. WALTHALL (after having voted in the affirmative). I ask whether the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. WALTHALL. I am paired with him; and, not knowing how he would vote, if present, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. CALL. I announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. PASCO] with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. WALTHALL. My colleague [Mr. GEORGE] is absent on duty, and is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR].

Mr. SABIN. Since the announcement of my pair I am informed that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] would vote "yea." I therefore feel at liberty to vote "yea."

Mr. CULLOM. I am informed that I am at liberty to vote, and I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—29.

Bate,	Dolph,	Ingalls,	Stanford,
Beck,	Farwell,	Manderson,	Stewart,
Blackburn,	Faulkner,	Mitchell,	Teller,
Blodgett,	Frye,	Palmer,	Turpie,
Call,	Hale,	Payne,	Voorhees.
Cameron,	Harris,	Pugh,
Davis,	Hawley,	Riddleberger,
Dawes,	Hoar,	Sabin,

NAYS—13.

Berry,	Cullom,	Jones of Arkansas,	Wilson of Iowa.
Chandler,	Daniel,	Platt,
Cockrell,	Edmunds,	Reagan,
Coke,	Hampton,	Saulsbury,

ABSENT—34.

Aldrich,	Evarts,	McPherson,	Sherman,
Allison,	George,	Morgan,	Spooner,
Blair,	Gibson,	Morrill,	Stockbridge,
Bowen,	Gorman,	Paddock,	Vance,
Brown,	Gray,	Pasco,	Vest,
Butler,	Hearst,	Plumb,	Walthall,
Chace,	Hiscock,	Quay,	Wilson of Md.
Colquitt,	Jones of Nevada,	Ransom,
Eustis,	Kenna,	Sawyer,

So the bill was passed.

JOHN N. QUACKENBUSH.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I wish to call up the motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill (S. 1226) touching the grade of commander in the Navy, and to correct an error in relation to an appointment therein. The pending motion is that made by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], which motion, I am instructed by the Presiding Officer of the Senate, if laid on the table, will cause the bill to be sent to the House of Representatives as passed by the Senate. I make the motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table. It was understood this morning that I should call it up before the close of to-day's session. My purpose is to move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill was passed by the Senate some days since and went to the House of Representatives. The day of its passage or the next day the Senator from Florida moved that the bill be recalled from the House of Representatives, and entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed. The Senator from Virginia, the Chair now understands, moves to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. VOORHEES. That is not debatable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That motion is not debatable. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is the Senator from Florida here?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida is present.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I may possibly misapprehend the rule, but I ask the Chair whether this motion, if successful, sends the bill back to the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the motion to reconsider is laid on the table, the bill, as a matter of course, will go back to the House of Representatives as passed by the Senate.

The question is on the motion to lay on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Saturday, March 31, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, March 29, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. J. H. CUTHBERT, D. D., of Washington, D. C.

The SPEAKER. The Journal of the last two days will be read.

Mr. NELSON. I move to dispense with the reading of so much of the Journal of Tuesday last as relates to the presentation of reports.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The residue of the Journal was read and approved.

CIVILIAN ENGINEERS ON RIVERS AND HARBORS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, a list of the civilian engineers employed on river and harbor improvements, showing the time and place of employment and the compensation paid each; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS EASTERN BRANCH OF POTOMAC.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill (S. 2458) to amend an act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Eastern Branch of the Potomac at the foot of Pennsylvania avenue east; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CHARLOTTE, N. C.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill (S. 907) to provide for the erection of a public building at Charlotte, N. C.; which was read a first and second time.

The SPEAKER. This bill will be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. ROWLAND. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be taken up and put on its passage now. A bill for the same object has been reported favorably by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the House; but as the House bill recommends an expenditure of $85,000 and the Senate bill $175,000, I will ask that the Senate bill be amended so as to make the appropriation conform to that in the House bill.

Mr DIBBLE. Does the Senate bill provide that the building shall be constructed on the site already owned by the Government?

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ROWLAND] asks unanimous consent for its consideration at this time. After the reading of the bill the Chair will submit the question whether there is objection.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. DIBBLE. I will not object if the gentleman from North Carolina will consent that this Senate bill be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the provisions of the House bill, which contemplate an expenditure of $85,000.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina has stated his purpose to move to strike out the amount appropriated in the Senate bill and insert the sum named in the House bill.

Mr. DIBBLE. But we prefer to incorporate in the measure the other provisions of the House bill, there being a difference in regard to the provision for the purchase of a site.

Mr. ROWLAND. I will assent to that.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, the bill will be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BOWDEN, for to-day, on account of important business.

To Mr. HIESTAND, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. GUENTHER, for five days, on account of important business.

To Mr. KELLEY, until Monday next, on account of important business.

To Mr. RICHARDSON, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

POSTAL COMMUNICATION BETWEEN CANADA AND UNITED STATES.

Mr. ENLOE. I send to the desk a privileged report from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ask its present consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, March 15, 1888.

Mr. WHITE, of New York, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, requested to communicate to this House what instructions, if any, whether by circular letter or otherwise, have been given to subordinate officers of the Post-Office Department with reference to mail matter received from the Dominion of Canada, which instructions are intended to prohibit American citizens from using the United States mails upon the same terms with citizens of said Dominion living in the same vicinage and competing in the same branches of business with said American citizens.

2. That the said Postmaster-General be requested to inform this House whether any statute law prevents mailing in the Dominion of Canada seeds, plants, and bulbs grown by American citizens upon American soil, and if there is no provision of law prohibiting it, whether he has assumed to impose a penalty at the rate of $320 per ton upon seeds, plants, and bulbs lawfully mailed by American citizens in an attempt to compete with Canadian seedsmen, to whom the United States has, by a recent postal treaty, given an advantage over American seedsmen in the way of postage at the rate of $240 per ton.

3. In case the Postmaster-General shall show that orders have been given directing the examination of incoming Canadian mails for evidence of their use by American citizens, that he be further requested to inform the House by what provision of the recent postal treaty with the Dominion of Canada, or by what provision of law, the officers of the postal service of the United States are authorized to place an espionage on the said Canadian mail for the purpose of determining whether citizens of the United States are availing themselves of the beneficent provisions which are accorded to Canadians by said postal treaty.

The SPEAKER. Does any gentleman demand the reading of the report accompanying this resolution?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ENLOE. I presume it had better be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, having considered House resolution calling on the Postmaster-General for certain information, report:

The resolution appears to be a demand upon the Postmaster-General for information touching his recently published order to prevent certain seedsmen in the United States from defrauding the Government of its postal revenues by mailing their products in Canada.

The resolution is so framed that it partakes more of the nature of a criticism of the existing law, a protest against its enforcement, and an arraignment of the Postmaster-General for the issuance of an order directing its enforcement, than it does of the nature of a proper resolution of inquiry.

The first inquiry in the first paragraph of the resolution is answered by the following published order of the Postmaster-General:

"NOTICE.

"POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT. OFFICE OF POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
"Washington, D. C., March 13, 1888.

"Satisfactory evidence having been presented to this Department that certain dealers in the United States are shipping their goods to Canada to be mailed there, addressed to persons in this country, with the intent to evade the higher rate of postage applicable to said goods in the domestic mails of the United States, especially before the customs regulations for the collection of duty on such matter are thoroughly understood and in practice, postmasters at United States post-offices, authorized to exchange mails with Canada, are hereby ordered to rate up postage on said packages so sent to Canada and received in mails from Canada, for collection on delivery, at the rate applicable to similar packages mailed and addressed for delivery in this country; the forwarding of such packages from Canada being an "obvious error," the same being in contravention of the provisions of article 4 of the postal convention in force between the two countries.

"Similar articles contained in mails from Canada, under like state of facts, received by United States railway post-offices of exchange, shall be turned in to the nearest United States exchange post-office for treatment under this order.

"The provisions of this order shall apply to all packages mailed in Canada addressed for delivery in the United States, the indications upon the covers of which or other facts show that they have been sent from the United States to Canada for the purpose of mailing back to the United States.

"DON M. DICKINSON,
"Postmaster-General."

Article 4 of the postal convention between the United States and Canada answers the second paragraph of the resolution. Said article reads as follows:

"In case any correspondence is tendered for mailing in either country obviously with the intention to evade the higher postage rates applicable to it in the other country, it shall be refused, unless payment be made of such higher rates."

The third and last paragraph of the resolution, which demands to know by what authority of law the officers of the United States place an "espionage" on the said Canadian mails, is answered by reference to section 4026 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which section reads as follows:

"The Postmaster-General may, by a letter of authorization under his hand, to be filed among the records of his Department, empower any special agent or other officer of the Post-Office Establishment to make searches for mailable matter transported in violation of law; and the agent or officer so authorized may open and search any car or vehicle passing, or having lately before passed, from any place at which there is a post-office of the United States to any other such place, or any box, package, or packet, being, or having lately before been, in such car or vehicle, or any store or house, other than a dwelling-house, used or occupied by any common carrier or transportation company, in which such box, package, or packet may be contained, whenever such agent or officer has reason to believe that mailable matter, transported contrary to law, may therein be found."

The premises considered, the committee return the resolution to the House with the recommendation that it do lie on the table.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. On what ground is this report privileged?

The SPEAKER. It is a report upon a resolution of inquiry addressed to the head of a Department, which, under the rules of the House, is required to be returned within one week, and has always been held to be privileged when so reported from the committee.

Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Tennessee how much time is likely to be allowed for the discussion of this matter. There is a desire on the part of several members of the House to discuss the question, and we should like to come to some agreement as to the length of time before the debate begins.

Mr. ENLOE. How much time would the gentleman suggest?

Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts. I think we can agree, as far as this side of the House is concerned, that possibly an hour on each side would be ample.

Mr. ENLOE. Very well; that will be entirely satisfactory to this side of the House and to the committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. I understand that it is proposed that two hours is to be taken up by the discussion of this question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has heard the statement. The debate can go on, of course, until the previous question has been ordered.

Mr. ROGERS. What is the pending proposition?

The SPEAKER. It has just been read.

Mr. ROGERS. I did not hear it.

The SPEAKER. It is a report from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads upon a resolution of inquiry, with the recommendation from the committee that the resolution lie on the table.

Mr. ROGERS. Is it a privileged report?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. McCREARY. Will the gentleman from Tennessee be kind enough to state how long this will probably take?

Mr. ENLOE. I think I can answer the question of the gentleman from Kentucky, as well as the question of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], by stating that it will possibly take as long to dispose of this question as it ordinarily takes to dispose of matters from the Committee on Foreign Affairs and the Committee on the Territories. I do not know exactly how long I shall speak upon it myself, but certainly a very short time.

Mr. BLOUNT. I think the gentleman has agreed with the other side of the House that an hour on each would be sufficient.

Mr. ENLOE. That is the agreement. It is the desire of gentlemen to discuss the question, and perhaps it would be more interesting to gentlemen when they come to understand what question is really presented.

Mr. McCREARY. I will say to my friend from Tennessee that with reference to business from the Committee on Foreign Affairs it has consumed but very little time of the House at this session, and if he succeeds as well with this resolution as the Committee on Foreign Affairs has succeeded with its business before the House, he will probably not find it necessary to consume as much time as two hours.

Is it proposed to give one hour to the other and one to this side?

Mr. ENLOE. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman, if it is agreed that there are to be two hours consumed, one on each side, that the time is lapsing.

Mr. SPRINGER. If I heard the report correctly, it recommends that this resolution lie upon the table.

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is that motion debatable?

The SPEAKER. There is no motion pending.

Mr. SPRINGER. What is before the House?

The SPEAKER. The report is before the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. But the recommendation is that the resolution lie upon the table. It seems to me at this late hour of the session that upon a motion to lay on the table, when business is so pressing, two hours ought not to be consumed in this manner.

Mr. REED. Perhaps it may not be laid upon the table.

Mr. PETERS. Besides, five or six members of the committee have signed a minority report.

Mr. BLOUNT. I think the gentleman from Illinois might allow the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to proceed with this matter. I think he will find that it is not time wasted.

Mr. ENLOE. I decline to yield further, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPRINGER. No agreement has been made as to the debate as I understand it.

The SPEAKER. Not by the House. The gentleman from Tennessee simply announced that, as far as he was concerned, one hour on each side would be satisfactory; but whenever the House chooses to order the previous question the debate will of course be stopped.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, in order that this question may be fully understood by the House, I will beg the attention of the House for a few moments while I state the subject of the inquiry presented to the committee and its action thereupon.

The resolution was introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WHITE] and referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, which purported to be a resolution of inquiry addressed to the Postmaster-General in regard to certain action which he had taken touching the mailing of certain articles in Canada for transmission to the United States in violation of the postal laws of the United States. The ground upon which the report proceeds is, first, that this is not in proper form for a resolution of inquiry; that it partakes more of the nature of a criticism upon the law as it exists and a protest against its enforcement, as well as a reflection upon the Postmaster-General for the action taken by him in attempting to enforce existing postal law and prevent the defrauding of that Department of the revenues to which it is entitled under the law, than it does of the nature of a resolution of inquiry.

The first paragraph of the resolution proceeds to protest against the action of the Department and to make an inquiry by what authority the Postmaster-General of the United States issued a certain order. I have the order here before me, which has been published in the newspapers, and was a matter of common information accessible to the gentleman from New York and every one else who had paid attention to the matter or who saw proper to go to the Department and make inquiry for the information. The order reads as follows:

NOTICE.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., March 13, 1888.

Satisfactory evidence having been presented to this Department that certain dealers in the United States are shipping their goods to Canada to be mailed there, addressed to persons in this country, with the intent to evade the higher rate of postage applicable to said goods in the domestic mails of the United States, especially before the customs regulations for the collection of duty on such matter are thoroughly understood and in practice, postmasters at United States post-offices authorized to exchange mails with Canada are hereby ordered to rate up postage on said packages so sent to Canada and received in mails from Canada, for collection on delivery, at the rate applicable to similar packages mailed, and addressed for delivery, in this country, the forwarding of such packages from Canada being an "obvious error," the same being in contravention of the provisions of article 4 of the postal convention in force between the two countries.

Similar articles contained in mails from Canada, under like state of facts, received by the United States railway post-offices of exchange, shall be turned into the nearest United States exchange post-office for treatment under this order.

The provisions of this order shall apply to all packages mailed in Canada addressed for delivery in the United States, the indications upon the covers of which or other facts show that they have been sent from the United States to Canada for the purpose of mailing back to the United States.

DON M. DICKINSON,
Postmaster-General.

This order was issued and made public upon receipt by the Postmaster-General of a letter from James Vick, a seedsman, of Rochester, N. Y., a copy of which was sent to me, and I presume to other members of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, proposing to the Postmaster-General that he allow him to ship his matter direct to the Buffalo office and mail it there instead of going to Canada to mail it, whereby the Buffalo office would be saved the trouble and the labor of distributing. Mr. Vick would pay the Canadian rate of postage to Canada, and the United States Government would lose nothing in postal revenue, as it received nothing, so long as he was allowed the privilege of mailing matter in Canada. To give an idea of the true nature of this proposition I ask to have published a copy of the letter, which reads as follows:

ROCHESTER, N. Y., March 6, 1888.

DEAR SIR: Last week we commenced mailing plants and catalogues to parties in the United States via Canada. This is done to save 12 cents per pound on plants and 3 cents on each catalogue, less a very small expense of freight, etc. But the thought suggested itself to me that perhaps arrangements could be made whereby we could ship these packages of plants and catalogues, distributed and bagged, into States and mailing routes directly to Buffalo (the exchange office) instead of to Canada. This would save the Buffalo office the labor of distributing, as we could have them neatly put up in United States mail bags and labeled.

Of course we would put Canadian postage on each package, so the Canadian Government would not lose by this change, and the United States Government would receive the same compensation as at present (nothing), and would be the gainer in not throwing so much work on the Buffalo office.

Yours, etc.,

JAMES VICK.

Hon. DON M. DICKINSON,
Postmaster-General, Washington, D. C.

In addition to the order to postmasters at exchange offices directing them to rate up mailable matter sent to Canada for the purpose of evading the higher rate of postage in the United States, as before cited, the following letter was addressed to the postmaster-general of Canada, asking him to enforce the law according to the terms of the convention:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF FOREIGN MAILS,
Washington, D. C., March 9, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor, by direction of the Postmaster-General, to inform you that, under date of the 6th instant, Mr. James Vick, seedsman of Rochester, N. Y., advised this Department as follows, namely:

"Last week we commenced mailing plants and catalogues to parties in the United States via Canada. This is done to save 12 cents per pound on plants and 3 cents on each catalogue, less a very small expense of freight, etc."

As the sender of the packages in question expressly states that the packages are sent to Canada to be mailed with intent to evade the higher postage rates applicable to them in the United States, I am directed to request that, in accordance with the provisions of article 4 of the postal convention, which went into operation on the 1st instant, you will instruct the proper Canadian postmasters to refuse to receive catalogues or packages of seed bearing the business card of James Vick, seedsman, of Rochester, N.Y., unless they are fully prepaid at the postage rate applicable to them in the United States, namely:

"For printed catalogues (third-class matter), 1 cent for each 2 ounces or fraction of 2 ounces.

"For seeds (fourth-class matter), 1 cent for each ounce or fraction of an ounce."

It may be well to add that Mr. Vick states that he forwards the packages in question to Canada by way of Buffalo, N. Y.

The Postmaster-General would thank you to advise him of your action in this matter.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

N. M. BROOKS,
Acting Superintendent Foreign Mails.

The POSTMASTER-GENERAL, ETC.,
Ottawa, Canada.

Upon receipt of this letter the postmaster-general of Canada complied with the terms of the treaty by issuing the necessary order, and hence this so-called resolution of inquiry.

The second paragraph of the resolution assumes a violation of the law in the issuance of the order, and intimates, if it does not directly charge, that the Postmaster-General has assumed to usurp the power to impose upon American seedsmen a penalty of $320 per ton on seeds "lawfully mailed by American citizens in an attempt to compete with Canadian seedsmen, to whom the United States has by a recent postal treaty given an advantage over American seedsmen, in the way of postage at the rate of $240 per ton."

The resolution assumes all the information which it pretends to seek, and under false pretense seeks to cast a reflection, not only on the Postmaster-General for enforcing the law, but upon the Administration for consenting to the treaty.

I want to say, however, as to the second paragraph, that the terms of the convention furnish the best answer to the charges made. The attempt is made to make it appear that there is no provision of law under which this order could be issued. But I call the attention of the House to the fact that in article 4 of this treaty there is the following provision:

In case any correspondence is tendered for mailing in either country obviously with the intention to evade the higher postage rates applicable to it in the other country, it shall be refused unless payment be made of such higher rates.

The term "correspondence" used here embraces every article mailable under the convention. The opponents of this view say that seeds, bulbs, and other matters embraced in this contention are not included under the term "correspondence." But I call attention to the letter of the Superintendent of Foreign Mails as to the construction given to the term "correspondence" in all treaties heretofore negotiated between the United States and foreign countries. I ask that this letter from the Superintendent of Foreign Mails be incorporated with my remarks in this connection.

It is as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF FOREIGN MAILS,
Washington, D. C., March 29, 1888.

SIR: Relative to the meaning of the word "correspondence" as used in postal conventions between countries, I have to call your attention to article 1 of the conventions between the United States of America and the following countries, namely: Belgium, of October 9, 1867; North German Union, of November 12,

1867; Kingdom of Italy, of November 8, 1867; the Netherlands, of the 26th of September, 1867; the Kingdom of Norway and Sweden, of May 25, 1873; and the Swiss Confederation, of the 11th of October, 1867, in which you will find the following language, namely:

"There shall be an exchange of correspondence between the United States of America and ——, by means of their respective post departments, and this correspondence shall embrace—

"1. Letters, ordinary and registered.

"2. Newspapers, book packets, prints of all kinds (comprising maps, plans, engravings, drawings, photographs, lithographs, and all other like productions of mechanical processes, sheets of music, etc.), and patterns or samples of merchandise, including grains and seeds.

"And such correspondence may be exchanged, whether originating in either of said countries and destined for the other, or originating in or destined for foreign countries to which these may respectively serve as intermediaries."

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

NICHOLAS M. BELL,
Superintendent Foreign Mails.

Hon. B. A. ENLOE,
Chairman Subcommittee Post-Office and Post-Roads,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

I call your attention to the terms of the treaties made with different countries, embracing the very articles mentioned in this controversy. The first is the convention between the United States of America and Belgium, which uses the terms "letters, newspapers, book packets, prints, etc., samples of merchandise, grains, and seeds."

The convention between the United States and the North German Union names the same articles under the term "correspondence."

The convention between Italy and the United States adheres to the same construction of the term.

Look at the convention with Italy, and we find the identical language found in the other conventions named.

The convention with New South Wales does not enumerate "grains and seeds" as embraced in the term "correspondence," but it embraces "printed matter of every kind, and samples of merchandise."

The convention with Sweden and Norway embraces under the term "correspondence" "grains and seeds."

The convention with the Swiss Confederation uses the terms "grains and seeds" under the term "correspondence."

So it appears that this term "correspondence," used in article 4 of the convention with Canada, under which the contracting Governments protect their postal revenue, has received a well-nigh universal construction, which was never questioned until it entered the mind of the author of this resolution to question it.

The third and last paragraph of the resolution demands to know "by what provision of the recent postal treaty with the Dominion of Canada, or by what provision of law the officers of the postal service of the United States are authorized to place an "espionage" on the said Canadian mail, etc.

The term "espionage" used in the resolution would seem to imply that the Postmaster-General had committed an odious act in issuing this order to prevent flagrant and boasted frauds upon the postal revenues of the United States, and that he had, in violation of law, and in violation of the rights of citizens of the United States, directed spies to pry into the inscrutable secrets of the mails, for the purpose of discriminating against her own citizens in the interest of foreigners. Under his oath of office he could have done nothing less than what he has done, and the feeble attempt to assail the merits of the convention through him falls to the ground.

As bearing upon this question, and furnishing a more complete answer to the pretended inquiry I quote section 4026 of the Revised Statutes, which reads as follows:

The Postmaster-General may, by a letter of authorization under his hand, to be filed among the records of his Department, empower any special agent or other officer of the Post-Office establishment to make searches for mailable matter transported in violation of law; and the agent or officer so authorized may open and search any car or vehicle passing, or having lately before passed, from any place at which there is a post-office of the United States to any other such place, or any box, package, or packet, being or having lately before been, in such car, or vehicle, or any store or house, other than a dwelling house, used or occupied by any common carrier or transportation company, in which such box, package, or packet may be contained, whenever such agent or officer has reason to believe that mailable matter transported contrary to law may be found therein.

It has been asserted in general terms that this was an unfortunate treaty which the United States has entered into with the Dominion of Canada. There was a desire on the part of the majority of the committee to withhold from publication such matter in reference to transactions between this Government and the Government of Canada as might in any way affect the future relations of the two countries as regards postal arrangements. But the minority assail the Administration for making this treaty, say it was an unwise thing to do, and they condemn it in unmeasured terms as injurious to the rights of American citizens. A similar convention was entered into with the Government of Mexico. There was no complaint of that convention.

This one was modeled after it. It simply opens up the mail system of the two countries, so as to allow matter that is mailable in one country to be mailed in the other, and to be transmitted to all parts of the two countries without either government proposing to collect anything extra from it, but giving to each government whatever proportion of the revenue arises from the mailing of matter on its own side of the line; and the statement that this is an unwise negotiation would stand or fall, I suppose, upon the question as to whether or not it was a good financial arrangement. I have here an exhibit prepared by me from a record kept by the Superintendent of Foreign Mails, which I will not undertake to read in full, but in connection with which I will make a statement.

This record is kept by the Superintendent of Foreign Mails in obedience to the requirements of the Universal Postal Union, which requires each country to keep a minute record of all the matter mailed for or received from any other country for each period of six months preceding the 1st day of April and the 1st day of October in each year. That record has been kept in the Post-Office Department, and from that record I have extracted some figures which I desire to incorporate in my remarks, and which show that from a financial standpoint the United States Government gets an advantage of about 40 per cent. over Canada under this arrangement. Therefore, I say that as a financial enterprise, as a financial investment, this convention made by the Department under the treaty-making power, does decidedly favor the people of the United States.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. ENLOE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Will you explain how it is that we get an advantage of 40 per cent. under this postal treaty?

Mr. ENLOE. Yes, I will, with pleasure. In answer to the gentleman from New York, I will state that this record which I have mentioned is kept accurately, showing the amount and character of mail matter mailed in this country for other countries, and the amount and character of mail matter received from other countries for each period of six months, and from that record I have a statement from which I will read some figures, covering the time from the 1st of October, 1880, to the 1st of October, 1887, a period of seven years. I will not read the whole table, but only the first and last items. At the beginning the amount of mail matter of the first class dispatched from the United States to Canada was 4,358,882 letters, while the number of letters mailed from Canada to the United States, during the same period, was 3,105,692. That is the first item. Now I pass to the last, taking the period ending October 1, 1887, which shows the amount of first class mail matter dispatched from the United States to Canada as 10,764,590 letters, while there were sent from Canada to the United States, during the same six months, 6,080,711 letters. Of course we get the postage on the letters mailed in the United States and the Canadians get the postage on the letters mailed in Canada, so that we get the advantage of the percentage which these figures show.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. That statement does not include magazines or pamphlets, I understand?

Mr. ENLOE. The complete statement embraces all classes of matter; but I did not take time to go over the entire record, because I thought it would be too cumbersome to present to the House. I have here a statement with regard to samples of merchandise, including seeds and grains received from Canada since 1880, and I will say in general terms that the figures show a like advantage to the United States to that which is shown in the case of the letters.

Mr. HERBERT. Would not the figures for the magazines show a much larger per cent. in our favor, because the circulation of our magazines is much larger than that of any published in Canada?

Mr. ENLOE. I have not the least doubt about that. It would have afforded me great pleasure to have gone over the whole list, but I thought that was not necessary. At all events, to maintain the general argument which I make, that this was a wise convention, it is sufficient to show that, so far as the general effect of it is concerned, it has been largely advantageous to the people of the United States. At the same time I will remark that I do not think it was in very good taste to force this statement from the Department in order to vindicate itself, and have the facts published here on the floor of the House, so that it will go back to Canada and appear that we are boasting that we have beaten them in the negotiation of a treaty in regard to international postal affairs.

The responsibility for the disclosure of facts which as a matter of public policy should not be disclosed must rest with those who make this assault. If it is wise, if it is patriotic, if it is sound public policy to publish these facts, let it be understood that they are only given as a vindication of the action of the Administration in the adoption of this convention.

Here are the figures, which speak for themselves, as to the balance of the mail business and to the advantages of this treaty, more eloquently than I can speak for them, and they might be made much more complete than time or opportunity has enabled me to make them.

The Postal Union Convention requires all the countries that are members of the union to make a statistical count of all matters exchanged through the mails on the first seven days of April and October of each year, giving in detail the number of letters, postal cards, printed matter and commercial papers, and samples of merchandise, and the amount of postage on mailable matter exchanged.

It is insisted by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WHITE], and will no doubt be insisted upon in this debate, that under any convention which the United States Government may have made or may hereafter make we should afford to our own people equal advantages with those given to the people of other countries using the United Sates mails.

I think, sir, that we are affording to our people as good mail facilities as the people of any country under the sun enjoy, and if we have to fix a sliding scale of postage, so that when Canada puts her rates up we must put ours up, and when Canada puts hers down we must put ours down, then our domestic rate of postage becomes something like mercury, which is acted upon by external influences and goes up or down as they dictate; and our postal revenues must rise and fall, not according to the judgment of Congress or the necessities of the country, but according to what some foreign government may do.

Now, if this rule is to apply as to seeds, bulbs, and plants, I say it should apply also as to letters. We have a letter-rate of 2 cents per ounce, and the Canadian rate is 3 cents, and, by parity of reasoning, if this position is tenable we ought to advance our postage on letters to 3 cents to correspond with the Canadian rate.

But, on the other hand, we have the difficulty of being obliged to contend with Mexico. She charges 5 cents postage on letters, and we charge only 2; so that an article corresponding with article 4 of the convention with Canada was inserted in the treaty with Mexico to protect her postal revenues and to keep people from crossing the border on the Rio Grande and mailing their correspondence on the American side, in order to save 3 cents on each letter.

I wish next to call attention to the argument as to merchandise. Taking the Canadian postal code, it will be seen that while Canada has the advantage of us in the simple matter of plants and scions only—not as to seeds—we have the advantage of her as to all other articles of merchandise, because her rate is 24 cents a pound on such matter, while our rate is 16 cents.

As to the argument for reduction, it is urged that we ought to put our rate down to the Canadian rate—4 cents. I say we ought not to do any such thing. No reason or argument has been adduced to satisfy my mind that we should proceed to reduce the rates of postage in the United States to conform to those of Canada upon seeds, etc., unless we deny to our people the advantages derived under the treaty in the shipment of other kinds of merchandise.

But the Government of the United States, as I understand, does not undertake to carry merchandise for the people of this country at a loss. The Department is established upon the principle that it can do the legitimate mail service for the people more cheaply and more efficiently than it can be done by private individuals; but the Government expects the parties who use the mails to defray the expense of handling matter which is carried through the mails. This being true, when we come down to handling the matter embraced in this controversy it can not be handled for less than 8 cents a pound without loss. The accompanying letter from the Postmaster-General, addressed to me as chairman of the subcommittee having in charge the consideration of the bill to reduce postage on seeds, bulbs, plants, and cions, shows that the seedsmen of the United States are amply protected under the bill reported from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads now pending before the House.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., March 13, 1888.

DEAR SIR: In compliance with your oral request for certain information with regard to the rate of postage on seeds, bulbs, cuttings, etc., and the effect of the recent postal convention, I have the honor to state that the present tariff law, as construed by the Treasury Department, imposes rates of duty on goods of this character as follows:

First. On wheat, 20 cents a bushel.

Second. On rye, barley, oats, and Indian corn, 10 cents a bushel.

Third. On linseed or flaxseed, 20 cents a bushel of 56 pounds.

Fourth. On hempseed, rapeseed, and other oil seeds of like character, not including flaxseed, one-quarter of a cent a pound.

Fifth. On garden seeds (except seed of the sugar-beet), and on bulbs and bulbous roots, 20 per cent. ad valorem. The following have been decided to be garden seeds: Artichoke, asparagus, balm, beans (not edible), beets (not sugar-beet), borage, brocoli, Brussels sprouts, cabbage, carrot, cauliflower, celeriac, celery, chevil, chicory, chive, collard, coriander, corn-salad, cress, cucumber, dandelion, egg-plant, endive, hyssop, kale, kohl-rabi, lavender, leek, lettuce, marjoram, martynia, melon, mushroom spawn, nasturtium, okra, onion, parsley, parsnip, pease (not edible), pepper, radish, rhubarb, rosemary, rue, saffron, sage, salsify, savory, scorzonera, sea-kale, shallot, sorrel, spinach, squash, Swiss-chard, thyme, tomato, vegetable-marrow.

Sixth. On beans (edible), pease (edible), and lentils, 10 per cent. ad valorem.

Seventh. Flower, grass, mangel-wurzel, turnip, pumpkin, and hoarhound seed, and seed of the sugar-beet are free of duty; so also are buds, fruits, flowers, herbs, plants, trees, shrubs, and vines of all kinds.

It will be seen that in the mailing of garden seeds, the rate of duty on which is 20 per cent. ad valorem, the Canadian has very little advantage, if any, over the dealer in this country, even at the present fourth-class rate of postage. The advantage will be only on such seeds that have a commercial value of less than 60 cents per pound, as will be seen by the following calculation:

	Cents.
Postage on 1 pound of garden seeds mailed in the United States	16
Postage on same quantity mailed in Canada to United States	4
Twenty per cent. duty on same (value, 60 cents a pound)	12
	16

As, in fact, there are very few gardenseeds sold for less than 60 cents a pound, there need be no complaint of the present rates of postage, so far as concerns the question of competition with Canada.

Of course the same calculation would not apply to this class of matter of less value, but the suggested reduction of the American postage to 8 cents per pound would, as I have before stated, probably meet every difficulty.

I am advised by the Secretary of the Treasury that he has now issued instructions to the collectors of customs along the border for an inspection of mail matter of this description passing the border under the late postal convention for the collection of the duty.

I have to-day directed the Superintendent of the Foreign Mail Service to transmit to you a copy of an order recently made by me on the postal convention and other information in regard to its practical workings.

Referring again to your oral suggestion, at our interview this morning, that the balance of mail matter exchanged between Canada and the United States was in favor of Canada, I beg to state that you are in error, and the Superintendent of the Foreign Mails will be pleased to attend before the committee and furnish accurate statistics on this subject.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

DON M. DICKINSON,
Postmaster-General.

Hon. B. A. ENLOE, M. C.,
House of Representatives.

Maintaining the idea that it is not the policy of the Government to carry mail matter at a loss, except such matter as periodical publications which promote intelligence among the people and thereby increase the revenues from first-class matter, I applied to the Third Assistant Postmaster-General for information as to the profit or loss in handling third-class matter, because it is the proposition of a majority of the committee to change the classification of seeds, plants, bulbs, and cions from the fourth to the third class. His response is here given, in order that all these matters may be clearly understood when the bill on the Calendar relating to this subject is brought forward for consideration.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THIRD ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., March 17, 1888.

SIR: In reply to your verbal inquiry of this morning, I have the honor to inform you that it is the general opinion of experienced officers of this Department that the rate of postage on third-class matter—namely, 1 cent for every 2 ounces—affords no revenue to the Government in excess of the cost of transmission and handling; in other words, that the matter is carried at a loss. On fourth-class matter there is supposed to be a profit, but a very small one.

To reduce postage on any kind of fourth-class matter to 1 cent for 4 ounces would undoubtedly result in a loss to the postal revenues.

I regret that I have no statistics now on hand, and not sufficient time to get any for your use, in support of this opinion.

Yours, very respectfully,

H. R. HARRIS,
Third Assistant Postmaster-General.

Hon. B. A. ENLOE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to go further into any general discussion of this matter than I have already gone. But I want to make this statement: There are demands coming up from all parts of the country upon the Post-Office Department for increased expenditures. Ever since we have been in session here the great West has been clamoring for increased mail facilities. The clerks in first and second class post-offices are demanding a reclassification and increased pay. The postmasters in second and third class post-offices are asking increased appropriations for rent, light, and fuel. Then we have representatives from the growing cities demanding an extension of the free-delivery system. We also have a demand from fifty-two thousand fourth-class postmasters that provision be made for increased compensation for this class of deserving officials, who are not compensated as they should be under the existing law.

We have also a demand coming up from the country (and it will not be long before the question is pressed upon Congress) that we shall reduce letter postage to 1 cent an ounce—cutting off at one blow $17,000,000 of the revenues of this Department. We have also a demand for the reduction of postage upon drop-letters at free-delivery offices. There are also urgent demands that money-orders in sums not exceeding $5 shall be issued for 3 cents. In this connection I will make the statement that it costs the Government a fraction over 10 cents to issue a money-order; the Government receives for such order a fee of 5 cents, and it looks to me as if the man who buys such an order ought to be satisfied if the Government transmits his money for less than one-half the cost of issuing and paying the order.

If these demands are to be met now or in the future, it can not be done by making the United States Government a common carrier, to carry merchandise at a loss to the Post-Office Department, unless Congress is prepared to take out of the revenues derived from taxation the necessary sum to make good the loss in handling the mails. To this policy I am not prepared to assent. I believe that the present Administration is conducting the affairs of this Department in pursuance of a wise and liberal policy, and I am unwilling to make distinctions in merchandise, aside from what may be done by classification, that will create a heavy deficiency to be met by taxation.

But, Mr. Speaker, it is insisted here that all of this clamor against this convention, which is made the pretext for demanding exceptional privileges for this class of matter through the mails, is prompted by sympathy for the agricultural classes, who pay the postage on seeds, bulbs, etc. I will call attention to the accompanying correspondence as evidence of the demands made upon Congress by this class of our citizens in reference to this matter. It was voluntarily addressed to me; at least so far as I am concerned and in view of the discussion of this matter it is important information.

Out of the great mass of correspondence addressed to me on the same subject, which seems to have proceeded from the United States Postal Improvement Convention, I will only present the communications of State and national organizations:

WEST RIVER, ANNE ARUNDEL COUNTY, MARYLAND,
February 11, 1888.

DEAR SIR: The Maryland State Grange indorses most heartily the action of the National Grange in regard to reduction of postage on plants and seeds.

Yours, truly,

H. M. MURRAY,
Master of Maryland State Grange.

Hon. BENJAMIN A. ENLOE.

SALEM, OREGON, February 9, 1888.

GENTLEMEN: I am requested to inform you of action relative to reduced horticultural postage taken by the State Grange of Oregon, and would say that that organization has not met since the question has been at issue. I have no doubt, however, but that the action, when it does meet, will be in accord with that of the National Grange.

Respectfully, yours,

R. P. BOISE,
Master of State Grange of Oregon.

Messrs. BENJAMIN A. ENLOE and JAMES H. BLOUNT,
Postal Committee, Washington, D. C.

INDIANA STATE GRANGE, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Adams, Ind., February 20, 1888.

DEAR SIR: I write you in behalf of several thousand farmers of our State who belong to the Order of Patrons, and would say that anything you or your committee may effect in the way of giving us lower rates of postage on seeds, plants, and bulbs will be gratefully acknowledged and duly appreciated.

We think 4 cents per pound sufficient postage on above-named articles, but will be satisfied with a reduction of one-half from present rates, if the committee think best to ask for no more.

Hoping your judgment in this matter may agree with those who favor lower postal rates, I am,

Very respectfully, yours,

J. H. WALKER,
Secretary Indiana State Grange.

Hon. BENJ. A. ENLOE,
Washington, D. C.

NEBRASKA STATE GRANGE, Indianola, Nebr., February 12, 1888.

DEAR SIRS: I received the within dispatch last night. I do not fully understand what is wanted of me. In regard to postage, the State Grange of Nebraska took no action whatever in regard to postage at its last session.

Respectfully and fraternally, yours,

L. C. ROOT,
Secretary State Grange of Nebraska.

BENJAMIN A. ENLOE and JAMES H. BLOUNT,
Washington.

"SPRINGFIELD, MASS., February 8, 1888.

"L. C. ROOT, Indianola:

"Please communicate instantly State grange action relative reduced postage; particulars to BENJAMIN ENLOE, JAMES H. BLOUNT, office House Postal Committee, Washington, if grange has not acted efficiently National Grange on seed postage.

"HERBERT MYRICK,
"Agricultural Agent."

SOUTH WOODSTOCK, CONN., February 9, 1888.

DEAR SIR: Your attention is called to the fact that the National Grange, and some thirty State granges, and hundreds of local granges throughout the length and breadth of our country have taken a decided stand in favor of reduced rates of postage as pertaining to horticulture. We trust you will see the necessity of this reform, and use your utmost endeavor to bring about favorable action.

The four thousand members of the grange in Connecticut are unanimous in this matter, and look to you to aid them. Hoping you will labor earnestly in this matter,

I remain, yours, truly,

LEWIS J. WELLS,
Secretary Connecticut State Grange.

BENJAMIN A. ENLOE, Esq.

SOUTH GLASTONBURY, CONN., February 11, 1888.

DEAR SIR: The matter of reduced rates of postage on seeds, plants, etc., has been discussed before most of the subordinate granges of our State during the past year, and there is a strong feeling that the rural communities (many of them quite a distance from express offices) would be greatly benefited by a reduction of at least one-half in the present rate of 16 cents per pound, and that the increased business would compensate the Postal Department for this reduction. Our State grange at its annual meeting in December voted unanimously in favor of this reform, as did the National Grange at its last session, and I trust that your committee will see its way clear to recommend such reduction to Congress.

Respectfully, yours,

J. H. HALE,
Master Connecticut State Grange.

Hon. B. A. ENLOE.

MONTPELIER, VT., February 20, 1888.

DEAR SIR: I desire to say to your honorable committee that H. R. bill 3258, to reduce postage on fourth-class matter, is of vital importance to the farmers as a class, and its enactment will receive their hearty approval.

I send you by this mail a copy of the proceedings of the Vermont State Grange, which contains a resolution passed by that body. Hoping for a favorable report from your committee,

I remain, yours, truly,

[SEAL.] LEROY A. FLINT,
Secretary Vermont State Grange.

Hon. B. A. ENLOE,
Committee on Post-Office and Post-Roads.

OSYKA, MISS., February 11, 1888.

GENTLEMEN: I write to urge the reduction of postage on all horticultural matter, seeds, cuttings, etc., in the name of the Louisiana State Grange.

Being a farmer and horticulturist myself, I know that it is important and desirable to get the postage reduced to one-half cent per ounce on that class of matter.

Yours, very respectfully,

[SEAL.] H. W. L. LEWIS,
Secretary Louisiana State Grange, Patrons of Husbandry.

Hon. BENJAMIN A. ENLOE and JAMES H. BLOUNT,
Postal Committee.

POMARIA, NEWBERRY COUNTY, S. C., February 9, 1888.

GENTLEMEN: Our State Grange, at its last session, failed to take action on reduced horticultural postage. But I feel warranted in saying that the action of the National Grange, November, 1887, and on pages 102 and 103 of the proceedings of same, meets my most hearty approval, especially—

First. Reduced postage on seeds, plants, bulbs, and cions.

Second. The reissue of fractional currency for use in the mails.

Fourth. Issue of money-orders for $5 or less for a fee of 3 cents.

Very respectfully,

THOS. W. HOLLOWAY, Secretary.

To Messrs. BENJAMIN A. ENLOE and JAMES H. BLOUNT,
Postal Committee.

SALADO, TEX., February 10, 1888.

GENTLEMEN: In reply to request made by Herbert Myrick, secretary United States Postal Improvement Association, to inform you of the action of the Texas State Grange relative to the reduction of postage on seeds, etc., will say that our grange has not met since meeting of National Grange, but am gratified to be able to report that many of our subordinate and county granges have indorsed the action of the National Grange on this question, found on pages of printed proceedings 102 and 103, and I am quite sure that the vote in Texas by our order and the farmers generally would be unanimous throughout the State.

Wishing you great success in this and all other legitimate work,

Yours, most truly,

A. J. ROSE,
Master Texas State Grange.

BENJAMIN A. ENLOE and JAMES H. BLOUNT,
Office House Postal Committee, Washington, D. C.

DELTA, OHIO, February 9, 1888.

The State Grange of Ohio and all members of the order in Ohio heartily indorse the resolution of the National Grange on seed postage.

Yours, truly,

J. H. BRIGHAM,
Master of Ohio State Grange.

Hon. B. A. ENLOE and JAMES H. BLOUNT.

EAST GREENWICH, R. I., February 11, 1888.

DEAR SIR: I am prompted to address you from the fact of your position as chairman of subcommittee on postal affairs and urge upon you the desires of all the subgranges, constituting this State grange, as well also as farmers and others generally throughout the State, for the reduction of postage upon seeds, etc., a better medium, other than the postal-note, for transmission through the mails, and the issuing of small money-orders at a lower fee, or any other reform which may tend to increase the postal service for public good, without incurring unwarrantable expense. Begging your attention upon the foregoing, believe me, sincerely and respectfully, yours,

NATHL. T. REYNOLDS.

Hon. BENJAMIN A. ENLOE,
Washington, D. C.

NEWTON, IOWA, February 9, 1888.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: The Iowa State Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, did not take official action on reduced horticulture postage as presented by your communication to National Grange meeting, held at Lansing, Mich., November, 1887, and its indorsement of the same by National Grange, as recorded on page 102 of published minutes. I am very sure that had the whole report been presented to our State grange it would have unanimously adopted every item in said report. I most cordially indorsed the action of National Grange.

Fraternally,

J. W. MURPHY, Secretary.

HERBERT MYRICK.

WOODSTOWN, N. J., February 10, 1888.

HONORABLE SIR: It was the unanimous sentiment of our members at the last meeting held in Trenton, and of our State board of agriculture, as well as of all of our agriculturists, that there be a law passed by your honorable body to secure a reduction of the postage on seeds, plants, bulbs, etc., and for the reissue of fractional currency for the use of the mails, the abolition of postal-notes, and for the issuing of money-orders for $5 and less for a fee of 3 cents. Our Government is not in need of the money arising from the sale of postal-notes, which is quite a tax on the people.

Please use your influence for the passage of such an act, and the agriculturists of our entire country will ever hold you in grateful remembrance.

Very respectfully, your humble servant,

M. D. DICKINSON, Secretary.

Hon. B. A. ENLOE, Esq.

MARLBOROUGH, MASS., February 11, 1888.

DEAR SIR: The grangers of Massachusetts earnestly desire improvement in the postal laws, securing (1) reduced postal rates on seeds, etc.; (2) our members living mostly in rural districts would find fractional currency most convenient to use in sending small sums of money through the mails, and desire a law causing its reissuing; (3) in that case postal-notes can and ought to be abolished; (4) we desire to have post-office money-orders issued in sums of $5 or less for a fee of 3 cents or less.

Yours, very respectfully,

A. A. BRIGHAM,
Master State Grange.

Hon. BENJAMIN A. ENLOE.

ROCHESTER, VT., February 13, 1888.

DEAR SIR: It is the earnest desire of the farmers of this State, repeatedly expressed in subordinate Pomona and State Grange, that there should be a reduction in horticultural postage. It is a matter of much importance to farmers, and we trust that your committee will carefully consider the matter and act wisely for the highest and best interests of the producing class of people in this country.

Very respectfully, yours,

A. MESSER.

Hon. BENJAMIN ENLOE, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

RHODE ISLAND STATE GRANGE, Kingston, R. I., February 15, 1888.

Hon. BENJAMIN A. ENLOE, M. C.:

Please urge uncompromisingly reduced postage and fractional currency. The farmers need it; they want it.

J. G. PECKHAM,
Master State Grange.

DELAWARE STATE GRANGE, Wyoming, Del., February 9, 1888.

Hon. BENJAMIN A. ENLOE,
House of Representatives Postal Committee:

Delaware State Grange unanimously favors immediate reduction of postage on seeds, plants, and bulbs.

A. M. BROWN, Master.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., February 8, 1888.

DEAR SIR: To show you the general demand that exists among farmers for reduction in the postage on seeds, plants, bulbs, and cions from 16 cents to 8 or 4 cents per pound, I have requested Hon. John F. Trimble, of 514 F street, Washington, D. C., secretary of the National Grange, to present you with a copy of the proceedings at the twenty-first session of that body at Lansing, in November, 1887. On page 96 you will find the following:

"Brother J. H. Hale, Connecticut, offered the following, and on motion it was adopted:

"Whereas the present rates of postage on seeds, plants, and bulbs has been increased from 8 cents per pound to 16 cents per pound; and

"Whereas by the present rate it only costs half as much to send a package of seeds or plants to Australia and other distant countries as it does to send the same package anywhere in our own country; and

"Whereas it thus being evident that this discrimination is to benefit the express companies, and manifestly against the interests of the farmer: Therefore,

"Resolved, That, in the judgment of this meeting, the grange, national, State, and subordinate, should, by petition to Congress and by all other lawful means, seek the reduction of the present rate and the restoration of the original rate of 8 cents per pound."

On page 102 you will find this, but still further emphasized by a committee report, as follows:

"WORTHY MASTER: Your committee, to whom was referred the communication from Brother Herbert Myrick, secretary of the United States Postal Improvement Association, have carefully considered the objects of this association, and, in view of the fact that the grange has already by resolution placed itself on record as favoring a reduction of postage on seeds, plants, and bulbs, and the other objects sought to be accomplished being right in the line of such postal improvement as will greatly benefit our rural communities, we would most respectfully recommend that this grange cordially approve of the object and purposes of this association, and would urge upon Congress to pass such laws as will secure—

"A reissue of fractional currency for use in the mails.

"Abolition of the present unsafe and inconvenient postal-notes.

"Provisions for the issuance of postal money-orders in sums of $5 or less for a fee of 3 cents."

I would also beg to call your attention to the general report of the committee on agriculture at this session of the National Grange, especially the second paragraph, on page 158 of the proceedings, which reads:

"The National Grange favors the further reduction of the rate of postage on articles of the fourth class, which covers agricultural seeds and productions, and asks that there should be such changes or reductions as will give to the farmers of the country the same cheap service as is employed by Canada and other nations."

You will observe that here are three committees whose reports were unanimously adopted after much discussion, showing conclusively the sentiments of the National Grange of the Patrons of Husbandry. You will notice that this organization is made up from the representatives of about thirty-five State granges, which claim to have an aggregate membership exceeding one million farmers. This matter has also received the official sanction and indorsement of many of the State granges at their sessions since the meeting of the National Grange, including the State granges of Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Georgia, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Ohio, Oregon, Rhode Island, Vermont, and, I believe, of Mississippi, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Virginia, and Wisconsin. I will request the secretaries of these respective State organizations to officially notify you of what action they have taken in the matter.

I would also state that many of the county and subordinate granges, whose representatives make up these respective State granges, have also discussed and indorsed the objects of the United States Postal Improvement Association.

I trust that your committee will not underrate the demand that exists for this reduced postage. The principal objection that can be urged against it seems to be the assumption that it will inure solely to the advantage of seedsmen. I think it was made plain at our hearing on February 3 that the rate of postage on seeds has practically nothing to do with their cost price. You will find by consulting most of the seed catalogues that the prices are given for all varieties, and then a note is added that to this price must be added 16 cents per pound for postage when sent by mail. The fact is, the consumers will get the benefit of this reduced postage, and, were it otherwise, I certainly could not, in my position, afford to advocate it. At the same time the seedsmen's interest in the reduction lies in the fact that it will increase their business, and therefore enable them to make more money, not by retaining to themselves a part of this reduction in postage, but by making an increased number of sales, which they expect to do when the public find that they can get fresh and reliable seeds without having to pay an excessive rate for transportation by mail.

Yours, very truly,

HERBERT MYRICK, Secretary.

Hon. BENJAMIN A. ENLOE,
House Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, Washington, D. C.

OFFICE OF SECRETARY-TREASURER,
Dresden, Tenn., February 12, 1888.

DEAR SIR: "The Agricultural Wheel of the United States of America" demands of Congress through your committee that the postage on all seeds be reduced, as this burden bears heaviest on the laboring classes of the country, and we must look to Congress for relief.

Yours, truly,

A. E. GARDNER.

Hon. BENJAMIN A. ENLOE,
Washington, D. C.

MOULTON, APPANOOSE COUNTY, IOWA, February 11, 1888.

DEAR SIR: The National Farmers' Alliance of the United States, with a membership of 800,000, and the Iowa Farmers' Alliance, with a membership of 200,000, demand a reduction on seeds and plants.

On behalf of the alliances, I am, very truly,

AUGUST POST, Secretary.

Hon. BENJAMIN A. ENLOE,
House Postal Committee, Washington, D. C.

Mr. Speaker, in the beginning of this controversy, when I was asking for a reduction upon this class of matter from 16 to 8 cents a pound, I thought I was representing the great agricultural classes of the country; but I was somewhat surprised when we got into the discussion of the question that I was mistaken in that respect, as this interest appeared to be represented by the great granger from Wall street, the gentleman from New York [Mr. WHITE]. [Laughter.]

Having consumed as much time as I care to in the discussion of this matter, I yield the floor to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ALLEN], reserving the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has twenty-seven minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I have been for some time a member of this body, and during that period I have witnessed many strange transactions here, but the spectacle of a majority of a leading committee of this House coming before this body with an adverse report on a request for official information from the head of a great Department of this Government, and asking this House to sustain them in sending the minority to seek for information to the newspapers as the official source of that information, is a spectacle, I take it, unequaled in Federal legislation.

This resolution, Mr. Speaker, simply calls for specific information from the head of the Post-Office Department respecting a certain order alleged to have been issued by that official, directing subordinate officers of that Department to mark up certain articles of postage, which have been mailed by citizens of the United States in Canada under the provisions of the postal treaty of 1888, when directed to inhabitants within the United States. That is all there is to it; and I imagine this House will not authorize any adverse report on any such request for that simple information, when the information to be derived will bear upon the interests of thousands of patient farmers and agriculturists all over this country, who are seeking to know what the Congress of the United States is going to do on this question.

Now, such a declination on the part of Congress to authorize the calling for this information would very properly be construed by the people, who have the right to know the reasons for the action of their Representatives on all such matters, as due to either one of two reasons: one a desire to completely ignore the wishes of the minority seeking for information, and this would be neither courteous nor just, or for the purpose of shielding some incompetent official by imitating the strategic arts of the ostrich [laughter]; and I doubt very much whether the majority cares to acknowledge either of these purposes. I can not believe the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, composed, as it is, of level-headed men, cares to withhold the full light, on any of the transactions of the Post-Office Department. Their evident desire to give to people everywhere, the largest possible extension of postal privileges is evidence against any such assumption as that; so that I am at a loss to understand how an adverse report of this sort gets from that committee to this House.

But, sir, there are reasons, and good reasons, why every member of this House should be put in possession of this information and should be in full possession of all the facts. Let me state a little more specifically what I mean by that. There is a large proportion of our people who are interested, in one way or another, in this matter of cheap postage. As far back as 1873, Congress recognized the wisdom of giving to the farmers of this land reduced postage on agricultural seeds and plants, bulbs and cuttings, and authorized the passage of an act in that year placing the rate of those articles at 1 cent for every 2 ounces. This was further recognized in the act of June, 1874, and the farmers enjoyed the reduced postage until the legislation of 1875, when the rate was put at 1 cent an ounce. From that time to this, there has been continual discussion over this question of reduced postage, but owing to the comparatively unorganized condition of the farmers, this remedial legislation has never been effected.

But last year this matter was taken in charge by the National Grange, and in November, by vote, it demanded a reduction.

This action has been followed by the State granges of Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Vermont, Virginia, and Wisconsin, at their annual meetings (since the National Grange)—twenty-eight States.

This reduced postage has been demanded also from the Farmers' Alliance of the Northwest, including Minnesota, Dakota, Iowa, Nebraska, with a large membership in adjoining States. The National Farmers' Alliance of Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, North Carolina, Georgia, Florida, and South Carolina have also joined in the movement. The National Agricultural Wheel, a powerful organization in Missouri, Arkansas, and Tennessee, has voiced similar sentiments through its head. The State boards of agriculture of New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Vermont, New Hampshire, Maine, and several other States, together with almost innumerable other State, county, and local horticultural and agricultural societies, farmers' clubs, granges, alliances, etc., have voted in favor of this object, and in so doing they have simply represented the wishes of the great body of people who make up their vast membership.

I state this, Mr. Speaker, to the House, to show that this desire for reduced postage does not come from the seedsmen, who are not to profit by that reduction, but from the people themselves, who make up in vast numbers the organizations of the character which I have mentioned, and who pay the postage, and these people will see to it, that they get the benefit of the reduction.

I do not propose to stand here at this time, sir, to discuss the merits of a bill for the reduction of postage on seeds, bulbs, and cuttings from the present rate to 4 cents a pound, but I trust that a measure of that importance and magnitude will receive at an early date favorable action in this body, and that the House may soon have an opportunity of voting upon it. I come now to the consideration of the question presented by the pending resolution itself.

Not long ago the honorable Postmaster-General of the United States, filled with a desire of signalizing his administration of that great Department in some notable way possibly, or feeling that perhaps his name would achieve a higher notoriety if it could be linked with some great treaty, which in its beneficial results would outlive the mere transitory fame which comes to the ordinary Cabinet officer, and being filled with a desire to emulate, if he could not excel, the example of his colleague the head of the Department of State, entered into negotiations with the English Government as represented in the Dominion of Canada, by which he was willing to make certain concessions to the people who dwell in that beautifully picturesque province, by which they were to enjoy certain postal privileges with the people of the United States which up to this time had been denied them. With this patriotic impulse in mind, the Vilas postal treaty with Canada was conceived.

The time of approaching labor drew near; the nurses and midwives of the Department were on hand; they may have lacked somewhat in experience, but were full of enthusiasm, and what they lacked in skill they made up in this quality; the approaching moment of labor was at hand; it drew nearer, and at last the supreme moment arrived, and amid general rejoicing the poor little postal treaty of the United States of America and the Dominion of Canada opened its little weak, watery eyes upon a cheerless and inquisitive world. [Laughter and applause.]

It was such a little one, Mr. Speaker, that it did not attract very much notice at the time, outside of the immediate family [laughter], and, unlike Mr. Dickens's famous character, it was not born with a caul; but it had a protocol, upon which was emblazoned in proper heraldic design the full genealogical tree. [Renewed laughter.]

This interesting event happened on the 26th day of January, 1888, and on the question of this treaty, hangs the whole story of this resolution.

Now, what were the terms of this most remarkable treaty, and what were the benefits the people of the United States were to gain from it? Well, now, briefly, the terms of the treaty were these: Any one could place in the domestic mails that were to be exchanged under this treaty, any article which was admitted to the domestic mails of either country. The postal rates on those articles were to be paid in the country of origin, and the rate of postage fixed in the country of origin. That is to say, each country was to have absolute control of all the postal revenues so collected; and there were to be no postal accounts kept as between the two countries on such matter. This convention went into effect on the 1st day of March—that is, the present month—of this year.

About that time many observant and shrewd business men of this country, knowing that the postage on seeds, bulbs, cuttings, etc., in this country was 16 cents a pound, while in Canada it was but 4 cents a pound—when it was ascertained that this treaty was going into effect I am credibly informed there were gathered on the Canadian borders a large amount of seeds, plants, bulbs, etc., which were promptly mailed in the Canadian post-offices, the postage paid, and the revenues went into the Canadian government, while the United States simply furnished the trains for their transportation through the United States, thus furnishing transportation and delivering them all over this country, wherever directed, for nothing.

The postal revenues were paid in Canada and belonged to Canada, while the United States were to carry these things under the terms of this treaty, for nothing. In the mean time the developments which might be expected out of this thing, seemed so large, that the Post-Office Department began to look into the matter, for there was another feature which removed it from of the nature of a postal treaty and placed it in the category of a commercial treaty in the widest sense; and o course there was no authority in the Postal Department to negotiate such a treaty.

These men engaged in this seed business issued illustrated catalogues. They could be transmitted to Canada, mailed there for 2 cents each, and then sent all over this country by our benevolent Government for nothing. Here was an opportunity for the development of business interests entirely unexpected by the Post-Office Department when this treaty was entered into. And not only this, but it brought about a loss of postal revenue here. While in this order of the Postmaster-General they are estopped from shipping through Canada, there remains this commercial right of going into Canada, employing there the printers, buying their paper in Canada, and employing Canadian labor, which is cheaper than American, in the printing, the binding, and illustrating of their catalogues and in putting them in packets and mailing them. And we lose not only the postal revenues, but we lose the entire business of preparing all that amount of advertising matter.

Now let me follow this with a little computation that we may see the practical effect of this Canadian treaty. There are already some one hundred and forty seedsmen now mailing from Canada, and it is fair to assume there are at least twenty enterprising seedsmen in our own country near enough to the border to establish branches in Canada who will take immediate advantage of this treaty; some have already done so.

I happen to have conveniently at hand the shipment made on Friday, March 16, by a fairly representative house, and the figures are accurate:

Shipped by mail, 4,368 pounds seeds, bulbs, etc.
Shipped by mail, 1,000 catalogues.

Now, supposing these one hundred and sixty seedsmen—to mention no more—ship an equal amount, and we have, for each day:

Daily shipment by mail, 698,880 pounds seeds, bulbs, etc.
Daily shipment by mail, 160,000 catalogues.

Which, at our rate of 16 cents per pound for the seeds and 4 cents each for the catalogues, would aggregate $118,220.80 daily, and if the shipment averaged three months or ninety days in a year, would amount to the considerable sum of $10,639,872, or if the postage should be reduced to 4 cents per pound, $2,659,968. Thus we approach in a business way the "effect on the revenues." The principal effect being to turn over to the Canadian Government something like two or three millions of revenue, throw into the hands of the Canadian printers much of the vast advertising business of the large patent-medicine men of this country, with all the indirect benefits and profits which follow in the lead of these great enterprises. But not only that, there is this advantage to those seedsmen who avail themselves of the terms of this treaty. There is the disadvantage of the difference between 4 cents and 16 cents to those seedsmen who are so unfortunate as to be situated so far from the frontier that the cost of transportation and the establishment of a branch house on the other side of the border, would be an insurmountable obstacle.

Let me illustrate, to show how this treaty operates to the disadvantage of Americans and the advantage of Canadians. If I can give a practical illustration on this point, what I mean will be recognized better by those who honor me with their attention. It is a matter of fact that nearly all the garden peas sold in this country are raised in Canada. The United States duty is only 10 cents a bushel—simply nothing. The Canadian seedsman charges his customer, wherever he may be, 20 cents a quart for those pease. A quart is figured out as being equivalent to 2 pounds. He pays 8 cents postage; he delivers those peas, I will say, to my friend from New York [Mr. COX], who does me the honor to listen. That makes 28 cents. But the American seedsman also charges 20 cents a quart, and, under the terms of our postal arrangements, pays 16 cents a pound. On 2 pounds that is 32 cents. He wants to sell to my friend from New York [Mr. COX], who, as a shrewd man, will not pay 52 cents when he can get the same article at 28 cents. That gives the Canadian Government 24 cents advantage on every quart.

Now, sir, I do not understand what this can mean. Why this continual deference on the part of our Administration to the English Government? It can not be that they intend to deliver this people over, bound hand and foot, to that Government; especially after having started out with that blaze of red light and that fizz of pin-wheels as the curtain arose upon what we were led to believe was to be a real drama of "Jacksonian simplicity" and a true "business" administration. [Laughter.] Why, sir, I am afraid if we had one more session of an English commission in this city, we should find the members of this Administration abandoning their simple American habits, and dashing down the avenue in English drags behind bang-tailed thoroughbreds, or walking about in our streets with orchid blossoms in their button-holes and their trousers turned up at the bottoms as if they were just off Pall Mall, London, or sporting huge canes and bull terriers. [Laughter.]

But, Mr. Speaker, this is only a fanciful sketch, and we do not, of course, expect to see anything of the kind.

I am afraid, sir, that I have taken more time than I ought, for I have promised time to others, but what I wanted to emphasize is the fact that under any construction which you can put upon this postal treaty with Canada, it places our American seedsmen at a disadvantage compared with the seedsmen in that country—a disadvantage which, under the present condition of things, can not be stated in actual figures. And more than that, it opens the field to the great advertisers, the patent-medicine men, the dealers in articles that are widely advertised in cook-books, in calendars, in books of games, and various things which are used in advertising. If the owners of those enterprises can not have their books printed here, then, under the terms of this treaty, they can have it done in Canada and mail them from there at a saving of one-half the postage. The editions of works of that kind are simply enormous, and these men can go into Canada and have the work done there and give the Canadians the large profits which are made upon such work, and also the incidental profits which always follow in the train of those enterprises. They can do that, and there is no way to help it, except under the terms of the treaty itself our Government can have it abrogated after giving six months' notice. There is no other remedy unless this Government, in a spirit of fairness to its own citizens, will come into Congress with a bill to arrange postal rates which will put our people on a par with their competitors on the other side of the line, instead of leaving them in the position in which the Department—no doubt unwittingly—has placed them by this treaty.

Mr. LONG. You think they did not know any better?

Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts. I have no doubt that it has been done unwittingly, but these are the facts as I see them.

Mr. HATCH. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. HATCH. Is there not a bill reported from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and on the Calendar, providing for this reduction?

Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts. There is a bill on the Calendar which provides for a reduction. Then there is a minority report accompanying that bill which recommends a still further reduction to a rate which would be probably fair and reasonable.

Mr. HATCH. But there is a bill pending that will give the House jurisdiction over the subject-matter and upon which we can act?

Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts. I think there is.

Mr. BOUTELLE. And we are getting a little information now, which will enable us to act intelligently.

Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts. Now, let me go back to the question suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE]. He claims that there is relief for all this in the treaty itself, and he quotes article 4, which states that in case any correspondence is tendered for mailing in either country, obviously with the intent of evading the higher postage rate applicable to it in the other country, it shall be refused unless payment is made of such higher rate. Now, I want to dwell on this point only for a moment, because I think the gentleman answered his own argument in reading from the treaties. If his reading meant anything at all, it meant that there was difficulty in determining what was included under the term "correspondence" unless the articles were specified, and in each of the treaties that he read, it was specified what were to be covered by the word "correspondence." Now, Mr. Speaker, the only thing for the House to do is to pass this resolution, ignoring the report of the majority of the committee, and thus giving the Department an opportunity to come in and put its own construction on this treaty, in order that the committee and the House may know just what the Department's construction is, and may be enabled to enact such legislation as will correct the evils arising under it.

It is the only fair thing to do, and it will tend to relieve the Administration of the charges, continually made, of a small, stingy, cheeseparing policy, which saves at the spigot while it lets waste run loose at the bung.

Mr. PERKINS. As I understand the gentleman, he holds that the effect of this arrangement is to give the revenue to the Canadian post-office department while it imposes the labor upon our own mail service.

Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts. There is not the slightest doubt about that, because it is expressly provided that the postage shall be paid and collected where the matter is mailed.

Mr. PERKINS. And that revenue amounts to about two million dollars.

Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts. At least.

Mr. LONG. Is my colleague satisfied that the term "correspondence" would not include seeds, bulbs, and plants?

Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts. I am willing to take the construction of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE]. In those treaties which he quoted the term "correspondence" is construed to cover certain things which are specified by name, so that there may be no mistake.

Mr. ENLOE. The gentleman will find in Paragraph A, article 1, an enumeration of what may be embraced under the term "correspondence" as used in that treaty. I refer the gentleman to that provision. If he will read it, I will let him do so as an answer to himself; if not, I will ask to read it.

Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Tennessee can have it read at the desk.

Mr. ENLOE. I will read it myself.

Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts. Not in my time. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ENLOE. I will occupy only time enough to read from the article to which I have just referred. It provides that—

> Articles of every kind or nature admitted to the domestic mails of either country, except as herein prohibited, shall be admitted to the mails exchanged under this convention, subject, however, to such regulations as the postal administration of the country of destination may deem necessary to protect its customs revenues.

As an answer to the gentleman from Massachusetts, I call attention to this provision showing what is embraced under the term "correspondence" in this treaty.

Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. WHITE, of New York. Mr. Speaker, if one-half the amount of activity had been displayed on the part of the committee and on the part of the Post-Office Department in doing this business and giving this information as has been displayed in finding a way not to do it, and finding a way not to give the information, we could have had this matter disposed of weeks ago and an act could have been passed in this House testifying that, in the estimation of the American Congress, an American citizen is as good as a Canadian if he behaves as well. There has been no end of information given to us here by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE], which he managed, I suppose, to get from the office of the Postmaster-General through a favorable side entrance, but which this House can not get with the consent of the Post-Office Committee by a direct vote, simply because the Post-Office Committee, or the majority of that committee, prefer to dole out to this Congress such an amount of information as they deem it wholesome for the House to receive, while they and the Postmaster-General keep the great bulk of the information for private use.

Now, it has come to the knowledge of this House that a postal treaty has been entered into lately. It was described by my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ALLEN], as a "weakling;" and there have been some Democratic newspapers which, in commenting upon it, have reflected severely upon the Republican Senate for having ratified a treaty of this kind. I will say for the benefit of such newspapers and for the benefit of the House that this is a matter exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Executive of this Government. It is a treaty which the laws have trusted the Administration with the power to make; and we thus find out what kind of a treaty they make when there is no supervision over them.

The treaty looked harmless enough; nobody seemed to suspect "it was loaded." But I once lived in a district in Illinois which was largely settled by a very worthy class of people from Tennessee, the State represented here in part by my colleague on the committee [Mr. ENLOE]. The settlers there were men who did not like to swear with a "great big D." Most of them were men belonging to the Baptist persuasion, yet there was such fervor belonging to the State from which they came that they did not want to be deprived of all expletives, and when they found a particularly hard noun that needed a qualifying adjective they used to speak of it as a "dog-on-ed thing." Now, phrasing the matter so that a brevet deacon [laughter] might properly speak of this treaty, I would say that when the Administration came to play with it a while "the dog-on-ed thing" began to explode [laughter], and I send to the Clerk's desk, to be read in full, a letter showing the first explosion which seems to have startled them. Bear in mind that the treaty went into effect on the 1st of March, 1888, and on the 6th of March the letter which I send to the desk was written and sent to the Post-Office Department.

The Clerk read as follows:

ROCHESTER, N. Y., March 6, 1888.

DEAR SIR: Last week we commenced mailing plants and catalogues to parties in the United States via Canada. This is done to save 12 cents per pound on plants and 3 cents on each catalogue, less a very small expense of freight, etc., but the thought suggested itself to me that perhaps arrangements could be made whereby we could ship these packages of plants and catalogues distributed and bagged into States and mailing routes directly to Buffalo (the exchange office), instead of to Canada. This would save the Buffalo office the labor of distributing, as we could have them neatly put up in United States mail bags and labeled.

Of course we would put Canadian postage on each package so the Canadian Government would not lose by this change, and the United States Government would receive the same compensation as at present (nothing), and would be the gainer in not throwing so much work on the Buffalo office.

Yours, etc.,

JAMES VICK.

Hon. DON M. DICKINSON,
Postmaster-General, Washington, D. C.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. Mr. Speaker, before proceeding with my argument, as some friends near me say they did not understand the remarks in regard to the ratification of the treaty, I wish to make that matter clear by saying that this treaty under the law did not require to be ratified by the Senate; it never was even before the Senate, being a matter exclusively between the Post-Office Departments of Canada and this country.

Mr. BINGHAM. It was negotiated "by and with the advice of the President."

Mr. WHITE, of New York. Yes, "by and with the advice of the President"—not "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate."

Now, Mr. Speaker, when I used in the committee this little figure about the matter being "loaded," my esteemed friend from Tennessee said that I had not found out yet which end was loaded; and he cited with evident gusto what he has stated here to-day—that the United States in dealing with Canada got the better of the Dominion by 40 per cent. Now let us look at that matter so that everybody may understand it. The United States Government in its official representative capacity, with a treasury so full at the present time that it is making the gentlemen of the Ways and Means Committee of this House turn white when they encounter it—the United States in its representative capacity got the benefit of 40 per cent. out of the pockets of the American people as individuals and the Dominion of Canada lost 40 per cent. which went into the pockets of our Canadian neighbors on the border as individuals.

That is the kind of beneficent Government which we have at this time. I should say in that regard there was 40 per cent. taken out of the pockets of the people where it is needed—from the agriculturist and horticulturist, who most of all our people in this country at this time require assistance when assistance may be legitimately given—and put into the Treasury where it is not needed. In the words of the Koran: Great is Grover Cleveland, and Mr. Vilas, the Postmaster-General, is his prophet!

There has been a charge made here that there was an attempt to assail this treaty. Not at all. Nothing of the kind can be found in the resolution or elsewhere to that effect. I am one of those highly satisfied with the treaty, provided the same advantage is extended to our people which is extended to the men over the border.

I wish to call attention to the resolution, in which it will be found I did not ask anything which could justly be considered as offensive. I merely asked for certain matters of information, and if there was no such information in the possession of the Department it was very easy for the Postmaster-General to say so. The resolution was a very simple matter to answer if there was no information in the possession of the Department of the character indicated. But let me read the resolution:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, requested to communicate to this House what instructions, if any, whether by circular, letter, or otherwise, have been given to subordinate officers of the Post-Office Department with reference to mail matter received from the Dominion of Canada, which instructions are intended to prohibit American citizens from using the United States mails upon the same terms with citizens of said Dominion living in the same vicinage and competing in the same branches of business with said American citizens.

That the said Postmaster-General be requested to inform this House whether any statute law prevents mailing in the Dominion of Canada seeds, plants, and bulbs grown by American citizens upon American soil, and if there is no provision of law prohibiting it, whether he has assumed to impose a penalty at the rate of $320 per ton upon seeds, plants, and bulbs lawfully mailed by American citizens in an attempt to compete with Canadian seedsmen, to whom the United States has, by a recent postal treaty, given an advantage over American seedsmen in the way of postage at the rate of $240 per ton.

In case the Postmaster-General shall show that orders have been given directing the examination of incoming Canadian mails for evidence of their use by American citizens, that he be further requested to inform the House by what provision of the recent postal treaty with the Dominion of Canada, or by what provision of law, the officers of the postal service of the United States are authorized to place an espionage on the said Canadian mail for the purpose of determining whether citizens of the United States are availing themselves of the beneficent provisions which are accorded to Canadians by said postal treaty.

Mr. Speaker, how easy it would have been for the Postmaster-General to have answered that if no such instructions of the character indicated had been given. But there lies the difficulty, and the people see readily why it is the Postmaster-General withholds the information sought for by the resolution. He does not wish to make the unpleasant acknowledgment that they have entered into a treaty with the Dominion of Canada by which a man on the other side of Rouse's Point is favored to the extent of $240 a ton, to the disadvantage of another man living but a few yards from him on our side of the line, at Rouse's Point in Vermont, so that the people on our side of the border would be handicapped to that extent. Why not in those localities allow both classes of citizens having these articles to send them through the mails under the same terms? Why, if there is to be any advantage or disadvantage to one side or the other, should we negotiate a treaty giving the advantage to the Dominion and imposing a disadvantage upon our own people? Why should not the man only a mile away on our side send the same character of goods through the mails at the same rate as the man who lives a block away over an imaginary line.

Members of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads may see some reason in this, but for one I can not do so. If they blundered into making a treaty which has had the effect of taking money unfairly out of the pockets of our own citizens and benefiting the people on the other side of the line in Canada to the disadvantage of American citizens, why not let us know it at once, and let us apply the remedy as soon as possible?

Now, I wish to comment upon the construction placed upon the two articles in the postal treaty by the circular. I refer to clause c, article 2, and to article 4 of the treaty. These are the only clauses referring to the imposition of additional postage.

Clause c, article 2, is in these words:

(c) Each insufficiently prepaid letter shall have stamped on its cover the capital letter T, and shall have indicated plainly thereon, in figures, on the upper left-hand corner of the address, by the postal officials of the country of origin, the amount of the deficient postage, and only the amount so indicated shall be collected of addressees on delivery, except in cases of obvious error.

Whatever argument may be made on the meaning of the word "correspondence," I apprehend there will be none about the word "letter," and hence that clause of the section can not be made to apply to seeds, plants, and bulbs.

Now, take the fourth article, which is in the following words:

In case any correspondence is tendered for mailing in either country obviously with the intention to evade the higher postage rates applicable to it in the other country, it shall be refused, unless payment be made of such higher rates.

If you concede that "correspondence" means "bulbs," then the country where the articles are mailed is alone charged with the duty of collecting, and keeping as well, of the higher rate of postage, and there is no authority of law under the treaty whereby the United States Government can collect postage once accepted as fully prepaid by the Canadian Government.

Hence when the Postmaster-General directed United States rates of postage on seeds coming from Canada to be collected by United States postmasters, he assumed to impose a penalty not given him by law and not authorized by the treaty, and it was as much a usurpation as though he had confiscated the goods.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, while this resolution purports to ask for information, I undertake to say there is not a member of this House who has not the information which is asked for already in his possession. I undertake to say the gentleman from New York [Mr. WHITE] when he offered this resolution had every particle of information it calls for at the time he offered it. There is no difficulty on the part of the people of this country about this information in any way. Everything connected with it is notorious.

Now, before taking up the resolution let me say that an attempt has been made here to criticise the Post-Office Department in reference to catalogues, and it has been said that a vast amount has been gained by Canada and lost to the United States by catalogues under this treaty. I wish to say here the very terms in this treaty are the same as the provisions embodied in the treaty which was negotiated during the last administration of General Grant. So that whatever there is in this is not chargeable alone to this Administration. And if the people of Canada were disposed to hold to the terms they had in this matter, why we are in no worse condition than we were before. So much for that.

Now, sir, with reference to the question of postage on seeds. But perhaps I may as well call attention here, and will ask to have published in full a letter from the Postmaster-General containing some information as to the rates on seeds, bulbs, etc., in which he says:

It will be seen that in the mailing of garden seeds, the rate of duty on which is 20 per cent. ad valorem, the Canadian has very little advantage——

Mr. REED. Is that letter addressed to the committee?

Mr. BLOUNT. No, sir. I want to say for the information of the House——

Mr. REED. I thought this information was all published.

Mr. BLOUNT. I decline to yield.

Mr. REED. Oh, I see.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I decline to be interrupted by the gentleman for any such language.

Mr. REED. Exactly.

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes, exactly; for the gentleman from Maine is in the habit of interjecting himself into everybody's speeches——

Mr. REED. Oh, no; you are only allowing your temper to get the better of your recollection.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will not be interrupted.

Mr. REED. I will interrupt the gentleman if he sees fit to use such language as that.

Mr. BLOUNT. I insist that I shall be allowed to proceed in order.

Mr. REED. I hope you will proceed in order.

Mr. BLOUNT. I shall do so without being deterred by the gentleman from Maine.

I wish to call the attention of the House again to this letter; it is as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., March 13, 1888.

DEAR SIR: In compliance with your oral request for certain information with regard to the rate of postage on seeds, bulbs, cuttings, etc., and the effect of the recent postal convention, I have the honor to state that the present tariff law, as construed by the Treasury Department, imposes rates of duty on goods of this character as follows:

First. On wheat, 20 cents a bushel.

Second. On rye, barley, oats, and Indian corn, 10 cents a bushel.

Third. On linseed or flaxseed, 20 cents a bushel of 56 pounds.

Fourth. On hempseed, rapeseed, and other oil seeds of like character, not including flaxseed, one quarter of a cent a pound.

Fifth. On garden seeds (except seed of the sugar-beet), and on bulbs and bulbous roots, 20 per cent. ad valorem. The following have been decided to be garden seeds: Artichoke, asparagus, balm, beans (not edible), beets (not sugar-beet), borage, broccoli, Brussels sprouts, cabbage, carrot, cauliflower, celeriac, celery, chevil, chicory, chives, collard, coriander, corn-salad, cress, cucumber, dandelion, egg-plant, endive, hyson, kale, kohl-rabi, lavender, leek, lettuce, marjoram, marlynia, melon, mushroom spawn, nasturtium, okra, onion, parsley, parsnip, pease (not edible), pepper, radish, rhubarb, rosemary, rue, saffron, sage, salsify, savory, scorzonera, sea-kale, shallot, sorrel, spinach, squash, Swiss-chard, thyme, tomato, vegetable-marrow.

Sixth. On beans (edible), pease (edible), and lentils, 10 per cent. ad valorem.

Seventh. Flower, grass, mangel-wurzel, turnip, pumpkin, and hoarhound seed, and seed of the sugar-beet are free of duty; so also are buds, fruits, flowers, plants, trees, herbs, shrubs, and vines of all kinds.

It will be seen that in the mailing of garden seeds, the rate of duty on which is 20 per cent. ad valorem, the Canadian has very little advantage, if any, over the dealer in this country, even at the present fourth-class rate of postage. The advantage will be only on such seeds as have a commercial value of less than 60 cents per pound, as will be seen by the following calculation:

	Cents.
Postage on 1 pound of garden seeds mailed in the United States	16
Postage on same quantity mailed in Canada to United States	4
Twenty per cent. duty on same (value, 60 cents a pound)	12
	— 16

As, in fact, there are very few garden seeds sold for less than 60 cents a pound, there need be no complaint of the present rates of postage, so far as concerns the question of competition with Canada.

Of course the same calculation would not apply to this class of matter of less value, but the suggested reduction of the American postage to 8 cents per pound would, as I have before stated, probably meet every difficulty.

I am advised by the Secretary of the Treasury that he has now issued instructions to the collectors of customs along the border for an inspection of mail matter of this description passing the border under the late postal convention, for the collection of the duty.

I have to-day directed the Superintendent of Foreign Mail Service to transmit to you a copy of an order recently made by me on the postal convention, and other information in regard to its practical workings.

Referring again to your oral suggestion, at our interview this morning, that the balance of mail matter exchanged between Canada and the United States was in favor of Canada, I beg to state that you are in error, and the Superintendent of the Foreign Mails will be pleased to attend before the committee and furnish accurate statistics on this subject.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

DON M. DICKINSON,
Postmaster-General.

Hon. B. A. ENLOE, M. C.,
House of Representatives.

I had not intended, nor do I regard it as germane to the resolution before the House, to take this up at this time. I have no desire to oppose any resolution of inquiry that comes in proper form.

Now, what are the facts? A treaty was negotiated with Canada, whether wise or unwise, by which the rate on seeds and bulbs in Canada was less from Canada into this country than in our own domestic intercourse. It was a treaty agreed to between the two governments, binding not alone upon the citizens but upon the governments of either country.

A gentleman named Vick, a dealer in seeds in Western New York, has carried over into Canada and put into the Canadian mails as an American citizen seeds for distribution in this country. His place of business is near the border. He thereby avoids the proper charges upon his own side. He thereby gets an advantage over the seedsmen all over this country by reason of that performance. He has no right to any such privilege. The Canadian authorities have no power to take into the mails the seeds of American citizens, thus defrauding the revenues of this country. The Canadian authorities as soon as their attention was called to it immediately directed an inspection of the mails and the issuance of proper instructions to their postal officials to prevent such fraudulent use of the mails. This person then takes great offense at this ruling of the Department. He writes a letter complaining that there is great advantage given to the Canadian producer over the American producer, and boasts of what he is doing; that he is gaining a great advantage by this attempt to defraud the Government. The treaty stipulations between the two countries are well understood, and to the effect that while this treaty affords certain privileges to the Government and to the citizens of one and the other country, there shall be no fraud practiced such as that illustrated by the action of this party.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman permit a question for information?

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Unless the Canadian has an advantage in the treaty, how does the American get the advantages the gentleman speaks of by going over to Canada and sending his seeds from there?

Mr. BLOUNT. There is more than one provision to the treaty, and my friend is drawing me off from what I was endeavoring to explain.

Now, sir, what does the Postmaster-General do? When he finds that a few of our citizens are adopting this method of getting cheaper postage, he calls the attention of the Canadian authorities to it. He directs the attention of the American postmasters at offices of exchange and other officers of the postal service to the terms of the treaty, and says that it must be complied with. That is all. Was there anything wrong about that?

It has been alleged and argued gravely here that the word "correspondence" does not cover seeds; that it means letters alone. Why, sir, that position is absolutely absurd, and it is excluded by the well-accepted, universally accepted understanding on the part of all nations upon the earth in every treaty communication with the other, the word "correspondence" was technical and covered whatever matter was transported through the mails from either country. The pretext here set up, then, was a mere play upon words before the people of this country, who, it was assumed, did not understand the significance of it.

There is express provision in this very treaty for the rating up of postage where there has been any fraud in the use of the mails; and the Canadian Government has accepted the signification given to the word "correspondence" by our Post-Office Department and is carrying out that construction by preventing these gentlemen from fraudulently passing seeds through the mails.

The complaint has been only on the part of two persons so far as the Post-Office Department knows; two persons engaged in carrying seed across the Canadian line, so as to get the Canadian rate to which they were not entitled and give them an enormous advantage over all the seedsmen in this country who were not so situated. That is the complaint, and what the Postmaster-General has done is known to everybody. It was simply to require that when those seeds, etc., were mailed in Canada the postal department of that government should exclude them from the mails until proper postage was paid.

It is not a question whether the treaty is a good one or a bad one. Whatever the treaty is, it is the duty of the Postmaster-General as an upright official to execute it. I deny that any person in this country ever gets into a position so exalted that he, in his own good pleasure, can set aside a treaty or a law of the land. No gentleman will rise in his place on this floor and state it as his opinion that it is in the power of the Postmaster-General to close his eyes to the plain provisions of the treaty.

Now, then, if he has done that, if he has been seeking only to enforce a treaty entered into between the Government of the United States and the government of Canada, I ask gentlemen on either side of this House if the language of this resolution is such as we would regard as parliamentary in dealing with each other on this floor; if it be such as would be accepted as short of an insult if it were communicated by the President of the United States to either branch of Congress; if such language would be tolerated in any intercourse between the Supreme Court of the United States and the executive or legislative department of this Government.

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, requested to communicate to this House what instructions, if any, whether by circular letter or otherwise, have been given to subordinate officers of the Post-Office Department with reference to mail matter received from the Dominion of Canada, which instructions are intended—

I ask if it is courteous to the head of the Department to say that those instructions "are intended"—not the law, not the treaty, but the instructions—are intended to prohibit American citizens from using the United States mails upon the same terms with citizens of said Dominion living in the same vicinage and competing in the same branches of business with said American citizens.

I ask if the idea is not conveyed by this language that the Postmaster-General, false to the interests of his countrymen, was by a solemn order of the Department deliberately, willfully, intentionally issuing those orders for the purpose of putting his own countrymen at a disadvantage.

The resolution goes on:

2. That the said Postmaster-General be requested to inform this House whether any statute law prevents mailing in the Dominion of Canada seeds, plants, and bulbs grown by American citizens upon American soil, and if there is no provision of law prohibiting it, whether he has assumed to impose a penalty at the rate of $320 per ton upon seeds, plants, and bulbs lawfully mailed by American citizens in an attempt to compete with Canadian seedsmen, to whom the United States has, by a recent postal treaty, given an advantage over American seedsmen in the way of postage at the rate of $240 per ton.

I ask if it is courteous for this House to send to the Postmaster-General and inquire whether he has assumed to impose a penalty at the rate of $320 per ton upon said plants and bulbs lawfully mailed by American citizens.

The resolution proceeds:

3. In case the Postmaster-General shall show that orders have been given directing the examination of incoming Canadian mails for evidence of their use by American citizens, that he be further requested to inform the House by what provision of the recent postal treaty with the Dominion of Canada, or by what provision of law, the officers of the postal service of the United States are authorized to place an espionage on the said Canadian mail for the purpose of determining whether citizens of the United States are availing themselves of the beneficent provisions which are accorded to Canadians by said postal treaty.

I say the use of the word "espionage" was intended to convey the idea that the Postmaster-General was handling those mails to the disadvantage of American citizens, and that the language there used is designed to censure the Postmaster-General.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is what there is in this resolution. It appeared to me, as it did to other gentlemen of the committee, that its object was not to obtain information, but for party purposes to formulate something in the form of a stump speech to arraign the Post-Office Department; and the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads did not believe it was their duty to give sanction to discourtesy for an unfair purpose by recommending the passage of the resolution.

I wish to say, sir, that whenever the proposition is to ask for information of any kind from any Department in terms of courtesy such as are usually addressed to the Departments of the Government by the House and the Senate, the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads will, I am sure, with one voice, assent to it, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ALLEN] need not attempt to give out to the country the idea that there is a purpose to refuse information. The gentleman ought to well know he has been circumstanced so that he might have known that a resolution calling for this information in terms deferential to the head of a great Department of this Government would have met with the unanimous sanction of the committee.

Mr. STEELE. Then why did not your committee amend the resolution if it was not courteous enough?

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, we took it for what it was worth, in the discourteous terms in which it was framed, and we reported it back to this House for what it was worth in our judgment; and we are not to be thwarted by the suggestion which the gentleman makes, that we should report something else in courteous terms. The resolution itself was not courteous to the Department. If we are to argue anything from its language it does not seem to have been intended to be courteous, and it was not entitled, in my opinion, to the consideration that a courteous proposition would have been entitled to.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, how much time am I entitled to?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts has eighteen minutes remaining.

Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, after the admirable speech made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ALLEN], supplemented by the remarks made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WHITE], it would be hardly necessary to address the House upon the subject, if it had not been for the remarks of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT]. It is no discredit to him to say that his remarks have ably re-enforced the remarks made by the other gentlemen I have named, for there is no man upon that side abler than himself to make a forceful statement if the facts will enable him to do so, while such is the direct nature of his mind that there is no man so capable of thoroughly exposing the weakness of a bad position if he happens to occupy it. [Laughter.] The remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ALLEN] have called the attention of the country to a serious and grave charge made against the Post-Office Department, which, if true, demands instant correction, either by legislation or by action similar to that which caused the blunder.

He shows that Canada, if it were to receive the rate of postage that is demanded of American citizens, would receive ten millions of dollars, and that to-day, upon her own diminished rate of postal charges, she is receiving in this way $2,000,000 every year, which she is enabled to collect by means of a treaty which is necessarily injurious to the interests of the business of citizens of the United States. That fact remains undisputed. Now, what is the reply of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT]? His first reply is that we have all the information that is needed, and have had it for a long time. His next transaction is to produce a private letter from the Postmaster-General giving him private information, which he deems it important to communicate to this House, and that upon a question about which he tells us this House knew everything before this resolution was introduced! I do not wonder that the usually calm temper of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] was ruffled when I called his attention to this juxtaposition of a letter called for by the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, presumably the best-informed man on this subject in the House, after his declaration here that everybody knew everything about the subject even before the resolution was introduced. But I can not pardon him one slight effect of his ill temper, which allowed him to wander into the region of exaggeration, not to give it any stronger term, when he said that I was in the habit of mingling in all the speeches of the House. I am in the habit of mingling in such speeches as he made just at such junctures, as I did then, because it seemed that a little interposition of recollection would be valuable to the House, if not to the member himself. [Laughter.]

What is his next answer? His next answer is a resort to the high and hallowed and noble device of abusing the advocate on the other side when you have not any case yourself. That has at least had the benefit of centuries of antiquity and of millions of examples of practice. Why, the gentleman says this resolution is not polite! Here is a resolution which states that the United States is injured to the extent of $2,000,000 in its revenues, and that the citizens of the United States are put at a disadvantage, as compared with the citizens of Canada, in the transaction of business the like of which we all live by.

Mr. ENLOE. Who makes that declaration?

Mr. REED. The declaration is made, and the reply is that the resolution is not polite.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. REED. Under these circumstances, with these large national interests at stake, why did not these masters of polite speech frame a resolution which would give us the fact—give it in decorous form, give it to us in a manner that would suit the gentleman from Georgia and his colleagues? Mr. Speaker, I maintain that this resolution is properly conceived, that it is properly presented, that it is in suitable language, and if it does not contain in itself truths vital to the business interests of this country, nobody can better answer it than the head of the Post-Office Department. The Department should be glad of the opportunity in either of two aspects. First, to correct wrong statements if they have been made; and, second, to give, by the authority of the Post-Office Department, such weight to the facts as they exist as will induce Congress to redeem one large branch of business from the slough into which it has been cast by the misfortune of this treaty.

Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts. I yield eleven minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM].

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit to the House, as well as to the honorable gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], who has referred to the administration of General Grant as one having entered into postal convention with Canada, that I trust this debate will not take a partisan drift or direction, but may be determined upon the direct question at issue, and in that connection, therefore, it will not be amiss to state that we have good Democratic precedents for conventional relations with the Dominion of Canada. Our first treaty was in 1851, again in 1856, 1873, 1875, and 1888, the date of convention now under discussion. Revised Statutes, section 398, reads as follows:

For the purpose of making better postal arrangements with foreign countries, or to counteract their adverse measures affecting our postal intercourse with them, the Postmaster-General, by and with the advice and consent of the President, may negotiate and conclude postal treaties or conventions, and may reduce or increase the rates of postage on mail matter conveyed between the United States and foreign countries.

Acting under this broad authority and in accordance with precedent the convention with Canada was concluded, and under date January 26, 1888, was ratified and approved by the President. The marked feature of this convention, and that which has specially provoked criticism and appeal for immediate protective legislation, relates to seeds, bulbs, plants, cions, etc. I telegraphed the Superintendent of Foreign Mails a few days since concerning the rates of postage on this class of mail matter prior to the date, March 1, 1888, when the present convention went into effect, and his answer is as follows:

Prior to the inauguration of the recent postal treaty between the United States and Canada the postage on grains, seeds, and bulbs was 10 cents for each package of 8 ounces, provided the article was not liable to customs duty; if so, it was excluded from the mails exchanged between the two countries.

NICHOLAS M. BELL,
Superintendent of Foreign Mails.

In other words, the old rate upon the class of merchandise under debate was 20 cents a pound; under the recent treaty it is 4 cents a pound. This illustrates the radical change.

Mr. ENLOE. Will the gentleman allow a question at this point?

Mr. BINGHAM. I have only a few minutes, and I prefer not to yield. As soon, Mr. Speaker, as the details of the treaty became known to the great agricultural interests of the country your Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, as well as all the members of the House, were literally deluged with appeals and petitions to change existing law, so that American seedsmen and the agricultural interests of the country could receive this merchandise from American houses at the same rate as the Canadian could send through the American mail. The appeal seemed reasonable, and your Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads acted with promptness, and there is now upon the Calendar of the House a bill favorably reported recommending legislation at the rate of 8 cents a pound in lieu of the existing rate, 16 cents a pound.

A minority report, however, is filed therein. My associates, Messrs. PETERS, of Kansas, ALLEN, of Massachusetts, WHITE, of New York, LIND, of Minnesota, and myself recommended a reduction to 4 cents a pound, the same as the Canadian rate.

Sir, the minority in that recommendation feel greatly strengthened by the fact that two days ago a bill was reported from the Senate to the House, declaring the unanimous judgment of that body that the rate of postage on this class of merchandise should be 4 cents a pound, and so self-evident was the justice and common sense of the proposition that not one word of debate followed the reading of the bill as reported by the Senate Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

That bill is now before this House, and I feel sure it will have an early consideration in order that the severe discrimination now prevailing will be either abridged or in some way equalized. But in the mean time, Mr. Speaker, our great seed industries are being injured. When I say great I feel there is no exaggeration in the term. I have pleasure in reading a letter received this morning from my friend, Hon. Mr. DINGLEY, a member of this House, and my purpose was that his figures might afford me an opportunity of comparing the great seed and plant producing industries of the country with the fisheries industry that has so recently been under discussion by joint commission and now before the Senate for ratification:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, Washington, D. C., March 28, 1888.

MY DEAR MR. BINGHAM: I neglected to send you the fishery statistics which you desired, but forward them now—I hope not too late for your use.

In 1880 the fisheries of the United States employed 44,804 boats, 6,605 vessels, and 131,426 persons. Capital invested, $37,955,349, and value of product, $43,046,053. Twenty-nine States participated in the fisheries.

Sincerely, yours,

W. DINGLEY, JR.

I had hoped to obtain the figures of this agricultural industry, but have been unable to do so in time for this debate, but shall use them in remarks when we take up the legislation reducing postage. However, it is sufficient to state that if not as great as the fishery capital invested, it approaches it closely and is deserving of the greatest watchfulness, and in convention or treaty postal relations should have received a larger care than the present treaty accords.

The commercial phase of the power under the act of June 8, 1872, which allows these postal conventions, I shall refer to later in my remarks. Naturally apprehensive when millions of merchandise were held for sale, and especially when its transportation through the mails provided that the receiver or purchaser should pay the postage, the seed-distributing centers believed that they could avail themselves of the Canadian cheap rate, which would directly redound to the benefit of the consumer. I read a letter from Mr. James Vick, of Rochester, N. Y., being one of the many I have received:

OFFICE OF JAMES VICK, SEEDSMAN,
Rochester, N. Y., February 14, 1888.

DEAR SIR: I see by the international parcels post treaty, just signed, that after March 1st the Canadians (and Messrs. D. M. Ferry & Co., of Detroit, from their Windsor branch) can ship their seeds, plants, and bulbs into the United States at one-fourth the regular United States postage. Is there any justice in this? Must we submit, or will your committee help us out of our difficulty?

Yours, etc.,

JAMES VICK.

Hon. HENRY H. BINGHAM, Washington, D. C.

No legislation protecting the agricultural interests having been enacted by Congress, I received the following letter, the original having been mailed to the Postmaster-General:

OFFICE OF JAMES VICK, SEEDSMAN,
Rochester, N. Y., March 6, 1888.

DEAR SIR: Last week we commenced mailing plants and catalogues to parties in the United States via Canada. This is done to save 12 cents per pound on plants and 3 cents on each catalogue, less a very small expense of freight, etc., but the thought suggested itself to me that perhaps arrangements could be made whereby we could ship these packages of plants and catalogues distributed and bagged into States and mailing routes directly to Buffalo (the exchange office) instead of to Canada. This would save the Buffalo office the labor of distributing, as we could have them neatly put up in United States mail bags and labeled.

Of course we would put Canadian postage on each package so the Canadian government would not lose by this change, and the United States Government would receive the same compensation as at present (nothing), and would be the gainer in not throwing so much work on the Buffalo office.

Yours, etc.,

JAMES VICK.

Hon. DON M. DICKINSON, Postmaster-General.

This letter was an honest one, simply outlining the purpose of business interests forced to care for themselves and giving due notice to the Postmaster-General of their purpose.

Under date of March 13, 1888, the Postmaster-General issued the following order:

NOTICE.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., March 13, 1888.

Satisfactory evidence having been presented to this Department that certain dealers in the United States are shipping their goods to Canada to be mailed there, addressed to persons in this country, with the intent to evade the higher rate of postage applicable to said goods in the domestic mails of the United States, especially before the customs regulations for the collection of duty on such matter are thoroughly understood and in practice, postmasters at United States post-offices, authorized to exchange mails with Canada, are hereby ordered to rate up postage on said packages so sent to Canada and received in mails from Canada, for collection on delivery, at the rate applicable to similar packages mailed, and addressed for delivery, in this country; the forwarding of such packages from Canada being an "obvious error," the same being in contravention of the provisions of article 4 of the postal convention in force between the two countries.

Similar articles contained in mails from Canada, under like state of facts received by United States railway post-offices of exchange, shall be turned in to the nearest United States exchange post-office for treatment under this order.

The provisions of this order shall apply to all packages mailed in Canada addressed for delivery in the United States, the indications upon the covers of which or other facts show that they have been sent from the United States to Canada for the purpose of mailing back to the United States.

DON M. DICKINSON,
Postmaster-General.

Upon the promulgation of this order the gentleman from New York [Mr. WHITE] offered in the House of Representatives the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, requested to communicate to this House what instructions, if any, whether by circular letter or otherwise, have been given to subordinate officers of the Post-Office Department with reference to mail matter received from the Dominion of Canada, which instructions are intended to prohibit American citizens from using the United States mails upon the same terms with citizens of said Dominion living in the same vicinage and competing in the same branches of business with said American citizens.

2. That the said Postmaster-General be requested to inform this House whether any statute law prevents mailing in the Dominion of Canada seeds, plants, and bulbs grown by American citizens upon American soil, and if there is no provision of law prohibiting it, whether he has assumed to impose a penalty at the rate of $320 per ton upon seeds, plants, and bulbs lawfully mailed by American citizens in an attempt to compete with Canadian seedsmen, to whom the United States has, by a recent postal treaty, given an advantage over American seedsmen in the way of postage at the rate of $240 per ton.

3. In case the Postmaster-General shall show that orders have been given directing the examination of incoming Canadian mails for evidence of their use by American citizens, that he be further requested to inform the House by what provision of the recent postal treaty with the Dominion of Canada, or by what provision of law, the officers of the postal service of the United States are authorized to place an espionage on the said Canadian mail for the purpose of determining whether citizens of the United States are availing themselves of the beneficent provisions which are accorded to Canadians by said postal treaty.

Through Hon. Mr. ENLOE these resolutions are to-day reported back to the House with an adverse recommendation, and gentlemen of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads attempt to justify the position of the Department in lieu of recommending the resolutions to the favorable action of the House, in order that the Postmaster-General might from his own standpoint of administrative knowledge, precedent, and reading of the statute say to the country why he has issued the order and certify his authority for the same. I am sure his defense would have carried to my mind at least the conviction that he had thoroughly examined the question and believed it his right, as well as duty, to issue the order upon which the gentleman from New York desires enlightenment. From my own reading of the statutes and the treaty specifications I am not, I am free to admit, clear in my conclusions, but am disposed to think that under section 4026 the order is warranted, and if it is not, then Congress, by a speedy enactment, should vest power somewhere to search the inter-foreign mail service where merchandise is being conveyed, and if in violation of either law, treaty, or convention, then a penalty in some form should follow. I will quote the statute (section 4026, Revised Statutes):

The Postmaster-General may, by a letter of authorization under his hand, to be filed among the records of his Department, empower any special agent or other officer of the post-office establishment to make searches for mailable matter transported in violation of law; and the agent or officer so authorized may open and search any car or vehicle passing, or having lately before passed, from any place at which there is a post-office of the United States to any other such place, or any box, package, or jacket, being, or having lately before been, in such car or vehicle, or any store or house other than a dwelling house, used or occupied by any common carrier or transportation company in which such box, package, or jacket may be contained, whenever such agent or officer has reason to believe that mailable matter, transported contrary to law, may therein be found.

Your Committee (or a majority of the same) on the Post-Office and Post-Roads declare, or rather assume, that the Postmaster-General based his circular notice upon this section of the statute. I again state that it is not clear to my mind that the statute covers the broad requirements of the circular, and I should like the Postmaster-General himself to state to this House the precedents, if there are any, governing his action and which have not been referred to in this debate. He makes no reference in his circular to the statute under which it is claimed he has acted, but places it upon not only "satisfactory evidence" and "before the customs regulations for the collection of duty on such matter are thoroughly understood and in practice," but also "article 4 of the postal convention in force between the two countries."

This article reads as follows:

In case any correspondence is tendered for mailing in either country obviously with the intention to evade the higher postage rates applicable to it in the other country, it shall be refused, unless payment be made of such higher rates.

If the authority does not rest upon section 4026, Revised Statutes, above quoted, to justify the circular, certainly there is some doubt upon the power conferred in article 4 of the convention, for it distinctly states that the mail matter "shall be refused."

The report of the majority of the committee is neither convincing nor conclusive, and good judgment, as well as a disposition to intelligently legislate upon the postage question that will soon come before us, should send these resolutions to the Postmaster-General for the information requested. But we are confronted with the committee's statement that "the resolutions are of the nature of criticism of the existing law, a protest against its enforcement, and an arraignment of the Postmaster-General." This, as one of the minority, I deny, and the gentleman from New York makes denial also. We want information, and we want it from the only authority that can give it to us—not the majority of the committee, but the Postmaster-General. We have stood ready and now stand ready to modify the resolutions in all particulars that can be claimed as "an arraignment of the Postmaster-General."

If he is right, he deserves commendation. If the law does not fully cover a keeping in good faith of treaty obligations and conventions, then we can amend it. If the Postmaster-General has issued his circular without warrant of law, I am sure the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, like myself, would demand its recall, and join in aiding the Postmaster-General to secure good legislation that this and all administrations require and are justly entitled to receive from Congress.

There is a commercial aspect in this convention with the Dominion of Canada which forcibly presents itself as an excellent illustration of the power vested in the Postmaster-General, by and with the advice of the President, to conclude postal treaties with foreign countries. (Revised Statutes, 398.)

Seeds, bulbs, plants, and other articles of agricultural merchandise can come into this country when upon the free-list or qualifiedly taxed at the tax and postal rate. The difference between 4 cents a pound, Canadian rate, and 16 cents a pound, United States rate, is great, and would to-day, if Congress failed to interfere by immediate legislation, destroy our home industry.

The Post-Office Department is gradually and directly moving in the line of larger convenience for the people in the interchange of commodities and articles of manufacture through the mails. I am not in any way opposed to the advance. I believe it to be required by the growing demands of the masses, and will hope to see the postal service so administered that fourth-class matter can come to us from abroad with the same facility, certainty, and dispatch that carries it in our domestic mails to every section of our vast territory.

The Superintendent of Foreign Mails thus submits, on page 1015, Postmaster-General, 1887:

The Post-Office Department has pending and in a few months will, it is expected, complete parcel-post conventions with several West India islands and South and Central American states, for the purpose of dispatching through the mails merchandise parcels of declared value, through which the Department will add a new avenue and obtain new facilities for increasing the trade relations with our South American neighbors.

The parcel-post system will be an important avenue for the extension of the commerce of the United States, and its use will be the cause of bringing to our merchants an acquaintance hitherto unknown to them, and by that acquaintance larger transactions will follow; and further, the kind of merchandise that will be purchased and conveyed in this way from our markets to the states of Central and South America is now largely purchased from European states, as will appear from the following tables, compiled from the report of the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, Treasury Department, for the quarter ended September 30, 1886, showing the value of cotton and of woolen goods exported to the Spanish West Indies, Mexico, Central America, and the principal states of South America from the United States, Great Britain, France, and Spain, during the calendar year 1885, and from Germany during the calendar year 1884:

PARCEL-POSTAGE CHARGES.

The question of parcel-post charges for postage is one of important concern. The competition for the conveyance of the domestic merchandise parcels comes from our own citizens, and does not enter into the question, to any very great extent, of the trade relation between different sections of the country. But the competition of our foreign parcel trade will come from nearly all of the European states, as most of them have an established parcel-post system with some of the South American states. In some cases we have an advantage in the time required for the completion of a merchandise order through the parcel post, while they have the advantage in many cases of a cheaper cost price for the articles of merchandise transported by their parcel-post system to the same destinations.

The following countries now belong to the International Parcel Post Union: Argentine Republic, Austria, Belgium, Brazil, Bulgaria, Chili, Denmark, Egypt, France, French colonies, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Italy, Luxemburg, Montenegro, Netherlands, Norway, Paraguay, Portugal, Portuguese colonies, Roumania, Servia, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Turkey, Uruguay, and Venezuela.

Great Britain does not belong to the International Parcel Post Union, but has special parcel-post conventions with Germany, Belgium, the Netherlands, Italy, and nearly all the British colonies. None of these conventions had been in operation for an entire year at the date (March 30, 1886) when the statistics given in the last British post-office report (1886) were closed.

My purpose, Mr. Speaker, will have been accomplished when I have invited the attention of the House to the growing demand in this country for the interchange of commodities and the extent to which it is carried by the nations of the world through the medium of the postal service, the advance being made by our own Post-Office Department. The recent convention with the United Mexican States, approved June 21, 1887, being almost identical with the Canadian convention, clearly proves that every information should be given this House upon a question and a proceeding that under the statute the Postmaster-General and the President may carry out, which, while I am not at this time and in this debate objecting, may affect the revenues of the Government, imperil industry, and threaten the employed and peaceful industries of labor.

Congress has ever been most watchful of its sole right to tax and raise revenue. Let us look carefully before we surrender the first step. Let the broad light of day shine upon this recent convention with Canada, and let these resolutions be referred to the only authority that is familiar with the question—the power that made the treaty under the law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ALLEN] has three minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts. I will yield one minute to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS].

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, in order to take from the majority of this committee the last vestige of objection to the resolutions offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WHITE] I will submit the following amendments:

Strike out the words "assumed to," in the second paragraph, and change the word "impose" to "imposed." Strike out the words, in the third paragraph, "place an espionage on," and insert the word "examine;" so it will read:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, requested to communicate to this House what instructions, if any, whether by circular letter or otherwise, have been given to subordinate officers of the Post-Office Department with reference to mail matter received from the Dominion of Canada, which instructions are intended to prohibit American citizens from using the United States mails upon the same terms with citizens of said Dominion living in the same vicinage and competing in the same branches of business with said American citizens.

That the said Postmaster-General be requested to inform this House whether any statute law prevents mailing in the Dominion of Canada seeds, plants, and bulbs grown by American citizens upon American soil, and if there is no provision of law prohibiting it, whether he has imposed a penalty at the rate of $320 per ton upon seeds, plants, and bulbs lawfully mailed by American citizens in an attempt to compete with Canadian seedsmen, to whom the United States has, by a recent postal treaty, given an advantage over American seedsmen in the way of postage at the rate of $240 per ton.

In case the Postmaster-General shall show that orders have been given directing the examination of incoming Canadian mails for evidence of their use by American citizens, that he be further requested to inform the House by what provision of the recent postal treaty with the Dominion of Canada or by what provision of law the officers of the postal service of the United States are authorized to examine the said Canadian mail for the purpose of determining whether citizens of the United States are availing themselves of the beneficent provisions which are accorded to Canadians by said postal treaty.

That, Mr. Speaker, will take from the resolution all of the objectionable words to which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] have called attention. With these emendations I have suggested the resolution will then pass, in my judgment, the most astute critic on the subject of courtesy and would take away the main objection alleged by the gentleman from Georgia and the gentleman from Tennessee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired. The gentleman from Massachusetts has two minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts. I will reserve that time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE] has six minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. ENLOE. Does the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] desire any portion of that time?

Mr. BLOUNT. No, I will not take up the time of the House any further.

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, so far as the statement made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ALLEN], and quoted by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], is concerned, to the effect that the operation of this treaty will reduce the revenues of the Post-Office Department to the extent of $2,000,000 per annum, the only answer I care to make is this: that there are no facts or statistics upon which to base such an assertion, and that it rests upon no more substantial basis than the imagination of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ALLEN].

In reply to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WHITE], who intimates that I have exclusive sources of information in the Post-Office Department, I have only to say that he has had at his command precisely the same sources of information that were open to me, and if he had gone to the Post-Office Department he could have obtained all the information which has been accessible to me.

But rather than seek this information in the usual way he proposes to incorporate in a resolution which he asks this House to adopt a stump speech against the Post-Office Department in reference to the negotiation of this treaty, and it is to that proposition we object and against which we report adversely.

All this difficulty grows out of the fact that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ALLEN] is afraid that all those engaged in the business of advertising patent medicines will remove into Canada, while the gentleman from New York [Mr. WHITE] is afraid that one seedsman will move out of his State and dwell in Canada in order to secure the great advantage which he asserts that this treaty affords to foreigners. I have a telegram here from Mr. Vick, the seedsman, and also a letter sent to me at the request of Mr. Vick, both of which I will read to the House. The letter is as follows:

TORONTO, ONTARIO, March 23, 1888.

DEAR SIR: At the request of James Vick, seedsman, Rochester, N. Y., have forwarded you copy of latest issue of our illustrated seed catalogue. May mention that we have never attempted to do any mail-order business throughout United States, owing to your high protective tariff. The copies of catalogue sent you have been prepared entirely for the use of our Canadian customers.

Yours, truly,

STEELE BROS. & CO.

Hon. BENJAMIN A. ENLOE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. Vick, it seems, insists that the law should be changed to suit his views, in order to prevent him from going into Canada to transact his business with the people of the United States. Here we have the anomaly presented of a firm in Canada, in the same line of business with Mr. Vick, unable to do business in the United States on account of the discrimination under our laws in favor of American seedsmen, and a seedsman in the United States unable to compete with Canada because the Canadian, he asserts, has the advantage under the convention.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him one question?

Mr. ENLOE. Not to come out of my time.

Mr. BAKER. Does not the gentleman know the Detroit house has a branch house in Canada?

Mr. ENLOE. I have not time to answer irrelevant questions. I ask the Clerk now to read Mr. Vick's telegram.

The Clerk read as follows:

ROCHESTER, N. Y., March 22, 1888.

To Hon. B. A. ENLOE,
House of Representatives, Washington:

Judge Wallace granted order to show cause why injunction should not be issued. Will the Government take 4 cents or nothing on spring business?

JAS. VICK.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. That was before the treaty was made.

Mr. ENLOE. No, since. It appears that Mr. Vick imagines that he has the Government of the United States in his grip, and he is going to make the Government change the law in order to keep him from going out of the United States with his business or stop the collection of postage on his wares. The Canadian postmaster-general has issued an order requiring the parties mailing American seeds in Canada to pay 16 cents a pound, the United States rate of postage, and that is the occasion of all this fluttering along the border.

Mr. BOUTELLE. How about Canadian citizens?

Mr. ENLOE. The Canadians engaged in this business, according to this letter, are not able to compete under our present tariff laws; but the gentleman from New York [Mr. WHITE] says we are proposing to pass the Mills tariff bill, and therefore we should reduce postage on seeds, etc. If the gentleman from New York and his party friends will help us to pass that bill I will most cheerfully join in reducing the postage to meet the reduction in customs duties on seeds.

Furthermore, sir, if Mr. Vick wants to go to Canada with his business, he has a right to do so; but I do not think that he or any other seedsman will go to that side of the line to transact business with the people of this country, nor do I think that the seed interests on this side of the line will suffer under the operation of this treaty. But here we are confronted by the great seed "trust," asking a reduction of the rate of postage to 4 cents a pound on seeds, bulbs, plants, and cions, when the farmers of the country in their organized capacity are only asking for a reduction to 8 cents a pound.

Mr. PETERS. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. They ask a reduction to 4 cents, and the seedsmen are interested in keeping it up to 8.

Mr. ENLOE. I must decline to yield to these interruptions.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But will the gentleman state why he objects to our receiving the information called for in the resolution?

Mr. ENLOE. I have no objection when the request is couched in respectful language.

Mr. LAIRD. Does not your committee know enough to amend it if they do not like it?

Mr. ENLOE. Certainly. But you have received all the information here to-day that is demanded, and you might have obtained it any day.

Mr. BOUTELLE. How?

Mr. ENLOE. By reference to the publications of the Department and the statute law on the subject.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But is there objection, and, if so, what objection, to having this information from the Department?

Mr. BLOUNT. Offer a resolution in proper form, and we will report it back at once.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Why not amend this resolution, then, if you object to its form?

Mr. BLOUNT. We prefer to have the matter before us in proper shape in committee.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But you can not get the information by laying the resolution on the table.

Mr. ENLOE. Let me say further, Mr. Speaker, that the seedsman or seedsmen who are making this fight for 4 cents a pound have received from the consumers 16 cents a pound on the spring business, and if they get a reduction to 4 cents they make a clear gain of 12 cents off the consumer or planter, and the postal revenues, which justly belong to the Government, will go into the treasury of the great American seed trust. I have great respect for the gentleman from New York [Mr. WHITE], the representative of the grangers of Wall street; but I propose to speak and trust that I do speak in the interest of and in accord with the expressed will of the farmers of the whole country.

I now demand the previous question.

Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts. I believe I have two or three minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has two minutes remaining.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Will the chairman of the committee, before the vote is taken on this report, inform the House what it is in the resolution that is objected to by his committee?

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to say to the gentleman that I have already made a statement; but if the House will allow me the privilege of consuming a moment more to say so, I can only repeat that the gentleman from Maine or any other gentleman on this floor can offer a resolution in courteous terms, and I am satisfied we will report it back without delay; but we do not propose to deal in stump speeches.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, in all good faith I wish to get information upon this subject. I understand the chairman of the committee makes no objection to the proposed action of the House in requesting this information from the Department. He does not say that the information is not proper for the House to have and ought not properly to have, but objects to something in the form of the resolution itself. Now, if that be the case, would it not be a business-like, parliamentary, and common-sense procedure for the chairman of the committee or the majority of the committee to propose to modify this resolution so as to put it into a proper and respectful form, and in deferential language, if you please, such as may be necessary to address to a Democratic head of a Department?

Mr. BLOUNT. If I may be allowed to answer the gentleman, I would say that I would have no objection to doing anything of that sort; but there has never been an effort on the part of the gentleman having charge of the matter, so far as I know, to offer a resolution in respectful terms; and so far as the country knows the only information sought for was that which was attempted to be gathered by the resolution in the form submitted by him. That we regard as a disrespectful one, and we have treated it as we think such a resolution ought to be treated.

Mr. BOUTELLE. What is disrespectful about it?

Mr. BLOUNT. I can not undertake in this way to specify all the points in which I think it is disrespectful. I think the gentleman could readily see if he would read the resolution.

Mr. HATCH. Permit me to ask a question.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have not the floor except by consent of the House.

Mr. HATCH. I have heard the statement of the gentleman from Georgia that he objected to the language of this resolution. Now I desire to ask this question: If the gentleman from New York will now eliminate from his resolution the language that has been objected to by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads through its chairman, will the gentleman accept that as a modification and let us vote upon it in that form?

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope I will not be considered discourteous when I say that the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads will make better recommendations to the House when they have considered in committee-room the proposition under discussion. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Tennessee demanded the previous question.

Mr. ENLOE. I did.

Mr. BLOUNT. But this has been proceeding by unanimous consent, and I hope the same unanimous consent will allow me to respond to the inquiry just addressed to me. [Cries of "Go on!"]

I simply wish to say that we have reported this resolution back with this recommendation because we thought the terms made use of in it made it proper that we should do so.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. BLOUNT. In a moment.

Mr. Speaker, the better place to arrive at the information sought is in the committee-room; and a resolution might be offered at any time during this day and would be reported back promptly by the committee. I prefer, when we undertake to formulate or act upon that resolution, that we shall do it in the committee-room, and not here. I will not undertake here to say what is proper. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the demand for the previous question.

Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts. I have two minutes remaining, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I desire to ask a question for information.

Several members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ALLEN] claims that he is still entitled to two minutes.

Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts. During those two minutes I simply want to say that the question of the passage of this resolution is so interwoven with the question of cheap agricultural postage, that the people will find it difficu't to separate the two. I want, in a word, to warn the House to make no mistake in voting on this question lest the farmers, who are so profoundly interested, shall misconstrue its action.

I desire to offer, in my time, the amendments which were read in the time of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS].

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "assumed to," in the second paragraph, and change the word "impose" to "imposed."

Strike out the words in the third paragraph "place an espionage on" and insert the word "examine."

Mr. ENLOE. I move to lay the resolution and pending amendments on the table.

Mr. REED, and Mr. ALLEN of Massachusetts, called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 126, nays 122, not voting 76; as follows:

So the resolution and amendments were laid on the table.

Mr. DARLINGTON. I desire to state if I were not paired I would vote "no."

On motion of Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts, the reading of the names was dispensed with by unanimous consent.

The following members were announced as paired on all political questions until further notice:

Mr. WILKINS with Mr. DAVENPORT.
Mr. BURNETT with Mr. KENNEDY.
Mr. MOORE with Mr. DARLINGTON.
Mr. SENEY with Mr. KELLEY.
Mr. RICHARDSON with Mr. STEWART, of Vermont.
Mr. ANDERSON, of Mississippi, with Mr. HIESTAND.
Mr. FISHER with Mr. BREWER.
Mr. WHITING, of Michigan, with Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan.
Mr. SIMMONS with Mr. WEST.
Mr. MILLS with Mr. BUTTERWORTH.
Mr. HOPKINS, of Virginia, with Mr. HIRES.
Mr. HEARD with Mr. ROWELL.
Mr. COWLES with Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio.
Mr. LAGAN with Mr. STEPHENSON.
Mr. GLOVER with Mr. GUENTHER.
Mr. SPINOLA with Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois.

The following members were announced as paired for this day:

Mr. GREENMAN with Mr. SHERMAN.
Mr. ERMENTROUT with Mr. ROMEIS.
Mr. LATHAM with Mr. PLUMB.
Mr. STAHLNECKER with Mr. HOPKINS, of New York.
Mr. CUMMINGS with Mr. MOFFITT.
Mr. MONTGOMERY with Mr. RUSSELL, of Connecticut.
Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota, with Mr. ROCKWELL.
Mr. COBB with Mr. GROSVENOR.
Mr. CHIPMAN with Mr. GAINES.
Mr. MCADOO with Mr. BRUMM.
Mr. LEE with Mr. BOWDEN.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. SOWDEN. I send to the desk a resolution for which I ask present consideration.

Mr. REED. I demand the regular order.

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope the resolution offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN] will be read.

Mr. REED. I have asked for the regular order.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was laid on the table.

Mr. REED. And I ask that that question be taken by yeas and nays. Gentlemen have made their record; let them stick to it.

Mr. RANDALL. The object of my motion is that a respectful inquiry may be addressed to the Department.

Mr. REED. I demand the regular order, which is the call for the yeas and nays. I do not wonder that the brethren want to explain.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I am on the floor now on my motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was laid on the table.

Mr. REED. It is too late. We are dividing.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules of the House a motion to reconsider a vote is not debatable, unless the original proposition itself was debatable, and the motion to lay on the table is not a debatable question. As many as are in favor of taking the vote by yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. There is a sufficient number up, and the yeas and nays are ordered.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is it in order to move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think we had better do that.

Mr. REED. We are dividing on the question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has announced that there is a sufficient number to order the yeas and nays. The gentleman from Illinois moves to lay the motion to reconsider on the table, upon which motion the yeas and nays can be taken.

Mr. REED. Well, we will do that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] demands the yeas and nays upon the motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will withdraw my motion, Mr. Speaker. I supposed we might save time in that way.

The SPEAKER. Then the yeas are ordered on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was laid on the table, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, there seems to be some misapprehension as to the motion which I made———

The SPEAKER. The Chair has stated the motion, and the Clerk will proceed with the call.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 123, nays 127, not voting 74; as follows:

So the motion was not agreed to.

On motion of Mr. WHITE, of New York, the reading of the names of members voting was dispensed with.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. BIGGS with Mr. FELTON, on this vote.

Mr. RUSK with Mr. HIESTAND, for the remainder of this day.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. SOWDEN. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. REED. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. PEEL. I move to dispense with the regular call of committees.

The SPEAKER. That requires a two-thirds vote.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. PEEL to dispense with the regular call of committees, and it was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, which is the call of committees for reports.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CLEMENTS, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. 8966) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve all points of order on that bill.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent that instead of having the committees called regularly, members having reports to make be allowed to file them with the Clerk. I make this motion to save time in order that we may take up the Indian appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS]?

Mr. OATES. I object.

REFUND OF DUTIES.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 2444) authorizing the refunding of duty on clock and chime of bells for St. Timothy's Church of Catonsville, Baltimore County, Maryland; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

COLORADO.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back favorably the bill (S. 761) to amend section 11 of an act entitled "An act to enable the people of Colorado to form a State constitution and State government, for the admission of the said State into the Union on equal footing with the original States;" which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR also, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back adversely the joint resolution (H. Res. 115) for amendment to Article II of the Constitution of the United States of America; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CORPORATIONS AS SURETIES.

Mr. OATES, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 3380) to authorize certain corporations to become surety in cases within the jurisdiction of Federal courts and Departments; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SCHOOL FARMS, BEAUFORT COUNTY, SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. CASWELL, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8053) to extend the time for the redemption of school farms in Beaufort County, South Carolina; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CADET ENGINEERS IN THE NAVY.

Mr. HERBERT, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (S. 1484) to fix the status in the Navy of certain cadet engineers; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ASSIGNEES OF ADDISON C. FLETCHER.

Mr. VANCE, from the Committee on Patents, reported back favorably the bill (S. 395) for the relief of Hyland C. Kirk and others, assignees of Addison C. Fletcher; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

AUGUST LESCHINSKY.

Mr. SHAW, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 2043) for the relief of August Leschinsky; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GEORGE F. RIDER.

Mr. KERR, from the Committee on Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 3747) for the relief of George F. Rider; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

HEIRS OF DR. NATHAN FLETCHER.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 34) for the relief of the heirs of Dr. Nathan Fletcher; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ROCK CREEK BRIDGE, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEMPHILL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred, with the amendment of the Senate, the bill (H. R. 1184) to authorize the construction of a bridge across Rock Creek at the Woodley Lane road, in the District of Columbia, reported the same back with the recommendation that the amendment be concurred in.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

OWNERSHIP OF LANDS BY ALIENS.

Mr. OATES, from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 4916) to prohibit aliens from acquiring title to, or owning, lands within the United States; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

INDIAN DEPREDATION CLAIMS.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, from the Select Committee on Indian Depredation Claims, reported a bill (H. R. 8965) to provide for the adjudication and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations; which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed and recommitted.

HUGO WEDELES.

Mr. SYMES, from the Select Committee on Indian Depredation Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 4568) for the relief of Hugo Wedeles; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The call of committees for reports was then concluded.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PEEL. I move that the second hour for the consideration of bills be dispensed with for to-day.

The SPEAKER. That can not be done by motion, but if the gentleman desires to go into the Committee of the Whole for the consideration of appropriation bills he can make that motion.

Mr. PEEL. I will move, then, that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of appropriation bills.

Mr. FORAN. I wish to give notice that I will call up for consideration on April 3 the pension appropriation bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the remainder of this day should be given to the Committee on the Public Lands for the consideration of the homestead bill.

Mr. BELMONT. I wish to give notice to the House that after the pension appropriation bill has been disposed of I will ask to take up for consideration the diplomatic appropriation bill.

PRIVATE DIES FOR PRINTING REVENUE STAMPS.

On motion of Mr. SHAW, by unanimous consent, report numbered 1107, in relation to private dies for printing revenue stamps, was ordered to be reprinted.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SAGINAW, MICH.

On motion of Mr. DIBBLE, by unanimous consent, the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 8593) for the erection of a public building at Saginaw, Mich., and the same was recommitted to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. PEEL. I insist on my motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The first business on the Calendar is the bill (H. R. 5415) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes.

Mr. FORAN. Let that go over for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. There being no objection, the bill will be passed over.

The next business on the Calendar is the bill (H. R. 6833) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes.

Mr. BELMONT. Let that be passed over for the present.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The next business on the Calendar is the bill (H. R. 8565) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes.

Mr. PEEL. I move that the first reading of the bill for information be dispensed with.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Chairman, in calling up this bill for consideration by the committee it is, I suppose, expected that I should say something on the Indian question, generally; I am sorry, however, to say that great press of business has prevented me from giving the question that thought and consideration that the subject deserves. The great Indian problem, as it is frequently styled, is not in my judgment a very serious or complicated matter. A great many good-meaning persons residing remote from the Indian Territory, and who have not had the experience of personal contact with Indians, frequently mistake their true character and indulge in more gush and sentiment than belongs to the question proper; and I am sorry to say that we have some on this floor who when questions come up before us for action touching the Indians, instead of considering it from a business and practical standpoint, go off into sentiment and stop the wheels of legislation by recounting the many real or imaginary wrongs done the Indians.

Now, Mr. Chairman, while it is true that in many instances they have been treated badly by the Government and the people, and while that is true, we could recount bloody deeds and outrages upon innocent, defenseless women and children by Indians—deeds and crimes that the very thought of would chill our blood and horrify our dreams. But, sir, these are things of the past, and it is but a waste of time to brood over them. As legislators we should deal with the question as we find it, and take hold of the question in earnest, looking to a final end of it. In doing so, Mr. Chairman, we should be just and charitable to the Indian and fair to the white man. We should adopt such measures as will at the earliest possible moment make each and all of them citizens of the United States, and self-sustaining; they should be taught to reverence the same flag, obey the same law, and worship the same God with the white man. When done the Indian question is ended only to live as a matter of history.

To reach this end we have a variety of methods. Some favor tribal relations and lands in common, and keep the white man out; others the reverse. In other words, they favor lands in severalty, break up tribal relations, and close contact with the white man. The latter system is evidently the true one, and the one that I favor. We learn, Mr. Chairman, from the earliest history of the Indians that they as a people have always recognized the superiority of the Anglo-Saxon blood, and being ambitious to produce great warriors and big chiefs they have reached out for the blood of the white man, and the greater the man in their imagination the more anxious they were to have him take an Indian wife; in fact, they would give him a dozen if he so desired.

This principle has had much to do with their demoralizing practice of polygamy. This unnatural, uncivilized, and, I might add, unchristian-like practice is confined to their greatest chiefs and head men. This should be discouraged; in fact, it ought to be absolutely prohibited. The idea of a mother selling her young and tender daughter to some old wicked Buck, who has already a dozen wives, for a few cheap burr-tailed ponies is revolting, demoralizing, and inhuman; yet it is quite common with many of our Indian tribes. Sir, it ought to be stopped, and stopped at once. Mr. Chairman, I lament to say that we have heard from indisputable authority that it is quite common for mothers and fathers to send word to their young and accomplished daughters, while receiving their education and Christian training at our Eastern Indian schools at the expense of the Government, to come home to be sold as a wife for ponies; sold to the arms and embrace of a blanket savage, not only to be a so-called wife, but a slave. Such a state of things is simply intolerable, and this Government should stop it immediately.

These people are the wards of the Government, and as such should have that guardian care that is due from guardian to ward or from parent to child. We owe them much, not only from principles of common humanity, and from the humane duty that the strong owe the weak, but we owe much from solemn treaty stipulations in express terms. We, as a great and noble Government, as brave and honest people, should discharge these duties in a manly way. Where we owe money we should pay; where we have promised duty we should perform it—in short, do our part, and then we can ask, not only ask, but require them to do their part. We should give them to plainly understand that we will deal fairly and honestly with them, but that when we secure each a home and learn him how to take care of his person and property; that he is to be no longer a ward but a man full-grown; that he must make his own living like other people, and that when the Government extends her fostering care over him, and by the strong arm of the law gives full and complete protection to his life, liberty, and property, in turn for this beneficent gift he must assume sovereignty and help sustain, protect, defend, and support the Government.

To reach this end, Mr. Chairman, we must place some kind of government over them. We must place amongst them teachers, farmers, and mechanics, give them plenty of common schools, and especially industrial schools, the paramount object being to learn all the children how to be cleanly, learn the girls how to wash, how to cook, how to keep house neatly and economically, how to cut and make their own clothes; learn them how to milk the cow, how to raise chickens, flowers, and vegetables; and, above all, learn them to be virtuous, and to be but one wife to one husband. The boys should be learned all kinds of farming in a plain, common-sense way; should be taught how to handle and care for farm-stock and farming-tools, how to plant and how to gather and house, how to breed and raise stock of all kinds; should be taught the use and value of property. Among the most important of all their education should be individual reliance and self-support. Another important fact should not be overlooked; they should be taught to hate guns, dogs, and ponies; they should be impressed that it is their religious duty to kill all the dogs in the tribe. Dogs, guns, and ponies are the emblems of the chase and war, and therefore should be suppressed. Where they own their lands in fee they should be encouraged to take their lands in severalty, and when any one family should so desire its share should be apportioned to it, and once commenced, one by one would take until the whole would soon be equally divided amongst them; not one inch of land should be taken from any tribe owning and holding the fee without their consent and just compensation.

Those upon reservations by right of occupancy only should be treated fairly; they should be given sufficient quantity of the best agricultural and grazing lands to secure ample homes for all and allot in severalty to them as soon as their condition would justify; the rest should be attached to the public domain for homes of our own homeless people and parceled out to them under the homestead law only. The Government should pay the Indians a fair compensation for it, their character of title being considered. In this connection, Mr. Chairman, I am proud to say to the House and to the country that the Committee on Indian Affairs, of which I have the honor to be chairman, have reported and passed within the last thirty days three bills that will restore to the public domain of this country over 30,000,000 acres of land, some of which is as fine as the world ever saw; all of which (if these bills become laws, of which I have no doubt) will be open to the poor man of this country. This large area will make thousands and thousands of happy homes for our homeless people. And at the same time, Mr. Chairman, there is ample left to provide each Indian with a magnificent home, and the proceeds of the lands so taken will enable the Government to educate and providefor them until they can and will be self-sustaining, and to that extent our annual appropriations, amounting to hundreds of thousands of dollars, to support these people in idleness and dirt will be stopped.

Our people, Mr. Chairman, are growing tired of being taxed and taxed almost out of existence to enrich a few manufactures in this country and to support these lazy Indians in dirt and idleness. They demand, and they have a right to demand that the race of life should be equal, and let each "root hog or die."

In the bill under consideration we have endeavored to shape in this direction. Upon examination of the various items it will be seen that we have decreased our appropriation over last year for supporting the different Indian tribes; which means to clothe and feed them. Our object in making this decrease is to learn them that we expect them with each year to produce more with their own hands upon which to live, and that ultimately it will all be withdrawn; and to enable them to produce more each year for themselves, we have increased the items for education, farming implements, seeds, etc., also for pay of teachers and farmers to learn them how. And, Mr. Chairman, we expect with each succeeding year to cut deeper and deeper until at some time in the near future each Indian will be an individual person, living with us as citizens of one common country, making his own support. An adverse or opposite policy means that this race shall forever be paupers and a tax upon our own people for generations to come.

Pursuing the line of our general policy, we have in a few instances of trust funds appropriated the entire amount due the parties, thereby stopping the interest and the expense of keeping accounts with them in such cases. We have been careful to know that the Indians to whom the money is going are capable of transacting their own business, and, Mr. Chairman, this policy should, in my judgment, be continued as rapidly as the condition of the Indians will bear until we, as a Government, are rid of the entire question.

The amount, Mr. Chairman, appropriated in this bill for the support and civilization of the Indians in Montana, receiving rations at the Fort Peck, Fort Belknap, and Blackfeet agencies, amounting to about $150,000, will not be expended—provided the bill we reported and which has passed the House, ratifying an agreement with them by which we acquire 17,500,000 acres of land, becomes a law—for the reason that the first installment on the payment for these lands will take its place, and all appropriations hereafter made for them will be out of their own money and no tax or expense on the Government. And, Mr. Chairman, should the bill reported by our committee, known as the Great Sioux reservation bill, become a law, of which there is but little doubt, as it has passed both Houses and but awaits the approval of the President, then, Mr. Chairman, besides opening up over 11,000,000 acres of splendid lands to homestead settlement, our present and former annual appropriation for those Indians, amounting to the enormous sum of one and a half million dollars directly out of the Treasury, will be forever ended, for the simple and plain reason that the money arising from the sale of this vast body of land at 50 cents per acre, as fixed in the bill, will produce a fund of over $5,000,000, which will be ample to place these Indians on a self-sustaining basis, and thereby stop that much more of our annual expenses on the Government.

Now, Mr. Chairman, a few words in regard to the Choctaws, Chickasaws, Creeks, Cherokees, and Seminoles in the Indian Territory, known as the five civilized tribes, and I am done. It is admitted that these people have made greater advancement in civilization and self-local government than any others. All of these tribes have separate local governments of their own, consisting of executive, legislative, and judicial branches, all formulated and patterned very much after that of the United States. These local governments, however, only bear and operate on their own people in matters between an Indian and a citizen of the United States, whether domiciled there or elsewhere. No matter how intelligent and capable the Indian, their government has no power or jurisdiction over them, and as the Government of the United States have none the larger part of their mercantile and other business transactions are at the will and pleasure of the contracting parties, there being no law under the sun by which and through which a right can be protected or a wrong redressed.

This, Mr. Chairman, is demoralizing, and leads to much outlawry and injustice both to white man and Indian. And, Mr. Chairman, the criminal jurisdiction exercised and extended over that country by the district court for the western district of Arkansas and the northern district of Texas and the southern district in Kansas, which takes jurisdiction and cognizance over offenses between Indian and white man, and the violations of the intercourse laws has, in my judgment, done more harm than good. This partial jurisdiction has kept up, to some extent, a conflict of authority, and owing to the great abuse of authority upon the part of deputy marshals and their posses in former days, which abuse consisted in hunting down and arresting persons for mere technical violations of the intercourse laws, and in order to make large bills of costs against the Government, frequently carted them around and around for hundreds of miles, and finally forcing them and many of their neighbors to attend the Federal court month after month and year after year, remote from their homes at great expense, and when tried turn out to be the selling or giving away a little whisky. This and similar transactions have alienated these people from the Government instead of teaching them to love and respect it besides.

Mr. Chairman, it causes bloodshed and death. No less than ten or fifteen officers of the Government have been shot down and murdered in this so-called civilized country within the last ten months. The Federal courts at Fort Smith, Ark., try, convict, and hang them by the score, until the hanging of eight or ten Indians at Fort Smith at one time fails to attract public attention, and yet the killing goes on. One thing, Mr. Chairman, I desire to say in justice to the later marshals of this court that they are not only good men themselves, but they endeavor to get good men, and do get many good men to serve as deputy marshals, but the seeds of hatred have long since been sown and will not down.

In view of these facts, Mr. Chairman, Congress should authorize these people to contract like other people in regard to personal property and the rendering of personal services, and when made to be binding. Courts should be located in their midst, with full criminal and civil jurisdiction, and by the strong arm of the law place perfect and complete protection over each man, woman, and child living or being there. Let them know that their rights could and would be protected, and their crimes punished and their contracts for and against them enforced. This in my judgment would in a few years turn their jealousy and hate into love and respect for the law and the Government.

They hold their lands in common, yet they own it in fee; hold patents from the Government for it, and therefore are the true owners of the soil. This Government can not rightfully take one foot of it from them. Not one acre, Mr. Chairman, should ever be taken from them by man or Government without their consent, and not then without just and fair compensation to be agreed upon. They should, however, be encouraged to take their lands in severalty, and for that purpose the United States courts established amongst them should be given jurisdiction in partition of their real estate, and when any adult becomes sufficiently advanced in civilization to understand the use and value of his or her landed estate he or she should be allowed to have his or her part set off by the court. This once commenced, the mystic ball would soon be unraveled and all who were capable would have their own homes and their full share of the land. For a better safeguard the title of at least 160 acres should be inalienable for a term of years; the remainder might be sold by the owner to any one he chose upon permission and order of the court.

One thing, Mr. Chairman, is all important to final and peaceable success of this question, and that is good faith and common honesty. We should pay them, and pay them promptly, every dollar we justly owe them. When we do our part we then can justly expect them to do theirs, and at the proper time submit to and gladly accept a territorial form of government, and finally become one of the proud States of this Union. In fact, Mr. Chairman, when we perform our part, it will be their duty to become part and parcel of our civilization and assume the sovereignty of citizens; for, Mr. Chairman, when a government places its fostering hand and strong arm of protection around the citizen's life, liberty, and property, in turn for this beneficent gift he should put his shoulder to the wheel and do his full, equal share to protect, defend, and support that government.

Looking to this end these people should be represented on this floor; they should have a delegate here to look after their local and national interest, and for that purpose I have introduced a bill authorizing and allowing them to elect and send a Delegate to Congress. Sir, all the machinery of the Government—legislative, executive, and judicial—should be extended over these people as soon as possible. In short, we should have but one flag, one constitution, one civilization, and one law for all men in this country. Social matters are regulated by society, and will adjust themselves accordingly. And, Mr. Chairman, as much as has been said and written about these people, I candidly believe that if the question could be submitted to them to-morrow, and a fair expression had, that a majority would vote to become citizens of the United States, with all the words imply, if they felt certain that the Government would deal justly by them, pay them all that is due, and protect them in all their personal and property rights.

Oklahoma has become an important factor in the Indian question, and no part of it is less understood throughout the country. Oklahoma is a beautiful piece of territory lying west of the Creek and Cherokee Nations and between them and the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Indian reservation in the Indian Territory. The Creeks and Seminoles ceded this country to the United States for the purpose of settling other friendly Indians and freedmen on. This land being sold and bought for a specific purpose, the Government holds it in trust for that purpose and can not rightfully settle white people on it without the consent of the Indians from whom we purchased. In other words, it is our duty to carry out our contract unless they consent to a change; and for the purpose of settling this vexed question I have introduced a bill authorizing and directing the President to appoint a commission of three discreet persons to confer with these two tribes and, if possible, make a new contract, and extinguish this trust and allow it to be opened up to white settlement under the homestead law. The Indians do not need it; at least, in the condition it is in they can not use it, and the Government does not need it for the uses for which it was purchased. Therefore a just and reasonable compensation ought to be paid the Indians by the Government and let our own homeless people have it.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, this standstill policy should be abandoned and a new and aggressive policy that is just to all should be pursued, and in a few years there will be no Indian question over which to legislate.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

Here the committee informally rose, and Mr. CRISP took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A joint resolution (S. R. 42) extending the provisions of an act entitled "An act relating to arrears of taxes in the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1887;

A bill (S. 116) to incorporate the American Trust Company of the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. 630) for the relief of Edwin DeLeon;

A bill (S. 1338) granting an increase of pension to Kate Q. Dalzell;

A bill (S. 1588) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide additional regulations for homestead and pre-emption entries of public lands," approved March 3, 1879;

A bill (S. 1941) for the erection of a public building at Helena, Mont.; and

A bill (S. 2005) to provide for the disposal of the Fort Wallace military reservation in Kansas.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 1473) authorizing the President of the United States to arrange a conference for the purpose of promoting arbitration and encouraging reciprocal commercial relations between the United States of America and the Republics of Mexico, Central and South America, and the Empire of Brazil, requested a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed Mr. FRYE, Mr. DOLPH, and Mr. BROWN as conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. 3957) for the relief of Peter March, Thomas J. Wright, administrator, and others.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendments bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 1481) making an appropriation to construct a road and approach from Pineville, La., to the national military cemetery near that town;

A bill (H. R. 3749) for the relief of Frank Baker; and

A bill (H. R. 4556) to confirm New Madrid location survey numbered 2889, and to provide for the issue of a patent therefor.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, with a surplus of over $90,000,000, taken from the people by taxation, of which over $60,000,000 is now being kept and used, without any recompense or revenue, by certain national banks, termed Government depositories, and with this surplus steadily and ever increasing so that by the end of the fiscal year, unless legislative relief from taxation is given, there is certain to be a surplus of upwards of $160,000,000, it seems to me to be idle, uncalled for, and unfair to enter into any mere theorizing or platitudes on the advantages or disadvantages of free trade or protection. This seems to me to be too much like Nero holding high carnival while Rome was burning. This is not the practical issue now joined by the logic of events. Neither is it exactly relevant, while the country is in this state of overtaxation, to indulge in epithets or to call every honest friend of tariff-tax reduction a free-trader or an enemy of American labor. This style of argument is too much like that of Fagin's pupil when, having picked some one's pocket, he lustily shouted "Thief!" to draw attention away from himself, the real culprit.

You men who now practically oppose all form of tariff-tax reduction are not the only friends of American labor, nor have you a monopoly, nor are you the sole guardians of honest, fair, and reasonable protection to American industrial enterprises, nor can you set up a man of straw nor raise a false issue. The question of protection or free trade is not fairly involved in this controversy. The real questions are few and simple: Shall we get rid of our surplus by extravagant expenditures or by reducing taxation; and if by the latter method, shall we reduce tariff taxes or internal-revenue taxes? This is all there is in it.

While there are a few whose main suggestions for reducing the surplus consist in pointing out ways and means of expenditure, the great body of the American people are agreed that the surplus can be best and most justly reduced by reducing taxation.

It is only when we come to consider the mode of reducing taxes that we discover much disagreement and diversity of opinion. Those who are in favor of retaining the present high-tariff taxes intact, at all hazards and under all circumstances, believe and insist that the internal-revenue taxes on spirits and tobacco should be dispensed with and removed. Some of this class are a little more moderate and would be satisfied with the abolition of the tobacco tax and the tax on spirits used for mechanical purposes and in the arts. On the other hand, those who favor tariff-tax reduction are opposed to any change or abatement in the tax on spirits and tobacco. There are, however, in this class some who are more moderate and who would by way of compromise consent to a partial or even total removal of the tax on tobacco.

Aside from the small matter of fruit brandies there are but two classes who seriously ask for the repeal of the tax on spirits—the ultra-protectionists and the ultra-prohibitionists. Neither class is very numerous nor can be fairly regarded as representative in any enlarged or national sense. We may therefore dismiss the consideration of this tax as not a practical question, at least at this juncture, for neither the manufacturers nor the consumers are urgent for repeal.

In respect to the removal of the tobacco tax there may be said to be a broader and more enlarged diversity of opinion. Tobacco, until quite recently, has pretty generally not been considered one of the necessaries of life, but has, on the contrary, among all civilized nations in modern times, been almost universally regarded as a luxury, and one of the most legitimate and certain sources of taxation, and one that has been as cheerfully borne as any tax well can be.

In France, Spain, Italy, and Austria-Hungary the governments take the manufacture and sale of tobacco into their own hands and prohibit its importation by private persons.

In 1887 France, with a population of 38,000,000, derived from tobacco a revenue of $74,991,180, and Italy, with a population of 30,000,000, $51,100,000. Great Britain, with a population of 35,000,000, collected during the year ending March 31, 1887, from taxes on spirits-beer, and tobacco, $181,750,000—more than one-third of her entire revenue; from the tax on tobacco there was received $46,835,000.

The other nations of Europe obtain a large amount for the support of their respective governments from tobacco taxation.

The statesmen of all these countries, having considered this question of the taxation of tobacco, must have found good and justifiable grounds for taxing it, or they would not have so universally imposed such a tax.

It is to be observed in this connection, too, that aside from Great Britain and the Scandinavian countries the "protective" policy exists to a greater or less degree in all of those countries.

This is what that great statesman and political economist, Senator SHERMAN, said in 1882 about the tobacco tax, in speaking about the tax on spirits and tobacco:

> These taxes ought to be left as a part of our permanent system of taxation as long as any other taxes, internal or external, more oppressive, remain on the statute-books.
> * * * * * * *
>
> I do not hesitate to say that there is a general desire among all classes of our people, without regard to party, that the remnants of the internal system shall be swept away, except on whisky, tobacco, and beer.
>
> * * * * * * *
> This tobacco tax, of all others, is the easiest collected, the most certain, increasing constantly from year to year, dependent upon an appetite that will be indulged no matter what may be the tax; a tax that has been more stable than any other. No amount of tax likely to be put upon tobacco will prevent its being chewed and smoked and snuffed. In all other countries where taxation prevails this is a favorite subject of taxation. * * * I say the tax on tobacco does not diminish the price to the farmer who raises it. * * * And I say we are throwing off a tax, which, by the judgment of all nations, is the best source of taxation.

Senator SHERMAN is entirely right; the tax "is certain and increasing from year to year," as the following table shows:

Average collection expense from 1863 to 1887, inclusive			3.15			3.80

Not only is this a certain and a growing tax, but it is on the whole more cheaply collected than our tariff taxes, as the above table of actual and comparative cost shows.

There is no serious nor general demand among the consumers nor among the manufacturers for the repeal of the tobacco tax. The clamor for repeal is either local or limited, and is partly natural and partly artificial, and comes from two classes, if we except those who would yield by way of compromise, namely: the tobacco farmers in two or three States and those who would eliminate the tax for the sake of retaining the tariff taxes with undiminished vigor.

This tobacco sentimentalism—for so I can not help denominating it—is an "ism" common to both political parties, and neither can claim any particular glory in spurning or propagating the "ism."

The distinction that some statesmen have drawn between this tax and a tariff tax, in that the former is a tax on a home product, while the tariff tax is laid on a foreign product, is unworthy of those gentlemen and a disparagement of popular intelligence; for the tax is ultimately and in every instance—and that is, after all, the vital point—paid by the American consumer—our own flesh and blood. Whether we pay a tax on a hogshead of Cuban sugar or Virginia tobacco makes little difference. In either case our surplus is reduced; in either case it is a tax, and we are the tax-payers.

And this notion that tobacco is one of the necessaries of life is neither the popular nor the philosophic idea. It is the newest of all new idiosyncrasies—the offspring of a fertile brain under high political stress, novel, but neither startling nor convincing.

But it is idle to debate this point while there are so many highly tariff-taxed necessaries of life—great food staples, such as sugar, rice, and molasses—about which there can be no debate as to their being among the chief necessaries of life.

And this, Mr. Speaker, brings me to a consideration of our tariff taxes. These taxes may properly be divided into two great heads, namely: Purely revenue taxes, such, for instance, as a tax on tea or coffee, and protective taxes, such as are laid on products common to this country. All tariff taxes not purely revenue taxes are, to some extent or in some degree, protective, except in those instances where nature has given us a practical monopoly, as in the case of petroleum, cotton, etc., or where there is a great overproduction dependent on export trade, as in the case of wheat.

Owing to the vast and varied resources of our country the items on which a purely revenue tariff could be levied are quite limited and to a large extent confined to the pure necessaries of life, and hence there are very few people indeed in this country who desire that our tariff taxes be limited to pure revenue items. So few, indeed, are these that it is not at all a question of practical moment. When we come to tariff taxes on products common to this country we enter the domain of "protection," and have reached a practical question. A tariff on a commodity we readily produce, where our production does not quite equal or exceed our consumption, is, as a rule and to the degree of the tariff tax laid, protective. Where the tariff is very low the protection will be slight and the revenue quite ample. Where the tariff is very high the duty will be more than protective; it will breed a monopoly, and yield no revenue whatsoever. The primary object of a protective tariff is to enlarge and expand our field of production in those directions in which we are fairly open to expansion, for I do not believe a protective tariff is justified in those cases where nature has put a veto on the power of expansion, and where revenue rather than increased production seems to be the chief result, as in the case of sugar.

Coming to the question of the degree of protection that ought to be given in a case where protection is fairly warranted, it seems to me that only so high a duty should be laid as will fairly cover the difference in the cost of production here and abroad, be it in labor, raw material, or interest on capital. Such a tariff I call a low tariff as distinguished from a revenue tariff. Where a tariff tax exceeds in a material degree this measure I term it a high tariff. It then becomes more or less prohibitive, breeds monopolies, and works injury both to the consumer and the laboring man.

The price of labor is primarily governed by the law of supply and demand. The protected producer does not measure the wages he pays by the amount of protection he gets, but by the ease or difficulty with which he can procure labor, or by the fact whether labor is plenty or scarce. A protective tariff only helps labor indirectly by enlarging the demand for it. One of the secondary results of a very high tariff is overproduction, and this leads to stagnation and suspension, from which comes to the laaborer lower wages, lockouts, strikes, and untold miseries

It has been the fashion of certain economists to ascribe the marvelous growth of this country for the past twenty-five years wholly to our tariff laws. Statistics of growth in all conceivable forms have been paraded, accompanied with the exclamation, "Behold the tariff!" This is all pure exaggeration.

The tariff with a multitude of other causes have, all combined, produced the magnificent result. The chief factors, however, have been our abundant supply of the most fertile lands in the world, which we have freely given away under our homestead laws, together with the immense tide of immigration, with all its capital of money and muscle. This has produced our great home market. Our oceans of land, as free as water, and the development of the same have covered a multitude of sins, and, not least of all, some of the sins which lurk here and there in our tariff laws.

Our leading agricultural staples are breadstuffs and cotton. The latter is theoretically and the former practically, so far as our producers are concerned, free of duty. The home price of wheat is fixed by the export price, and the farmer of Minnesota has to compete, without any governmental aid direct or indirect, with the farmers of India in the markets of England. And it is in these great and unprotected agricultural industries that our growth has been the greatest and most pronounced. But for the great volume of export of our non-protected agricultural staples our foreign commerce would cut but a sorry figure and the balance of trade would be heavily against us all the time. During the last fiscal year our total imports amounted to $692,320,000, while our total exports amounted to $703,022,923, and of this total 74.41 per cent. were agricultural products, while only 19.45 per cent. were products of manufactures as the following table shows:

GENERAL FEATURES OF THE DOMESTIC EXPORT TRADE DURING 1887.

The values of our exports of domestic merchandise during the last fiscal year, classified by groups according to sources of production, were as follows:

Articles.	Values.	Per cent.
Products of agriculture	$523,073,798	74.41
Products of manufacture	136,735,105	19.45
Products of mining (including mineral oils)	11,758,662	1.67
Products of the forest	21,126,273	3.01
Products of the fisheries	5,155,775	.73
Other products	5,173,310	.73
Total	703,022,923	100.00

Against an aggregate of $692,320,000 of imports, our non-protected farmers can show an aggregate export of $523,073,798, while our protected manufacturers can only show a paltry export of $136,735,105. Let it be remembered, too, in this connection, that while our farmers thus proudly enter into the competitive markets of the entire world, the wages they pay the agricultural laborer are, as compared with the wages paid in any other country for such labor, relatively much higher than the wages paid by our manufacturers, as we shall hereafter point out more in detail.

If our export trade were limited to the products of our manufactures, our imports would soon necessarily reach the same level, and our foreign commerce would thus be but a bagatelle—a desideratum longed for perhaps and desired by some of our high protectionists. What our farmers have done for our export trade in 1887 they have done in all these years, more or less, since 1860, as the following table shows:

It will be observed, by reference to the following table, that our exports of the products of agriculture have consisted almost entirely of raw cotton, breadstuffs; provisions, including meats and dairy products, and leaf-tobacco; these products during the fiscal year 1887 comprising 94 per cent. of the total value of the exports of all products of agriculture.

The farmers of this country, paying as they do a tariff royalty to nearly every industry but their own, and paying relatively higher wages for labor than any other industry in this country, and having their home price fixed by the export price, are, notwithstanding all these disadvantages able to and, with head erect, do enter the markets of the world and compete not only with the so-called pauper labor of Europe but also with that great and uncounted horde of Asiatics in the valleys and plains of India.

As it has been the fashion to ascribe all our growth and prosperity to the tariff, so it has also been the fashion to ascribe the higher wages paid labor in this country over that of England wholly to a protective tariff. Figures have been paraded comparing wages here and over the sea, and then we have been gravely told that the tariff is the sole cause of all the difference in our favor. I am not a disbeliever in a just and fair protective tariff, but I abhor putting it on false grounds. Comparisons are worthless unless the conditions are similar, and in this instance the conclusions claimed prove too much.

England is called free trade; Austria, Germany, Italy, and France are as decidedly and as highly protective as this country. In respect to density of population, cost of living, interest on money, and cost of land, England is more on a par with those countries than our own, and yet in England the wages are much higher than on the continent. Here is what Senator FRYE, in his speech delivered at Boston before the Home Market Club on what he "saw in Europe," says:

But I am not going to weary your patience. I have spent enough of your time on the question of what wages are worth in Europe. I say, from all my observations made there, and they were made as carefully as I could make them, and in all honesty of purpose, there is only one country in Europe that comes within one-half of our wages, and that is Great Britain; that in Germany, France, Belgium, and Switzerland they are not one-third of our wages, and in Italy not one-quarter.

To see the true force of this statement, just imagine there were no such country as the United States in existence, and then by all the laws of inductive reasoning you would have the strongest kind of argument in favor of free-trade England as against the high protective-tariff countries of the continent on the question of wages. Senator FRYE has unconsciously but naively pricked his own bubble. But we can find a good illustration nearer home. The Minnesota and Dakota farmer is not directly protected in his farming operations in the sense in which the manufacturers of iron and steel and of cotton and woolen goods are, and yet the wages of agricultural laborers in Dakota and Minnesota are relatively higher as compared with agricultural laborers in Europe than in that of the directly protected industries mentioned, and much more certain and regular and far less subject to fluctuation.

But I want to call Senator FRYE'S attention, and I only do so in response to his Boston speech, to his own New England for a moment, for I think it is in this matter to some extent as in the missionary cause—one need not always go abroad in search of heathens. Less than a generation ago nearly all the mill hands and factory operatives of New England were her own children, the sons and daughters of New England farmers, mechanics, and tradesmen. And now I am told by reliable men, whose word I can not doubt, that all this is changed. Their mill hands and factory hands are now mostly foreigners—mainly Canadian-French—while their own sons and daughters, those who before constituted their labor force, all go West, so that one could almost without exaggeration say that in New England the tariff protects not American but Canadian labor. Now, if I were one of those wicked free-traders with whom it is the fashion to class every one who believes in any form of tariff reduction, I might say, "Your high tariff has driven the flower of your youth out West; behold how dangerous!"

But it has done nothing of the kind!

The selfish greed of the New England manufacturer has reached out for cheap Canadian labor, while the polar star of the great West, our boundless and free-for-all public lands, have drawn thither the growing cream of New England, the concentrated essence of the Pilgrim fathers, and I am glad of it, for there is no human being I so love and admire as the New England Yankee transplanted to our boundless and exuberant West. There they are all, like myself, believers in a just low tariff as I have defined it. And in proof of this, and by way of rejoinder to the copious clippings from English papers indulged in by some on the grave dangers threatening us from free-trade England, I beg leave to quote the following letter from a transplanted and most worthy son of the Granite State, who is and has been a life-long Republican—one of our leaders, in fact—and one of the leading business men and chief flour manufacturers of Minneapolis, Hon. Charles A. Pillsbury:

DEAR SIR: I have been meaning to write you for some time, saying I should be very sorry not to have you continue as member of House of Representatives from our State as long as the people in your district want you there, as they evidently do. Your course has met with the cordial approval of nearly all the people in this State, especially on the tariff question. I think safe to say that 90 per cent. of the Democrats and 75 per cent. of the Republicans agree with you. Whatever different opinion there may be as to the necessity of having a general reform of the tariff in order to promote the interest of our whole country (and I am quite sure that a material reduction in the tariff would help the country as a whole), there is certainly no chance for a difference in opinion but that the Northwest would be immensely benefited by a very material reduction of our tariff on almost every article.

I hope, whatever is done, that the duty on jute cloth will be removed. There is only one manufactory in the country that I know of that manufactures the jute cloth, and they make it direct into the seamless bags. It would be a good deal cheaper for the millers of the Northwest to buy out that institution, as under the present tariff we probably pay for it every year.

Yours, very truly,

CHAS. A. PILLSBURY.

Hon. KNUTE NELSON, M. C.

The truth is, and if a fair protective tariff is just, as I believe it is, it can afford to plant itself on the truth, that the main cause for lower wages in Europe is to be found in the greater density of population and in a far greater oversupply of labor than here. Senator FRYE again, in his Boston speech, unconsciously bears witness to this. This is what he says:

Step up to Belgium. Belgium is a perfect bee-hive. It is about one-third the size of the State of Maine in territory, and has 6,000,000 of people—more people to the square mile than any other country in Europe. And they seem to love to work. Why, the manufacturing of Belgium is perfectly amazing. Did you know she was frightening England to-day out of her boots?

Again, in another place in the same speech he says:

I was in Liverpool for ten days, and almost every day went to look over those docks. I could whistle Yankee Doodle almost all over Europe, but when I struck these docks I was silent. I do believe they beat anything in the United States or in the world. I was unusually attracted to them, and in the habit of going down there mornings and afternoons. I am safe in saying that I have seen five hundred able-bodied men, looking hungry as a hungry man looks, stalking about those docks and begging for a little work, not getting it; coming down—after dinner, I was going to say—coming down after the time men ordinarily eat dinner, their numbers augmented, and beseeching again for work, ten cents' worth, twenty cents' worth, "any work, for God's sake, and to feed my children." How can wages be high where that thing endures?

Yes, Mr. FRYE, with such an overplus of labor, how can wages be high where that thing endures?

The truth is, and it is time we looked it squarely in the face, that in spite of our tariff, in spite of the great boundless West, fast filling up but hitherto our great safety-valve, the labor problem is fast pressing us on all sides. Even here a committee of this House has been wrestling with one phase of it in the coal fields of Pennsylvania. When our great West is filled up, when the crowded East can no longer find ampler or better room in the West than at home, when we begin to approximate Europe in density of population, then our labor will get as little relief, by way of increase in wages, from a protective tariff as labor now gets in France, Austria, and Germany from such tariff. It will be like the picture on the Liverpool docks—a mere struggle for something to do. How illusory a high protective tariff is under such conditions, and how little aid it can really afford is attested to by United States Consul-General Jussen, of Vienna, in his report of April 13, 1887, found in Consular Report No. 83, for September last. Here is what he says:

THE EFFECT OF A PROTECTIVE TARIFF UPON AUSTRIAN INDUSTRIES.

The reasons which were given for this state of things in the report of this high commission are very interesting and quite remarkable, considering the source from whence they came. As the cause for this depression of trade and industry in Austria, the house of peers feels called upon to mention (1) the armed peace of Europe; (2) the industrial competition; and (3) the tariff war between the nations of Europe, a burden which, as these gentlemen admit, the nations of Europe can not possibly carry much longer. And what is more remarkable still is that not only the liberal press, but the semi-official and highly conservative organs, coincide in this view, and proceed to show that the protective tariff was principally instrumental in bringing about the present condition of things.

As a matter of course these journals claim that a highly protective tariff was at first, when the expenditures of the state began to increase, necessary in order to enable the people to carry the burden of internal taxation, but they admit that this tariff system led to the tariff wars under which Europe is laboring at present, and that as an inevitable consequence the industries of Austria find themselves suddenly cut off from foreign markets and confined to the demands of home consumption, and that home consumption decreases constantly, being affected by the same causes which curtailed the export trade, and that at last the industries of the Empire stand face to face with a commercial crisis.

For this dilemma, so freely admitted, the remedies of a universal tariff reduction and international tariff conventions are proposed, but together with this proposal the admission goes hand in hand that a concert of action of the nations of Europe in this direction is, under present circumstances, out of the question. And, finally, after all these arguments and considerations, the conclusion is reached that nothing is to be done except to leave things in statu quo.

This, too, illustrates how, under such conditions as Austria is in, a protective tariff can not only not protect labor, but also fails to help languishing and depressed industries.

When labor finds nothing to do, when industries find no market, the patient in either case has got beyond tariff relief.

But I will pursue the bearing of the tariff on the wage question no further. My object has been not to show that the tariff gave no relief to labor, but to point out truly and honestly just the extent to which the tariff can reach in fixing wages. While I am in favor of a fair and just protective tariff—a low tariff, as I call it—I am under all circumstances opposed to a tariff that reaches beyond this point—to what I term a high tariff. The primary object of a tariff justly protective is, as I have already suggested, increased production. Where this result can not be fairly reached, or the tariff is too high, then there is no warrant for it, and there should be an abatement, and in any tariff tax or other tax abatement preference should always be given to the necessaries of life. I believe that there are many items in our tariff list that are either too highly taxed or are not fair objects for protection, or that, being among the supreme necessaries of life, should for that reason, under the present condition of our Treasury, be freed from tariff taxes. Under this belief I have introduced a bill putting sugar, molasses, rice, salt, coal, lumber, manila, jute, and sisal-grass, and twine from the same, on the free-list. The following table, based on the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, shows the effect of such a policy:

	Amount imported.	Amount of duty.	Ad valorem rate (per cent.).
Sugar	$68,882,884	$56,507,496	82.04
Molasses	5,336,730	1,496,863	28.05
Rice	1,518,766	971,455	64.01
Salt	1,455,385	676,866	49.92
Coal	2,811,158	683,728	24.32
Wood and lumber	8,223,505	1,503,185	18.28
Manila, jute, etc	9,971,276	1,775,731	17.81
Total	98,199,704	63,615,324	*64.78

*Total average.

Sugar imported free under the Hawaiian treaty, $9,255,351; at 82.04 per cent., $7,592,989.

All the foregoing figures are for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887.

The principal items in this list are sugar, and hemp, jute, manila, and sisal-grass collectively. The limit of sugar production is circumscribed by nature, and under any kind of fair protective duty no more than one-ninth to one-eighth of all the sugar consumed by our people could be made at home. As to hemp, jute, manila, and sisal-grass, from which our grain-binding twine is made, it is all, with the possible exception of a trifle of hemp, raised abroad. Practically then, as to $58,283,233, the bill does no real violence to so-called protective principles. And it seems to me our farmers need cheap twine, and all our people cheap sugar, rather than cheap tobacco and fortifications. The great food staples of the people are bread, meat, coffee, tea, and sugar. All of these except sugar are unaffected by any tariff taxes, and why should not sugar be, with an overflowing treasury?

Next to the sugar tax there is in this list no tax that so vitally affects our Northwestern farmer, especially now when wheat is so low, as the tax on jute, manila, and sisal-grass, and the twine made therefrom.

The effect of this tax is truly set forth in a recent article in the Chicago Tribune, which I beg leave to quote, and which is as follows:

One of the stupidest taxes in the tariff list is that on manila and sisal, materials needed in the manufacture of the cheap binder-twine used in harvesting-machines ever since wire was discarded. Wire proved a failure in the self-binders because it caused an injury to thrashing-machines and mills that ground the grain and was too dear; but inventive ingenuity solved the difficulty by substituting binder-twine. This twine is now used extensively throughout the western portions of the country. Being a cheap twine, only needed to hold sheaves together for a short time, hemp, which is much dearer, is not used in its manufacture, and the substitutes, sisal and manila, are found satisfactory. The duties on these materials last year (1886) amounted to $1,188,282, and the incidence of the tax, or the profits of manufacturers and middlemen on the tariff tax, to nearly as much more.

This tax protects no one, is not needed for revenue, and is an injury to every farmer it touches. The theory in taxing these substitutes was that such a levy was necessary to protect the hemp-growers of Kentucky and Missouri, but in fact nothing of the sort is done. Hemp is too costly for binder-twine, and it is cheaper to use sisal and manila with the duties added. The tax does the hemp-grower no good, and is a wholly unjustifiable levy on hundreds of thousands of farmers of the West. Unless the tax is increased to prohibition and made to keep out sisal and manila altogether, it can not operate to compel the use of hemp in making binder-twine for farmers. Why not repeal it outright? It is a benefit to no one, but an injury to all who are affected by it. To retain it is only to hold out a bribe for the organization of another trust to push up prices and bleed the farmers still harder.

The following letter from Mr. Brown, a leading Republican, a prominent farmer and banker of Crookston, the metropolis of the Red River Valley in Minnesota, shows the cost of such twine; and bear in mind that when the letter was written wheat was worth only 60 cents per bushel at Crookston.

Here is the letter:

DEAR SIR: Your valued favor 3d instant was duly received, for which please accept many thanks. From the most reliable information obtainable I find binding-twine has cost the consumers for the last six years on an average 16¾ cents per pound, and two pounds per acre is the average amount required, making it cost about 2 cents per bushel for the bands. This is a very large tax on wheat-raising. It would seem as though some relief should be afforded. We could enumerate many other things which we think should be free from duty; but we have confidence that you will do all that you can to remove these burdens. However, we must not expect immediate relief; it will take time and agitation.

Very truly, yours, etc.,

M. R. BROWN.

Hon. KNUTE NELSON, Washington, D. C.

But I will enter into no further details respecting the items in my bill. To show that I fairly represent in my bill the Republican tariff sentiment of my State, and as an offset to all the clippings from English newspapers indulged in by those who are opposed to all tariff-tax reduction, and who can see nothing else to relieve from taxes than spirits and tobacco, I beg leave to quote the following from one of our leading Republican papers in Minnesota, the home organ of ex-Senator Windom, the Winona Republican, of Wednesday evening, February 22, 1888:

As to the particular direction in which the reduction ought to take place, and the various details incidental thereto, there is, as was to have been expected, considerable diversity of opinion—partly because of conflicting local interests, perhaps, and still more because of a confessed inability without expert knowledge to deal intelligently with the subject in detail. Generally speaking, however, the drift of popular Republican sentiment, in so far as the local editorial judgment may be accepted as a trustworthy guide thereto, is pretty fairly reflected in the bill recently presented in the House by Mr. Nelson, of this State, to which, in the present issue of the Republican, Mr. Youmans admiringly invites attention. The proposition made in some quarters to remove the internal tax from whisky is universally deprecated. As regards the tax on tobacco, the objection to its removal is made contingent apparently on how far such removal might operate to perpetuate import duties on articles of prime necessity consumed at the West. Evidently the distiller and the tobacco-grower maintain no very strong grip on the Republican party of Minnesota.

I also beg leave to quote the following letters—not from "blarsted Englishmen"—but from living, active Republicans in the great West. Here is one:

WINONA, MINN., February 17, 1888.

DEAR SIR: I have just read in the St. Paul Pioneer-Press the bill introduced by you to remove the duty from sugar, rice, coal, salt, hemp, manila, jute, and sisal grass, lumber, etc.

As a lumber manufacturer, let me thank you for including that product in your bill; and as one of the largest wool-growers in the State, except that it might embarrass the measure, I would be glad to see wool included also. It gratifies my State pride that a member from Minnesota, and a Republican, too, honors himself, his State, and his party, by initiating legislation so momentous and so beneficent as this. Your bill may not be enacted into law at this session, but the agitation will not cease until these burdens are removed from the people. I must commend your judgment in the selection of only a few articles—and those such as everybody knows should never have been polluted by a tariff tax—on which to put members of Congress on record. It will require cheek to vote against your bill, and the member from the West who does it will find it difficult to justify himself to a constituency that is becoming educated upon this question.

Let the bill pass and it is the Waterloo of protection. It will be to us what the repeal of the corn laws was to England, and the onward progress of the reform will be rapid and easy.

Very truly, yours,

EARLE S. YOUMANS.

Hon. KNUTE NELSON, Washington, D. C.

And here is one:

CARMAN, MINN., February 10, 1888.

DEAR SIR: It seems to me our party leaders are making a great mistake that they do not make greater effort to redeem their pledge to "remove the inequalities of the tariff," when on all sides it is so universally agreed that it is full of defects and "irregularities."

Very truly, yours,

E. D. CHILDS.

Hon. K. NELSON, Washington, D. C.

And here is another:

DULUTH, MINN., March 3, 1888.

DEAR SIR: We write you at this time to urge you to do all you can to reduce the duty on window-glass to the smallest amount possible. We have been at the mercy of the Pittsburgh manufacturers long enough. You may not know that the duty on common window-glass is more than the cost of it in Antwerp, Belgium; but such is the fact.

Very truly, yours,

SCOTT & HOLSTON.

Hon. KNUTE NELSON, M. C., Washington, D. C.

And here is another:

MADISON, WIS., February 20, 1888.

MY DEAR SIR: Your amendment of the tariff, as published in the papers, is just the thing, as far as it goes; but, for God's sake, amend it by putting wool in the free-list. Don't be afraid of the bleating of sheep or their owners. They need no more protection than hogs and hens and their owners; and if there is anything in God's world that needs cheapening it is woolen goods in this cold country. God speed you.

O. PETERSON.

Hon. KNUTE NELSON.

But I will quote no more. I have an abundance of similar letters. These are only samples to show you how the people feel.

Not only is there a strong sentiment among the people in favor of tariff-tax reduction, but our national, and our State platforms in the Northwest, are pledged and committed to tariff reform and tariff reduction. The following are the national and State Republican tariff pledges. The last national platform says:

The Republican party pledges itself to correct the inequalities of the tariff and to reduce the surplus.

The Minnesota platform says:

We favor an early and judicious revision of the tariff, with a simplification and reduction of customs duties.

The Iowa platform says:

We believe the tariff should be revised and reduced.

And the Nebraska platform says:

As the business of the country now demands a revision of the tariff, the Republican party, alive to the demands of every material interest, will see to it that such revision shall be made at the earliest practicable day.

All this, Mr. Speaker, means something more than free whisky and free tobacco.

Surely these promises ought to be kept.

Senator JOHN SHERMAN, protectionist as he is, makes the following admission in his recent speech before the Home-Market Club in Boston. Here is what he said:

The tariff ought to be carefully revised with a view to correct any inequalities or incongruities that have grown out of the change of values since the passage of the act of 1883; every imported article which does not compete with our domestic industry and is essential to the comfort and wants of our people should be placed on the free-list; every raw material of industry which does not compete with our own productions should be specially selected for the free-list.

In the face of these platform pledges; in the face of these admissions from unwilling witnesses; in the face of the large, ever-growing, and threatening surplus, taken from the people by taxation, and used by certain banks without any consideration therefor; and in the face of the fact that so many of the barest necessaries of life are loaded down with the highest kind of tariff taxes, it makes me sick at heart to think that there are leading men on this side the Chamber who can find at this juncture, and under these circumstances, no other field for tax reduction than the internal-revenue taxes on spirits and tobacco. Surely these things are not the diet on which the poor laboring man keeps his family.

Worthier, better, and juster, it seems to my mind, would it be to give our people—the toiling masses—cheaper food, cheaper fuel, cheaper clothing, and cheaper shelter—cheaper because released from the heavy and unnecessary bondage of high-tariff taxes. I will put free sugar, free coal, free salt, and free lumber against free whisky and free tobacco under all circumstances, and so will the great mass of the American people.

Mr. FUNSTON. Now will the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] answer the question I asked him awhile ago—that is, why he did not include wheat in his free-list?

Mr. NELSON. You can have the floor yourself now.

Mr. FUNSTON. But I want to ask the gentleman a question. He has time and he ought to answer. My question is, why do you not propose to put wheat on the free-list?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Because that is a product of Minnesota.

Mr. FUNSTON (to Mr. NELSON). Now be civil about it. I am courteous to you. Why do you not answer my question? You can not do it. The reason is that wheat is produced in Minnesota, and if it were put on the free-list it would be your ox that would be gored.

Mr. DAVIS. Perhaps the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] will answer a question put by an Eastern man.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. MCMILLIN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration the Indian appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, it has been suggested by members that it would be advisable to take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening and let debate on this bill go on. I feel inclined to obey the wish of the House on that subject, and in order to test the sense of the House I move that we now take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening, for the purpose of continuing general debate on the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the gentleman withdraw that motion for a moment? I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. PEEL] moves that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening, the evening session to be devoted to debate only on the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. PERKINS. I wish to suggest that if there is to be debate which does not pertain at all to this appropriation bill, it might be well to hold an evening session for that purpose; but if the debate is to be pertinent to the bill, it seems to me best to have it at a regular session of the House. For this reason I doubt the propriety of holding an evening session, as proposed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (having put the question). In the opinion of the Chair the motion is not agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for a division.

The question being again put, there were—ayes 60.

Mr. PEEL (before the negative vote was counted). I withdraw the motion for a recess, and move that the House adjourn.

The motion to adjourn was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills and joint resolutions of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. G. A. ANDERSON: A bill (H. R. 8991) for the relief of William B. Ferguson—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ATKINSON: A bill (H. R. 8992) granting a pension to Ann Kelly—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BACON: A bill (H. R. 8993) for the relief of Shadrack W. Brown—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8994) for the relief of John N. Lambert—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BLISS: A bill (H. R. 8995) for the relief of Antonia Wiener—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. W. C. P. BRECKINRIDGE: A bill (H. R. 8996) for the relief of W. S. McChesney—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. C. E. BROWN: A bill (H. R. 8997) for the relief of John Swasey and others—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BURROWS: A bill (H. R. 8998) for the relief of Margaret Batt—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BUTTERWORTH: A bill (H. R. 8999) granting a pension to Elizabeth M. Tumy—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CARUTH: A bill (H. R. 9000) for the relief of Theodore Schwartz—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9001) granting a pension to Silas M. Gray—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CLARDY: A bill (H. R. 9002) for the relief of John Schaefer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CLEMENTS: A bill (H. R. 9003) for the relief of George Harlan—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. COOPER: A bill (H. R. 9004) granting a pension to Rebecca L. Partridge—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9005) granting a pension to Michael Blue—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9006) granting a pension to Mrs. R. A. Oden—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DAVIS: A bill (H. R. 9007) for the relief of William Baker—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DE LANO: A bill (H. R. 9008) granting a pension to Harvey J. Burchard—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FITCH: A bill (H. R. 9009) granting an increase of pension to Edward R. Duffy—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FORAN: A bill (H. R. 9010) granting a pension to Jonathan E. Carroll—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GIFFORD: A bill (H. R. 9011) granting a pension to G. W. Demorest—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HARMER: A bill (H. R. 9012) granting a pension to Charles Sturn—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HEMPHILL: A bill (H. R. 9013) for the relief of the heirs at law of R. L. Wortham—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HOUK: A bill (H. R. 9014) for the relief of John T. Brown—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. JOSEPH: A bill (H. R. 9015) for the relief of Spiegelberg Brothers—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LAFFOON: A bill (H. R. 9016) to remove the charge of desertion against Bedford Potts—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LYMAN: A bill (H. R. 9017) for the relief of Ludwig V. Williams—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MANSUR: A bill (H. R. 9018) for the relief of Mary E. and Lucien Gordon—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. MILLIKEN: A bill (H. R. 9019) to provide for the erection of a monument to the memory of 48 Union soldiers buried at Augusta, Me.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. NEAL: A bill (H. R. 9020) for the relief of George W. Presley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. OSBORNE: A bill (H. R. 9021) to place the name of Peter Miller on the pension-roll—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PETERS: A bill (H. R. 9022) pensioning Andrew J. Freeman—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RANDALL: A bill (H. R. 9023) to increase the pension of Matilda Wilkins Emory—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SAYERS (by request): A bill (H. R. 9024) to reimburse Hamilton & Reilly—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. J. D. TAYLOR: A bill (H. R. 9025) for the relief of George W. Chalfant—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STEELE: A bill (H. R. 9026) for the relief of George W. Keim—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. J. D. TAYLOR: A bill (H. R. 9027) granting a pension to Sarah K. Suite—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 9028) granting a pension to Sanford Glass—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. G. M. THOMAS: A bill (H. R. 9029) for the relief of Marshall Burtram—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TOWNSHEND: A bill (H. R. 9030) for the relief of Abner Willis—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. C. H. ALLEN: Memorials of C. and W. Manard & Co., of G. W. Knowlton, of Charles C. Hutchinson, of Frank P. Haggett, of Middlesex & Co., of H. W. Johnson, of Frederick A. Buttrick, of Charles M. Williams, of Charles L. Hildreth, of H. G. Lausen, of George J. Carney, of W. M. Sawyer, of Samuel A. Chase, of O. H. Moulton, of William H. McDavitt, of J. F. Kimball, of F. F. Battles, and of Alvin

S. Lynn, business men and citizens of Lowell, Mass., for improved mail service between New York and New England—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of the Bricklayers and Masons' International Union of America, relative to the superintendent of the new Library building—to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. C. L. ANDERSON: Petition of Mary Vance, widow and administratrix of James J. Vance, of Mississippi, for reference of her claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, March 30, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. J. H. CUTHBERT, D. D., of Washington, D. C.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

DISPOSITION OF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS BY INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a statement of the number and disposition of public documents received by that Department, also submitting a report relative to the sale and to the printing and disposition of public documents; which was referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

ABSALOM RILEY VS. THE UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of fact in the case of Absalom Riley vs. The United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ANDREW CATHEY VS. THE UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of fact in the case of Andrew Cathey vs. The United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

G. SILBERBERG AND OTHERS VS. THE UNITED STATES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of fact in the case of G. Silberberg and others vs. The United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

AMERICAN INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill of the following title, returned from the Senate with amendments, and with the request for a conference with the House:

A bill (H. R. 1473) authorizing the President of the United States to arrange a conference for the purpose of promoting arbitration and encouraging reciprocal commercial relations between the United States of America and the Republics of Mexico, Central and South America, and the Empire of Brazil.

Mr. MCCREARY. I ask unanimous consent that the House nonconcur in the amendments of the Senate and agree to the conference requested.

The SPEAKER. Is the reading of the amendments demanded?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Let them be read.

The amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY] asks unanimous consent that the amendments just read be non-concurred in, and that the House agree to the conference asked by the Senate. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered. The Chair will announce during the day the managers on the part of the House.

PETER MARCH AND OTHERS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill of the following title, returned from the Senate with amendments:

A bill (H. R. 3957) for the relief of Peter March, Thomas J. Wright, administrator, and others.

The SPEAKER. This bill merely corrects, in the body of the bill and in the title, the name of one of the parties.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

In line 13 of the bill strike out "March" and insert "Marck."

Amend the title by striking out "March" and inserting "Marck."

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, these amendments will be concurred in.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House Senate joint resolution and bills of the following titles; which were severally read twice, referred respectively as indicated, and ordered to be printed:

The joint resolution (S. R. 42) extending the provisions of an act entitled "An act relating to arrears of taxes in the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1887—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

A bill (H. R. 3749) for the relief of Frank Baker; and

A bill (H. R. 4556) to confirm New Madrid location, survey No. 2889, and to provide for issue of patent therefor.

INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION, BARCELONA, SPAIN.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to report at this time a joint resolution from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, relating to the invitation of the Spanish Government to the Government of the United States to participate in the international exposition to be held at Barcelona, Spain, in April, 1888.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read, subject to objection.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 140) was read a first and second time. It is as follows:

Whereas the Spanish Government has extended to the Government of the United States an invitation to participate in the international exhibition which is to be held at Barcelona, Spain, commencing in the month of April, 1888:

Resolved, etc., That said invitation is accepted, and that there be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to effect the purpose of this resolution, to be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of State for the purpose of such representation at said exhibition.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of State to transmit to Congress a detailed statement of the expenditures which may have been incurred under the provisions of this resolution, together with any reports which may be made by the representatives of this country at said exhibition.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. I object.

Mr. MATSON. Regular order.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DAVIS. I send to the desk and ask to have read an article from the New York Herald of yesterday.

The Clerk read as follows:

A MEMBER'S LITTLE PLAN—HE GETS A BILL PASSED TO MAKE A RAILROAD PAY HIS LOSSES.

[From our regular correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, March 28, 1888.

The Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate at a recent hearing had up the question of the responsibility of railroads for bills of lading for cotton. It transpired that Mr. DAVIS, of Massachusetts, who had passed the bill through the House without opposition, was an owner of cotton mills at Fall River which had recently sustained a loss of about $100,000 through the burning of some Southern cotton presses.

The bill, as brought out by a question of Senator HISCOCK, was simply to make the railroads sustain the loss instead of the cotton mill advancing the money. The bill was adversely reported to the Senate with but one dissenting vote.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, if this statement were true, as it is not true, the provisions of the bill referred to would not relieve me in the slightest degree. It does not provide for compensation by any railroad to any person who may have suffered losses prior to the passage of the bill. It simply declares a principle of law respecting evidence, and applies only to cases occurring after its enactment. The statement that I attempted to secure the passage of this bill in order to compel a railroad company to pay losses that I had sustained is absolutely untrue.

I would ask the indulgence of the House a moment in order to show that this bill is not a private and personal one, but of a large and general character, by having read a preamble and resolution bearing upon the subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

BOSTON, March 21, 1888.

At a meeting of the Arkwright Club held this day the following preamble and resolution were adopted:

Whereas an act (H. R. 1527, Fiftieth Congress, first session) entitled "An act to make bills of lading conclusive evidence in certain cases," has passed the House of Representatives, has been read twice in the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce; and

Whereas purchasers and manufacturers of cotton in various States have been subjected to large losses, delays, and expenses from the action of transportation companies, who are common carriers, in repudiating responsibility upon bills of lading duly signed by officers of said companies, thus jeopardizing commercial reliance in such bills of lading, and seriously affecting the marketing—including both the selling and purchasing interests—of the cotton crop; and

Whereas it is learned that transportation companies are opposing the passage of said bill; and

Whereas it is of the utmost importance that there should be absolute responsibility in a bill of lading for the merchandise thereby represented, or its equivalent, and that the business of the country can not be properly transacted otherwise: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Arkwright Club respectfully represent that the act above mentioned is necessary for the security of buyers of merchandise who pay for the same upon the evidence of bills of lading, issued by transportation companies, and urge that the said act be passed by the Senate.

CHARLES H. DALTON,
EUGENE H. SAMPSON,
GEORGE DEXTER,
T. JEFFERSON COOLIDGE,
Executive Committee.
HENRY F. COE, Secretary.

Mr. DAVIS. I will simply add, Mr. Speaker, that this club represents the great body of the cotton manufacturers of New England.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. By order of the House the bills granting a pension to Mrs. Logan and Mrs. Blair are set for consideration on this day immediately after the reading of the Journal, the previous question having been ordered on the engrossment and third reading of the bills.

Mr. COX. If the gentleman from Indiana will allow me, I wish to ask unanimous consent to have printed a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of New York.

Mr. MATSON. I will withdraw the demand for the regular order for that purpose, but specially in favor of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RUSSELL]. The matter that he has presented is one of public importance, and I did not demand the regular order a few moments ago as against its consideration.

TAX ON COMMERCIAL AGENTS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. COX. I now ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the paper I send to the desk, being concurrent resolutions of the Legislature of the State of New York in favor of the repayment of the illegal penalties imposed upon merchants and commercial travelers in the District of Columbia.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

They are as follows:

STATE OF NEW YORK, IN SENATE, Albany, March 22, 1888.

Whereas in the year 1871 the local authorities of the District of Columbia, under certain legislation enacted by them (apparently under the authority delegated to them by Congress), on or about August 23 of said year, among other provisions, declared that thereafter a license tax should be imposed upon commercial agents; and

Whereas said law was enforced under severe penalties of fine and imprisonment up to the month of May, 1887; and

Whereas on May 9, 1887, the supreme court of the District of Columbia, by its unanimous decision, four judges sitting, decided all the legislation of the local authorities in the District of Columbia imposing taxes upon persons soliciting sales for merchants outside the District was beyond any authority conferred by Congress on the District, and that Congress itself, as the legislative power for the District, would have had no authority to grant such delegated power to the District, nor itself to tax the commerce of non-resident citizens; and

Whereas a bill is now pending in Congress to refund to merchants and commercial agents in various parts of the country the taxes thus legally exacted:

Be it resolved (if the assembly concur), That the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of New York be, and they are hereby, respectfully requested to favor said bill.

And be it further resolved, That copies of these preambles and resolutions be forwarded to the respective Houses of Congress.

By order of the senate.

JOHN S. KENYON, Clerk.

IN ASSEMBLY, March 23, 1888.

Concurred in without amendment.
By order:

INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION, BARCELONA, SPAIN.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I now renew my request for unanimous consent to consider the joint resolution presented this morning from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN] having withdrawn his objection to its consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection to the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BURROWS. Let me ask when this exposition is to take place?

Mr. HOOKER. Within thirty days from the present time; and it is necessary that prompt action should be taken upon the invitation.

Mr. BURROWS. How many of these expositions have we now on hand?

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. We have no other exposition under consideration this morning but this one to be held in Barcelona, in Spain.

Mr. BURROWS. How much is appropriated?

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. The sum of $25,000 is asked. And allow me to say that is a mere bagatelle compared with what the Spanish Government did at our exposition. It appropriated $60,000, and sent a vessel of war and a royal commission and a corps of engineers, while here we only ask $25,000.

Mr. BURROWS. I think the gentleman misunderstands me. I do not propose to object to the consideration of the resolution, but I wish merely to call the attention of the House and the country to the fact that we are running this to an extreme.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the resolution to be engrossed and read a third time.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 77, noes 16.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. No quorum.

The SPEAKER appointed as tellers Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa, and Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 131, noes 35.

So the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the resolution pass?

Mr. WEAVER. Upon that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only 14 members voting therefor.

The joint resolution was passed.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ANTHONY L. WOODSON.

Mr. FINLEY. I ask unanimous consent to call up from the Private Calendar for present consideration the bill (H. R. 4665) for the relief of Anthony L. Woodson.

The bill was read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the report may be read, subject to the right to object.

The report from the Committee on War Claims was read in part.

Mr. TAULBEE. There is so much confusion that members can not hear the reading. I think there is a probability of a misconstruction being put on the case.

The SPEAKER. The House will come to order.

The Clerk continued the reading of the report. Before he had concluded,

Mr. BURROWS said: Is the report being read subject to the right to object?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. BURROWS. There is another matter of considerable importance to be taken up this morning. I am sure the bill called up by the gentleman from Kentucky will involve considerable debate. In view of that I object to the consideration of the bill at this time.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] demands the regular order. The Clerk will report the title of the first bill ordered to be considered to-day after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. LANHAM. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LANHAM. As is well known, Fridays are set apart by the standing rules of the House for the consideration of business upon the Private Calendar. Friday evenings, by a special order adopted at this session of Congress, have been set apart for the consideration of certain business, and the order involves, I think, a limitation upon the character of the business to be transacted at those evening sessions. On the 2d of March this resolution was adopted in the House:

Resolved, That, until further ordered, on each Friday at 5 o'clock p. m. the House shall take a recess until 7.30 p. m., and after the 15th day of April next until 8 p. m., at which evening sessions bills on the Private Calendar granting pensions, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions and the Committee on Pensions, and bills on the Private Calendar reported from the Committee on the Judiciary removing political disabilities, shall be considered, and no other business shall be transacted at such evening sessions, and the House shall adjourn on each of said evenings not later than 10.30 p. m.

On the evening of the 2d of March I find that when the bill (H. R. 3191) granting a pension to Mrs. Logan was reached on the Calendar this statement was made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM]:

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Chairman, without taking up time in having the report in this case read, I wish to say that the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions could not remain here this evening on account of ill health, and he expressed a desire that this bill and the one next following it upon the Calendar should go over until another session, as he wishes to present some objections to them when they come before the House. I ask that these bills be passed over informally, retaining their places on the Calendar.

That order was made.

Then, on the evening of the 9th of March, as soon as the House had convened for the evening session, there was an order made by which it was agreed that this bill and also the bill granting a pension to Mrs. Blair should be assigned for Friday, two weeks from that day. This is the language of the request which was made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MORRILL]:

Mr. MORRILL. The honored chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions [Mr. MATSON] was called away to his home in Indiana, and is unable to be here this evening. He has requested that House bill No. 3191, granting a pension to Mary S. Logan, and Senate bill No. 574, to increase the pension of Mrs. Apolline A. Blair, be passed over for a vote in the full House. In accordance with this request, I ask that the previous question be considered as ordered, and that the vote on these two bills be taken two weeks from to-day, with thirty minutes debate allowed on each question.

The order was made accordingly.

Now, Mr. Speaker, these bills were not considered in Committee of the Whole House. This order was made at an evening session when it was not contemplated or expected such an order would be adopted. It proposes to change a standing rule of the House and to interfere with the time specifically set apart for consideration of bills on the Private Calendar on Friday. I do not think it was competent and within the authority of the House at that evening session to make that order. Hence I make the point of order and insist that these bills should not be allowed to come up at this time.

Mr. MATSON addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order raised by the gentleman from Texas.

The point has several times been made that the House at the Friday evening sessions could not by agreement assign a pension bill for consideration on another day assigned for the transaction of public business. But the point of order made even as against that has been overruled. That question does not arise in this instance. These are private pension bills and this day is assigned by the rules for the consideration of private bills.

Further, on last Friday during the day when the House was full this order was made by unanimous consent for this morning.

Mr. LANHAM. The order was continued in the same way in which it had been made.

The SPEAKER. The order was continued by the House itself in a day session. The Chair is constrained to overrule the point of order.

Mr. LANHAM. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LANHAM. Is it competent for me to antagonize the consideration of these bills to-day by moving that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of business on the Private Calendar?

The SPEAKER. This is a special order which has to be disposed of before the House goes into Committee of the Whole; but the gentleman can raise the question of consideration. It is always in the power of the House to decide, if it so chooses, that it will not proceed to take up the consideration of any particular matter. The gentleman from Texas can raise that question.

Mr. REED. I suggest that raising the question of consideration will only consume time.

Mr. LANHAM. I do desire, Mr. Speaker, to raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. That is a question which the gentleman has a right to raise under the rules of the House.

Mr. TARSNEY. Mr. Speaker, is not the motion to reconsider a privileged motion?

The SPEAKER. The question to reconsider is a privileged motion and comes up necessarily if the House determines to proceed with the subject at all, but the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] raises the question of consideration. The question is, Will the House now proceed to consider the bill (H. R. 3191) granting a pension to Mary S. Logan?

The question was taken; and the Speaker declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. LANHAM called for a division, but before it could be completed said: Mr. Speaker, it is manifest that it is the desire of the House to consider this bill, so I withdraw the demand for a division.

So the House determined to consider the bill.

The SPEAKER. The first question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY] to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered.

Mr. TARSNEY. I think I can make a suggestion which will save time.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. TARSNEY. I wish to make a suggestion to the distinguished gentlemen upon the other side who have charge of this bill. If the time for debate can be extended to one hour upon each of these bills, the bill to pension Mrs. Logan and the bill to pension Mrs. Blair, I think it will be agreeable to both sides of the House; it certainly will be to me; and I shall withdraw the motion to reconsider and agree that the House shall proceed immediately to the consideration of these bills.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY] asks unanimous consent that the time for debate upon the pending bill be extended so as to make it thirty minutes on each side. Is there objection?

Mr. TARSNEY. Thirty minutes on each side upon each of the two bills. I wish to add a further suggestion, Mr. Speaker. The two cases being so similar, if they can be consolidated, so far as the debate is concerned, and no vote be taken in either case until the two hours have expired, I think it will be an advantage in the consideration of the bills.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan now asks unanimous consent that the two bills named be debated together and voted upon, of course, separately, at the end of the debate.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. TARSNEY. I withdraw the motion to reconsider in each case.

The SPEAKER. The motion to reconsider is withdrawn, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL], who is in favor of the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. I yield five minutes to my colleague on the committee [Mr. GALLINGER].

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I would like to understand whether the whole two hours' debate is to be had before any vote is taken on either bill.

The SPEAKER. That was the request of the gentleman from Michigan, which was agreed to by the House. The Clerk will read the title of the first bill.

PENSIONS FOR MRS. LOGAN AND MRS. BLAIR.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3191) granting a pension to Mary S. Logan.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary S. Logan, widow of the late John A. Logan, a major-general of the United States Volunteers, in the late war for the Union, and to pay her a pension, from the passage of this act, for and during her natural life, at the rate of $2,000 per annum.

Mr. ENLOE. As these two bills are to be considered together, let the other one be read also.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 574) to increase the pension to Mrs. Apolline A. Blair.

Be it enacted, etc., That Apolline A. Blair, widow of the late Francis P. Blair, jr., a major-general of United States Volunteers in the late war for the Union, shall be paid, from the passage of this act, for and during her natural life, a pension of $2,000 per annum, in lieu of the pension of $50 per month now paid to her.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, which committee reported the bill granting a pension to Mary S. Logan, I am glad of an opportunity to say a word and cast a vote in its behalf. The bill is in harmony with others which have passed Congress and become laws, and is, to my mind, as meritorious a private pension bill as any which we will be called to act upon in this Congress.

John A. Logan was a conspicuous type of the best and truest men that our country has produced. Voluntarily leaving this Hall to do service in the field, his distinguished career in the Union Army has been told too often to warrant repetition. Leonidas was no braver than he, and when the rebellion ended Logan returned to private life with a record second to that of no soldier, either of the regular or volunteer forces. His subsequent career in the Senate of the United States is familiar to the people of the nation, who are still in mourning for this distinguished citizen and patriot.

The claimant under this bill is the widow of General Logan; the loved and loving companion of his great life work; the noble woman who was the greatest possible incentive and inspiration to him while in the field, as well as during his subsequent public career. Can it be possible that Congress will with hesitating voice or grudging hand grant to the widow of General Logan what it has given to others? The conscience of the loyal masses of the Republic has surely not reached a depth of such abject ingratitude as that.

I am aware that it is argued that these so-called large pensions are a discrimination against the widows of the private soldiers. But this is not so. The distinctions of rank and service have always and will always exist. It is right that it should be so. It is right that distinguished service should be recognized by the nation—that heroism and military skill such as Logan displayed should be singled out and rewarded. No true private soldier will object to this, for, as Logan was the idol of the common soldiery in camp and on the battle-field, so his name and fame are cherished by every brave man who fought in the ranks of that great Army which saved the Union from dissolution and our Government from overthrow. [Applause.]

The monument whose shadow almost reaches to this Capitol tells, in as eloquent language as marble or granite can speak, of the country's grateful remembrance of the heroic deeds of the immortal Washington. He saved the Republic in its first great struggle for life. Lincoln and Stanton, Grant and Thomas, Sherman and Sheridan, McPherson and Logan, Hancock and Blair, and the other great men whose names shed luster on the military achievements of the historic period of 1861–'65, likewise deserve to be enshrined in the hearts of all who love liberty, and who rejoice over the culmination of that great conflict of arms. Let it not be said that when Congress had an opportunity to express its gratitude for the valor and sacrifice of one of these great men that the nation's heart was petrified and the nation's conscience blunted and unresponsive.

Mr. Speaker, I can not but feel that this bill should pass without a dissenting vote, but if that can not be, at least let it be passed by a majority so large as to emphasize to the world the gratitude of the nation's Congress for the sublime services of one of the grandest heroes and purest statesmen of the American Republic. [Applause.]

Mr. MORRILL. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER].

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker, it is an honor to be able to aid by word and vote the passage of bills granting pensions to Mrs. Mary S. Logan and Mrs. Apolline A. Blair, the widows of two illustrious soldiers and distinguished statesmen—John Alexander Logan and Francis Preston Blair—representatives of the best type of American manhood. Each possessed the highest courage, physical and moral. Their methods were plain, direct, and aggressive. Each the fearless, uncompromising champion of the rights of the people, as "God gave him to see the right." They were the apostles of liberty and the implacable enemies of oppression. Their faith in the masses was sublime. They possessed the genius of leadership; they touched elbows with the people. They were recognized and followed by the people because they were never in masquerade. Upon Logan and Blair the immortal Lincoln, in the dark days of the war of the rebellion, leaned more than upon any others to learn the temper of the people. They were intense partisans—Logan, before the war, in Illinois, a Democrat; Blair, in Missouri, a Free-soiler. Each of strong convictions and prejudices, each fierce and combative in defense of that which his judgment approved.

In the heated and bitter political contests immediately preceding the war they were open and manly, never attacking the enemy from ambush or retreating behind breastworks to avoid assault. They fought no sham battles. In victory they were not arrogant, in defeat they were not suppliant. Those whose good fortune it was to know them best trusted them most. To be brought into personal contact and intimate relation with these great Americans was to heighten the respect and admiration for them. Each served with marked ability in the House and Senate; wise in council, strong in debate, they impressed themselves upon the legislation of the country. Physically, mentally, and morally they were peculiarly adapted to the high duties of legislators. Legislation and political discussions had for each a fascination greater than the practice of their profession, the law. But when the Union of the States, established by the fathers, was endangered, when the flag of the country was insulted, neither the ties of party, the friendships of a life, nor the fascinations of position caused them to hesitate. Duty called them to the tented field; they went. How well each discharged his duty, as regimental, brigade, division, and corps commander, history has recorded in letters of gold. The names of Logan and Blair are written high upon the roll of honor of the great volunteer soldiers of the war of the rebellion. Time, sir, will not permit me to trace further the parallel between these two patriots; the few minutes allotted will be given to the bill granting a pension to Mrs. Blair, the widow of the late General Frank P. Blair, jr., of the State of Missouri, without, I trust, saying a word that shall endanger one jot or tittle the passage of the bill granting a pension to the widow of that ideal volunteer soldier, General John A. Logan.

Frank Blair, a Kentuckian by birth, a Missourian by choice, and a Unionist from principle, was the central figure around whom Union men of his adopted State rallied in the dark days of 1861, when her governor and those in authority were plotting treason. At a time "that tried men's souls" his faith, his courage, his devotion to the Union inspired others to deeds of valor and heroism. His practical prescience enabled him, long before the firing upon Fort Sumter, to divine the purposes of Claib Jackson and his coconspirators to take Missouri out of the Union and into the vortex of secession. Blair realized the necessity of being ready to strike the first blow when the time was ripe, and thus save Missouri to the Union. Early in February, 1861, he organized a regiment, 1,000 strong, and, there being no money in the national Treasury, armed and uniformed them with his credit. It was thoroughly drilled and ready for action, yet its existence for weeks remained a secret to all save its members. The fate of Missouri trembled in the balance. Claib Jackson, her governor, a "wily, able, and energetic" man, was confident. He was in secret correspondence and in full sympathy with the leaders of the rebellion, having at his back a majority of those who controlled the wealth and property of the State. Amid all this, Blair stood calm, firm, and fearless. He was the "Horatius at the bridge." "In the brave days of old" he was the heart and soul of the Union men of St. Louis. He was the Mordecai sitting at the gate, whose influence the executive feared. "I am for peace, and so is everybody, except Lincoln and Frank Blair," wrote Governor Jackson in April, 1861.

Little did Jackson then think that he had linked the name of his bitterest political enemy—Frank Blair—with the greatest name in history—Abraham Lincoln. [Applause.] Jackson now knew that Blair was on guard, and that he and his followers must be crushed before Missouri could be taken out of the Union. He knew that the loyal Germans and Irish of St. Louis would follow wherever Blair led. He knew that Blair would inspire his followers with his courage and patriotism. Therefore, under the guise of peace, he was engaged in arming the State, thus hoping to throw Blair (liberty's sentinel in Missouri) off his guard. "I want a little time to arm the State," he wrote a friend; " * * * nothing should be said about the time or the manner in which Missouri should go out." Then added: "That she ought to go out and will go at the proper time, I have no doubt."

One week before, this same governor, speaking, as he claimed, the sentiments of the State, denounced as "illegal, unconstitutional, and revolutionary" the President's call on Missouri for four regiments to aid in the struggle for the life of the nation. He declared the purpose to send troops against the seceded States as "inhuman and diabolical." Then boastingly asserted "not one man will the State of Missouri furnish to carry on such an unholy crusade." These were perilous times for Missouri, when her executive could use such language in the face of danger that threatened to disrupt the Union and trample the national flag—the emblem of liberty—in the dust.

Blair was equal to the emergency. Four days after the governor had written this treasonable letter Frank Blair had organized, armed, uniformed, and mustered into the United States service four regiments of Missouri's loyal sons. In the mean time the governor was not idle. In order to obtain arms and munitions of war with which to force the State out of the Union he had seized and sacked the United States arsenal at Liberty, in the western part of the State, and was concentrating his forces at Camp Jackson for the purpose of capturing the arsenal at St. Louis. His movements were watched by Blair and that gallant soldier, Nathaniel Lyon. Illustrious names, Blair and Lyon, that are inseparably linked together! Names that will be gratefully remembered so long as the story of the struggle for the Union shall be told. The time had come to strike. Blair planned; Lyon, with unerring judgment, aided in the execution. Camp Jackson was captured. Forty days thereafter Claib Jackson and his followers were fugitives. Missouri was saved to the Union. Had Blair done nothing more he would be entitled to the nation's gratitude. His name would have been inscribed high on the roll of fame in loving letters. History would have made haste to record him as a wise statesman and unselfish patriot. The service he rendered the Union cause in keeping Missouri out of the ranks of secession can not be overestimated. That he saved the State to the Union none will question. The service he thus rendered his country has been equaled by but few. When the history of Missouri shall have been written, giving to each of her illustrious sons his due meed of praise for services rendered his State and nation, the name of Frank P. Blair will lead all the rest.

But he did not stop. He was destined to win greater honors as a soldier. He was in the forefront of the battle from Camp Jackson to Vicksburg, from Vicksburg to Missionary Ridge, from Missionary Ridge to Atlanta, from Atlanta to the sea. Peace restored, broken in health, he returned to his State, soon to appear as the champion in the political contests for the enfranchisement of those late in rebellion. He was as earnest to secure for them a full restoration to all political rights as he had been to defeat them on the field of battle. In this contest, as in all others, he was fearless, bold, and uncompromising. While many of his former comrades in arms and political associates doubted the wisdom of his course, none questioned the sincerity of his purpose. He by reason of that struggle became the candidate of the Democratic party for Vice-President in 1868. In 1875, at the age of fifty-four, he died, leaving to his widow and children no other legacy save a name made honorable by duty well performed.

When the nation's Treasury was bankrupt he spent his fortune in arming and uniforming soldiers to stand between the nation and those who would destroy it. He could truthfully say:

I do love my country's good with a respect more tender, more holy, and profound than mine own life.

The nation owes him a debt "which, with a bounteous hand, was kindly lent." He served his country in many positions of honor and trust, and died leaving a mere pittance to his widow. As Frank Blair was generous and patriotic in the days of the nation's extremity, let a grateful people provide for his widow in the day of the nation's prosperity. Let not the sun go down until this bill shall become a law. Let the lightning on eager wings convey the news to the widow's home. Then shall there come to her bleeding heart, out of the past, a voice of wondrous sweetness, saying:

Fear not; a grateful people will care for him who shall have borne the battle, and for his widow and orphans.

May the nation faithfully keep its promise to the least of its brave defenders. [Applause.]

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MATSON. How much time is there remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. There are forty-five minutes remaining.

Mr. MATSON. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY].

Mr. TARSNEY Mr. Speaker, I am aware that it is not a popular thing to do to stand upon this floor and oppose a pension bill brought in by a committee of the House, but I desire to state the reasons why I am opposing this bill. It has been said in and out of this Hall that the party of which I have the honor to be a humble member is opposed to the granting of pensions of all kinds. I desire to meet any such charge as that which has been or which may be made, and to define my position on this question and that of my Democratic colleagues, who, with me, oppose the passage of these bills. I propose, sir, before I get through, to demonstrate to this House and to the country that we, as Democrats, have quite as much interest in the general welfare of the Union soldiers of the late war as have our friends on the other side of the House. I likewise propose to demonstrate that under this Democratic Administration the ex-Union soldiers have been dealt with as fairly and liberally, ay, more fairly and liberally, than under any of the administrations that we have had in this Republic since the close of the war.

When it is said that we for partisan reasons, or for party purposes, oppose the granting of pensions, I call the attention of the House to the fact that we had in the war relatives, we had friends, we had neighbors belonging to our party as well as to the other. Let me give you some statistical information which will justify the position I take today. I hold in my hand a tabular statement of the votes of all parties in the various States of the Union at the election immediately preceding the breaking out of the rebellion. There were cast at that election 1,866,352 Republican votes; yet during the period between that time and 1864 there were furnished to the Federal Army 2,859,132 troops—nearly a million more soldiers in the Federal Army than there were Republican voters of all ages in the entire country when the war broke out.

I find by reference to these tables of statistics that four years later, in 1864, the Republican vote had increased from 1,866,352 to 2,216,067, making a total increase of 349,715, while there was a corresponding decrease in the opposition vote.

I have here the figures by States—a statement carefully prepared from official records. The State of Illinois, with 172,161 Republican votes, furnished 259,147 soldiers to the Union Army—an excess of 86,986 over the Republican vote. The State of Indiana, with 139,033 Republican votes, furnished 197,147 Union soldiers—an excess of 58,114 over the Republican vote. Iowa, with 70,409 Republican votes, furnished to the Union Army 76,309 soldiers—an excess of 5,900 over the Republican vote. Maine, with her 62,811 Republican votes, furnished 72,114 soldiers—an excess of 9,303. The State of Kentucky, which some people say was a rebel State (it was somewhat torn up), casting only 1,364 Republican votes, furnished to the Federal Army for the preservation of the Union 79,025 troops. Massachusetts furnished an excess of 45,515; Michigan, 892; Minnesota, 2,983. Missouri, with a Republican vote of 17,028, furnished 109,111 Union soldiers, or 92,083 more troops than there were Republican votes. In New Jersey the excess was 22,681; New York, 104,401; Ohio, 88,049; Pennsylvania, 98,079; Rhode Island, 11,455; Tennessee, which did not cast a Republican vote, furnished 31,092 troops to the Federal Army. In Wisconsin the excess of troops furnished over the Republican vote was 10,314. Virginia, consisting then of the entire territory of the present States of Virginia and West Virginia, gave 1,929 Republican votes; yet West Virginia alone furnished to the Federal Army 32,068 soldiers.

In view of these figures, I ask this House whether we Democrats have not quite as much interest in the welfare of the surviving soldiers as you Republicans have? Have we not as much interest in the welfare of our neighbors and our friends as you gentlemen on the other side have in yours?

I say, therefore, it can not be charged upon us that we are urging any factional or partisan opposition to pension measures. We are actuated by no prejudice against pensions, for I will demonstrate to you that we have been quite as liberal in our legislation in this direction as you have. I have here a tabular statement of the number of pension cases of all classes, the number now on file in the Pension Department and the amount of money appropriated year by year, from 1860 to the close of the last fiscal year. Look at these figures, commencing in 1881 with disbursements of, in round numbers, $50,000,000; then 1882, $54,000,000; 1883, $60,000,000; then 1884, $57,000,000; 1885, $65,000,000; then 1886, $64,000,000; and last year in this House we appropriated, and there was disbursed by the Pension Department nearly $75,000,000 (I do not stop to read the odd figures). Thus, year after year Democratic Congresses are making liberal and largely increasing appropriations for the payment of pensions. Year after year we have voted money in excess of the appropriations of preceding years, and we stand here to-day ready to vote pensions to any deserving soldier who lost his health or was wounded in the armies of the United States in the preservation of this Union.

Mr. LANHAM. The gentleman will allow me to suggest that the pension appropriation bill reported this session, appropriates for the payment of pensions $80,275,500.

Mr. TARSNEY. I thank the gentleman for the suggestion, which shows an increase of more than $5,000,000 in the appropriation bill of this year over the appropriations of the last year. It does not look, then, as though we who are Democrats are opposed to the granting of pensions. Why, sir, the number of pension claims allowed by the Commissioner of Pensions during this Administration exceeds by far, as I will show by and by, the number granted by any of his predecessors. More than that, we passed during the Forty-ninth Congress more private pension bills which became laws than you, my Republican friends, ever passed during any Republican Congress.

Mr. LAIRD. How many were vetoed?

Mr. TARSNEY. I am glad the gentleman has asked that question. More were vetoed than any of your Presidents ever vetoed; and I thank God that such was the fact; for though during the term of the present Executive more pension bills have become laws by the signature of the President of the United States than in any preceding administration, it has been demonstrated to the American people that no mistake was made when Grover Cleveland was called to the Executive chair [applause on the Democratic side]; for it has been demonstrated that we have at our helm in the executive department a man so careful, so prudent, so critical, that he examines all these bills for himself, approving those which are proper and just, and disapproving those which are not.

Why do I oppose these bills? For one reason—I can not find a parallel case to it in American history, although my friend from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] claims there is such a parallel. This is not a case like that of the widow of General Hancock; remember that Winfield Scott Hancock died a soldier. General Hancock remained in the service of the United States Army until the day of his death. John A. Logan and Frank P. Blair did not. God forbid any word should escape my lips that could be construed as at all derogatory of the eminent services, the ability, or the patriotism of these great soldiers and statesmen. I have as profound a regard for them as any gentleman who supports this bill; but, sir, when I find a volunteer officer leaving the service of the United States and assuming the rôle of an American statesman, and not that of an American soldier, pursuing that line and not the military line of the Government, then I say it is about time to call a halt when we are asked to pay out the people's money to pension the widow of a United States Senator and not of a general of the Army.

I am unalterably opposed to the establishment of a civil pension-list. Although we owe to these men the gratitude of our 60,000,000 of people, yet we likewise owe a debt of gratitude to the men whom John A. Logan and Frank P. Blair and other gentlemen commanded.

Take the 2,800,000 men that were in the ranks of the Army of the United States. They, too, were true American heroes; they, at the mere command of the Army officer, faced death and the rain of hell itself in order to preserve this Union. And yet, while we find many of our generals issuing their orders from afar, these men, in the smoke of battle, went down to death. When these faithful men are forgotten and a civil pension system is proposed to be established here, I for one, as a Democrat and a Northern man, declare it is time to call a halt.

Mr. Speaker, I saw in the corridors of this House the other day a poor, decrepit man from my State, with a gaping wound in his breast which had broken out afresh—a gunshot wound received by him at the battle of Gettysburgh. He was here in this city to obtain a special examination from the Pension Office. He was here under the dome of this Capitol begging for a morsel of bread. When I saw that man and talked with him I swore never until the 500,000 men whose claims are pending in the Pension Department, who were equally deserving with the officers—until their claims are adjusted, until their cases are disposed of, I would never vote for the consideration of any bill giving the widow of a civilian a pension.

Mr. FUNSTON. You have the department now, why do you not give pensions to them?

Mr. TARSNEY. You had the department for twenty years, during all of which time these men were suffering. Why did you not give them pensions?

Mr. Speaker, one word more and I am done. I wish to say, young as I appear to be, I remember well when the tocsin of war was sounded. I remember when the first proclamation of the martyred Lincoln was issued. I remember when our friends, our neighbors, aye, our own brothers responded to that call, when they went shoulder to shoulder to the mustering office and subscribed their names, Democrats and Republicans alike. But they did not go as Democrats, they did not go as Republicans; but Democrat and Republican alike sank his partisanship beneath the higher duty of citizenship. Shoulder to shoulder they went to the front as citizens and not as partisans.

It so happens that I belong to a family of Michigan Democrats which furnished five brothers to the Federal service during the war. One of them, or his mortal remains, now lies somewhere over yonder. The entry upon the books of the War Department reads, "Killed in the Wilderness." Another was for seventeen months and a half within the confines of a Confederate prison. Two others bear scars received in an honorable but mistaken conflict.

Now, the men who were commanded were not great generals, but they had true hearts and earnest patriotism. They went to death in the service of the United States because their officers commanded them. I appeal to the House and to the country, let us take care of the rank and file. Let us take care of the poor privates and non-commissioned officers, who served for $11 and $13 a month, and received in value not more than $6. Let us take care of these men. Let us take care of their children, and let us postpone these other measures until we have disposed of more meritorious measures for the benefit of the rank and file.

Now, where will this stop? What is to be the end of it? To-day it is a pension for Mrs. Blair and Mrs. Logan. To-morrow it may be for somebody else who is entitled, according to the precedent here established, to the same bounty on the part of the Government. There is not only one, but there are thousands who have an equal right to come here with as just claims to be provided for from the Treasury. The following tables will more fully elaborate my remarks so hastily made:

In the total number of applications filed in 1887 are included 14,735 survivors and 3,983 widows of the war with Mexico. In the total number of claims allowed in 1887 are included 7,552 survivors and 933 widows of the war with Mexico. (See act of Congress approved January 29, 1887.)

In the number of pensioners on the roll under the heads of "Invalids" and "Widows, etc.," are included survivors and widows of the war of 1812 respectively, commencing with the year 1871. Survivors and widows of the war with Mexico are included in the number of pensioners on the roll June 30, 1887.

Mr. MATSON. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE].

[Mr. TAULBEE withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. MATSON. I yield the floor now to the gentlemen who support the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. In the five minutes that I have I wish only to say that I shall vote for both of these bills, not only on the ground of the distinguished services of the deceased, both of whom left widows surviving them, but upon the broader ground of a sound public policy. In pursuance of this public policy from time to time the Congress of the United States, with the approval of the people, has granted pensions or aid to the widows of distinguished men who served their country during war, and in some instances to distinguished men who held positions of great responsibility and performed high services to the country even in civil life.

The widows of ex-Presidents of the United States are, by the action of Congress, upon the pension-rolls of the Government for $5,000 a year. And along in line with these two bills stand the acts for the widows of Thomas, of Hancock, and of Farragut. Ay, more, along in line with these two bills stands an act, and has stood for some time, granting a pension to the widow of the gallant General Shields of $100 a month. In addition to that, not two weeks ago this House, after full discussion under the lead of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], substantially all of us voting for it, gave to the widow of Shields substantially $10,000 more, equal to a thousand-dollar pension for ten years in addition to the twelve-hundred-dollar pension which she had before.

This country relies, and it is our boast that we do, not on the regular Army but upon the citizen soldiery, and while the names of Thomas, Hancock, and Farragut stand out as names which all Americans are proud of for their magnificent services, along with them and equal with them stand the names of Logan and Blair.

No man lived in the United States who with greater certainty, in addition to his services in the war, could turn his glance inward and listen to his own heart-beats and thereby tell what were the patriotic emotions of all the people of the United States than John A. Logan. [Appause.] This was the secret of his leadership. I take pride also in voting for these bills, as we thereby show not only to the youth now growing up but to those who are to follow after, that he who serves his country unselfishly and ably in the tented field at a vital period will not only live in the hearts of his countrymen, but that the one who is nearest to him of all the world will be cared for by a grateful country when his voice is stilled in death.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MORRILL. I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARDY].

Mr. CLARDY. I will vote, and cheerfully vote, for the bill granting a pension to Mrs. Logan, as well as for the bill increasing the pension of Mrs. Blair, both of which, I understand, are now before us for consideration.

We were told by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY] that there was no precedent for the proposed legislation. Unfortunately for our country, its history, replete with illustrious names, contains few that have added such luster to its pages as the names of John A. Logan and Francis P. Blair, jr. There is no precedent! Let us set a precedent that may be invoked in the years that are to come by other Congresses in behalf of the widows of other Logans and other Blairs, if unhappily our country should again become involved in war.

Logan and Blair did more for their country than their country can ever possibly do for their widows.

I have said that I would vote for both of the pending bills. This I am sure I should do uninfluenced by any consideration other than the military service of Logan and Blair.

But I may be pardoned if I briefly refer to the service rendered Missouri by General Blair after the war. And this I do in no partisan spirit, but solely that the House may understand why I manifest so much interest in the bill which proposes to do meager justice to his widow.

When General Blair returned to his home from the Army he found the people of Missouri under the weight of a horrible nightmare; some of his former friends were not allowed to practice law, others not permitted to teach school for a living, others again prohibited from ministering at God's holy altar, thousands and thousands of the men who had contributed to his political and professional success denied the right to vote and rendered incapable of becoming the depositaries of any public trust.

Mr. Speaker, I read but the other day a legend of Alaric, "the Scourge of God," which said that when that mighty chieftain was approaching his death he asked that the waters of Busento might be turned from their channel, his body deposited therein, and the waves rolled back upon it, that his body, and, as he foolishly thought, the remembrance of him, might be forever hidden from the people to come. I have sometimes thought that the inspirers of Missouri's constitution, which has its only rival in "the law of the suspected" of the French Revolution, might pray at a similar moment that some mighty stream of oblivion would sweep over them and bury their names from the execrations of after ages.

Mr. Speaker, amid this confusion, with tyranny in all its bitterness and all its infamy on every hand, the people of Missouri looked to General Blair as the only man who could bring order out of chaos and restore to them their lost rights. How cheerfully he responded to their call and how completely he wrought their restoration the history of that proud Western Commonwealth will attest. Frank Blair did for Missouri what John A. Logan would have done for Illinois if upon his return to that State he had found her people bound hand and foot. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, if I have any time remaining I yield it to my friend and colleague [Mr. DOCKERY].

Mr. MORRILL. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON].

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY] thought that by his array of figures he could deteriorate this discussion into that of partisans, so far as I am concerned he will be disappointed.

These walls have too recently rung with eulogies of Logan. We stand too near an open grave. We should stand above the petty partisanship of the hour, and I shall not waste one second of my time in replying to the long array of figures which he adduces to convince the public that it was the Democratic party that furnished the main body of the Union Army. We disagree with him. It cuts no figure in this discussion, and I, for one, feel that the sacred precincts of this question should not be invaded by a partisan discussion as to what party did or did not do the most or the least for the preservation of the Union.

The gentleman says that General Hancock's case was different, because he died a soldier and never accepted a civil office. I call the gentleman's attention respectfully to the fact that that was not General Hancock's fault nor the fault of his party. [Laughter.] One of the best and bravest of men was General Hancock. He sought the civil office of Chief Executive of the nation, was supported by that party, and was honorably defeated. It neither adds to nor detracts from his merit as a soldier or as an American citizen. All honor to Hancock and to Logan. They were good and brave soldiers, and the fact that either of them had an honorable ambition to fill a civil office in the gift of the people can not detract from his merits in the minds of the American people. If the gentleman draws any consolation from the fact that General Logan retired from the Army when peace was restored to the country, he is welcome to it.

There was no need of soldiers after Appomattox. Can it be that gentlemen here would throw discredit upon Logan because he threw off the trappings of war, and made no effort to continue in the Army after the safety of the Union was assured? General Hancock was a professional soldier, made so at the expense of the Government. His duty he promptly and honorably performed. Logan left his seat here in the House and served as a private in the Second Michigan Volunteers at the battle of Bull Run. The southern part of our glorious Illinois was torn with dissension when Logan went down into Egypt, and with personal bravery and by the force of his genius saved the Union sentiment there.

Read his record as a soldier. Here it is:

Second lieutenant, Company H, First Illinois Volunteers, Mexican war.

Grand review, Washington, D. C., May 24.
Resigned and honorably mustered out, August 17, 1865.
First suffered from rheumatism after exposure during the siege of Fort Donelson, and has periodically suffered from it ever since.

I call your attention to the further fact that he was offered his seat here while yet in the Army. He declined, saying "I will never sheathe my sword until the last armed enemy of my country has surrendered."

Talk about precedent! It can never be a precedent. There never was but one Logan. There can never be another. Illinois has given you other sons of whom we are proud. She gave you a Lincoln and a Grant, but no one ever stood closer to the great heart of the volunteer soldier than did John A. Logan.

But the gentleman says that until justice is done to all the applicants for pensions he will refuse justice in this case; until the day of the millennium shall come, when justice shall be free to all, he will refuse to every one that shall apply.

I want to make one additional suggestion. This bill is for the relief of Mary Logan. She is entitled to it on her own account. So far as General Logan is concerned, after you had consigned him to his last resting-place, you had done all that you could do for him. His strong hands, ever ready to strike for the right, are clasped over his still but honest heart. His lips, ever ready to speak or command for the Union, are closed in the eternal silence of death.

Mrs. Logan is an ideal American woman. It was at Belmont where her husband was first wounded; she was at Donelson, where he was dangerously wounded; she was at Shiloh, not alone with her husband, but in the hospitals there. Days and nights and weeks and months, without compensation, without one dollar of the Government money crossing her womanly hand, she stood beside the bed of the weak, the sick, the wounded, and the suffering. This bill is for Mary Logan, the wife of General Logan. The noble helpmate of a gallant husband, her whole life has been spent by her husband's side in loyal service to the defenders of her country; and that consideration, which has not heretofore been mentioned, should enter into the minds of gentlemen upon this floor in deciding which way they will vote upon the bill now pending. [Applause.]

Mr. MORRILL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, this House has on a former occasion pronounced appropriate eulogies on the life, character, and public services of General Logan. In the Senate also there have been fitting tributes paid to his memory. We are here to-day for the purpose of doing the last act of justice to his memory by furnishing from the munificent Treasury of the Government a pension for the support of his widow. Gentlemen have been pleased to count the cost to the Treasury of the United States that such contributions will incur. To me the services of such men as Logan and Blair can not be sufficiently recognized by appropriations from the Treasury. The people owe to these dead soldiers a debt of gratitude that can never be discharged. The pending bills, in a feeble way, offer the nation's tribute to the memory of these departed heroes.

We have already voted a pension of $2,000 a year to the widow of General Hancock. We have already provided by general law that the widow of a President of the United States shall receive a pension of $5,000 a year. We have granted many pensions by special acts and by general laws. We have recognized more liberally the brave defenders of this country than was ever done by any other government in the previous history of the world. Are we to call a halt to-day when a proposition is before us to do justice to the widows of two of the greatest volunteer generals of the late war? I hope not. In passing these bills we will honor ourselves and at the same time do justice to the widows of these distinguished soldiers.

These pensions should be granted on account of military services. I speak more particularly in reference to the services of General Logan. He enlisted as a private soldier in the Mexican war, was chosen a lieutenant, assigned to duty as a staff officer, and was conspicuous for his bravery and military skill in this early period of his career. He resigned a seat in this House in 1861 and entered the Union Army as colonel of an Illinois regiment, and rapidly rose by successive promotions for gallant and meritorious conduct to the position of major-general. He participated in many of the hardest-fought battles of the war. He was at Fort Henry, at Donelson, at Belmont, at Port Gibson, at Champion Hills, at Vicksburg, at Kenesaw Mountain, and marched with General Sherman to the sea. In every campaign, in every engagement, he was distinguished for courage, for military skill, and fearless leadership.

During his eventful career as a legislator and commander of armies there were doubtless many opportunities presented to him for acquiring wealth. But he gave little heed to such matters. His whole time, talents, and energies were given to the public service. He died poor and in debt. The liberal contributions of his friends to Mrs. Logan after his death were principally absorbed in paying his indebtedness and in lifting the mortgage upon his residence in this city. But the contributions of his devoted friends ought not to be considered in discharging the debt which the country owes him, nor in discharging the obligations the nation is under to make suitable provisions for the support of his widow.

I hope, therefore, that both these bills will pass without opposition, that we may thus do whatever in our power lies to furnish a competency to those whose losses can never be measured by dollars and cents. I believe that when we shall have performed this act of justice we will have done that which is right in the sight of man and which will receive the approval of our constituents. If time permitted I might indulge in encomium upon the distinguished services which these gallant officers rendered to their country, but the Speaker's gavel admonishes me that my time has expired.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MORRILL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON].

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, there can not be, I think, in the mind of any member of this House who has read the testimony in this case a shadow of a doubt but that Mrs. Logan is fairly entitled, under the law as it now stands, to a pension. That General Logan died from a disease which was contracted in the service of his country I believe to be established beyond controversy. The only question, therefore, it seems to me, is as to the rate of pension which should be allowed his widow.

I would ask gentlemen who oppose these bills why the widow of a major-general should receive a larger pension than the widow of a brigadier-general? Why should the widow of a brigadier-general be allowed a greater pension than the widow of a colonel? Or the widow of a colonel a higher pension than the widow of a captain?

Mr. MATSON. Let me correct the gentleman. The general law does not allow any more pension to the widow of a major-general than to the widow of a brigadier-general, nor any more pension to the widow of a brigadier-general than to the widow of a colonel. The widows or lieutenant-colonels and of all officers above that grade receive, under the general law, the same pension.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. But the law does allow to the widows of officers a larger pension than it does to the widows of private soldiers, and that is the only point I desired to make by my question. We allow the same pension to the widow which the husband would have been entitled to under the law if he died by reason of any wound, injury, or disease which originated in the service, and that gives widows of some officers $30 per month, of others less, and of privates only $12 per month. Then why this distinction if it is not in the service rendered?

It has been said here that the bills granting pensions to the widows of General Thomas and General Hancock are not a precedent for these bills; and why, Mr. Speaker? Because it is said they were in the military service at the time of their death. This is true; but is it not equally true that the pension of $2,000 was given to these widows because of the distinguished services of their husbands in the late war as officers and soldiers?

General Thomas and General Hancock were great officers and rendered invaluable services in the war of the rebellion for the preservation of the Republic, and a grateful people, in recognition of their services, after they had passed away, gave pensions of $2,000 each to their widows, and not because they were officers of the regular Army at the time of their death, after the war was over.

Mr. Speaker, are we to recognize in this country of ours the distinguished services of our volunteer soldiers? Gentlemen talk about the amount of our pension appropriations. That does not alarm me. We largely rely upon our volunteer officers and soldiers to defend the country in time of war, and are not subjected to the expense of maintaining a large standing army in time of peace. We can therefore afford to be liberal in paying pensions to those who in the hour of peril and danger served the country. In doing so we encourage patriotism, we encourage the youth of our land and hold out to them an inducement to distinguish themselves in the service of their country. Why, Mr. Speaker, this country has done nothing, comparatively, in its past history to recognize distinguished services.

Wellington, we are told, was made a marquis for his services in the Peninsula, and the British Parliament gave him a million of dollars. He was successively made a field marshal and duke and was given a pension of $50,000 a year. His share of the Waterloo prize-money was $300,000, and the British Government presented him with an estate costing over a million and a quarter of dollars. England has recognized the services of her distinguished soldiers, and so have other nations, but we have done little, comparatively little or nothing, to recognize ours.

John A. Logan was the great volunteer soldier of the late war. From the very hour the war began until its conclusion he was in the field and at the front, periling his life on many a battle-field, and now that he is dead, having died from disease which he contracted in his long and most illustrious service, it is fit and proper that we should honor his name and service by giving to his widow the pension provided in this bill. In doing so we give to her a pension equal to that which has been accorded to the widows of other officers who attained no higher rank and rendered no greater nor more illustrious service in the late war for the Union than did John A. Logan.

In passing this bill, Mr. Speaker, we shall not only honor the memory of John A. Logan, but will honor ourselves, and show to the world that republics are not ungrateful.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MACDONALD. I regret exceedingly that on account of the bad cold I am now laboring under I can not speak as I would wish; but I can not allow the occasion to pass without saying a few words in behalf of these two bills.

I will not attempt any lengthy eulogy of General Logan or General Blair. Their eulogies are written upon every page of the history of the late war. General Logan has been well named the "grand representative of the volunteer soldiers of the war," and he has been regarded by the veterans of that war as their personal representative, as well as champion. Were I to attempt to describe him, as he led his troops upon many a bloody field, insensible of any such feeling as fear, I would be but describing that which is familiar to all. Politically we did not admire him, but it is as the patriot-hero that we only think of him now; and I feel confident that many of the brave men sitting around me, who by their brave and stubborn defense of what they believed to be right made it possible for General Logan to reveal to the world the brave soldier that he was, will join with us in showing our appreciation of his services in behalf of our common country by voting with us for these bills.

The claims of General Francis P. Blair to grateful remembrance by his countrymen have been so ably and eloquently set forth by the honorable gentlemen from Missouri, that it were folly for me to attempt to add to what they have said.

But there is a view of this case presented to us which is more practical, or, some might say, more worldly, and to that I will address myself. It is urged—in fact this is the principal criticism—that the amount is too great; and the distinction is made in favor of the widows of Generals Thomas and Hancock that their husbands died in the service, while Generals Logan and Blair had returned to civil life before their deaths. It is a well-known fact that Generals Logan and Blair left but little property after them, and while this may be a large sum compared to what many receive, I am much mistaken in my estimate of our Union veterans if they do not unanimously indorse the passage of these bills. National gratitude has always been given expression in this substantial manner; and we all know from experience that this pension is not more than enough to support these widows of distinguished officers whom the country has always been ready to applaud and cheer.

To the argument—if such it may be called—that Generals Logan and Blair died out of the military service, I have but to answer that all veterans to whom pensions have recently been granted were out of the service, and hundreds of the widows of veterans who died out of the service have been granted pensions, and hundreds more will. I am fully committed to this principle and policy of pensioning widows without their furnishing proof of the cause of the death of their husband—a thing impossible to a majority of them, however meritorious may be the claim. I have introduced here a bill, which is now before the Committee on Invalid Pensions, which has for its purpose, in part, the allowance of pensions to widows without requiring them to furnish this proof. This being the case, there is no danger of my stultifying myself by opposing a measure of this kind. I believe this would be a just and humane change in the law of evidence in pension cases, and hope to see it made. [Applause.]

I do not agree with gentlemen who express fears as to this being made a precedent that will trouble us in the future or endanger the financial stability of the Government. There were many generals who distinguished themselves in the late war, and each case should be decided upon its own merits when brought up. While there were but few Logans, there were some; and so long as I occupy a seat on this floor an appeal in their behalf while living, or of soldiers of lower rank, or in behalf of their widows, will never be made to me in vain. [Applause.]

Mr. MORRILL. I will yield for ten minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD].

Mr. LAIRD. Mr. Speaker, the pensions that have been bestowed upon the survivors of volunteer officers and soldiers in the class of cases presented by this bill have, I take it, been so bestowed because it was esteemed becoming for the nation to protect those left helpless by the death of men who had rendered it distinguished services during war, and which services it thereby recognized.

The only objection, sir, which in my judgment can legitimately be taken to this class of legislation rests in the fact that the precedent here made may hereafter be invoked in cases of less merit. This is an appeal to the facts, and history makes the answer.

I could speak for both the names mentioned in the bill, but will confine myself to one.

Mr. Speaker, John A. Logan was unprecedented, and a precedent based upon his services can be filled by no man, dead or alive, whose merits are less than historic, if not immortal.

Logan was a prodigy of valor, audacity, and manhood. He was the lion of the North, the defender of her patriotic faith; he was one of the most masterful spirits with events and men that it has been the fate of any man in our time to see upon the fields of battle. Rude, strong, and inspiring, his soldiers clung to him as the particles of steel to the magnet. [Applause.]

He was the Union Jackson of the western fields, blazing on the front of battle like incarnate war, breaking resistance with a blow, and melting men to his heroic uses as burning metal is cast in a mold, all by the fire of his genius—and that genius was the love of country, freedom, and his fellow-men. Thus inspired he was invincible, and his stern and lofty convictions made slaughter holy! [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, in the heroic days some doubted and debated from the start, casting lots with their conscience, and listening more for the call to office than to the call to duty. This man of the people, strong, steadfast, and headlong, took his place in the ranks with a musket, and fought, not for applause, but for his country and her mighty cause.

This man was sagacious, and was not deceived when the milk-and-water patriots cried for peace and song, addressing themselves to the imperiled State: "Sleep on, great land, in freedom, trusting your future safety to that marvelous patronage of circumstances which has borne you bravely through past danger;" and when thus they might have lulled us to our destruction and from our ruins sent freedom forth homeless upon the world, he saw the snare, knew the danger, and, with others, roused the nation from that false confidence toward which it seemed drifting, and which, more ruthless than war brooding over the land, might have exacted vengeance in a conquered people.

And so, Mr. Speaker, briefly reviewing this man's history, I for one would as soon have thought of deserting him upon the field of battle as now I would think of deserting his cause here upon the floor of this House.

Sir, there has sometimes been manifest in the House this spirit: that is, to refuse deserved rewards to one because all who deserve can not share therein; to refuse deserved rewards to the officer or his survivors because all other officers and men could not participate in the relief—a cheap device, Mr. Speaker, behind which to escape the present responsibility and claim community with either side; a stale pretense, by which we surrender our vast suffrage into the hands of calculators, economists, and demagogues.

The case of the dead general is here; let us act upon it exactly as men of courage and conscience will act upon the case of his comrades when they come here singly or en masse.

But, it is answered, he was an officer. Ay, so he was; and he rose from the ranks, and he honored his office; and let this Congress do their duty by him and his fearlessly, as he did his duty by his country, and by that sign they who look, seeking something to condemn, will know that when they come they will also receive their dues according to the great law of merit.

And, Mr. Speaker, may I say, with due respect to gentlemen who, when they act upon this measure, are looking over their shoulders for votes, listening for the voice of approval of their opposition—may I say that I believe that they will find a better guidance for this hour's work in the voices that speak to us from the other side of silence than they will in the selfish clamor of the world? [Applause on the Republican side.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced the passage of the bill (H. R. 3470) to authorize the construction of bridges over the rivers St. Mary's, Satella, Little Satella, and Crooked, in the States of Georgia and Florida, with an amendment, in which concurrence was requested.

PENSIONS TO MRS. GENERALS LOGAN AND BLAIR.

Mr. MATSON. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE].

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Speaker, I have been listening to this discussion with agreat deal of interest, with the view of trying to ascertain if possible upon what special ground this proposed legislation is based. I have been endeavoring to find some satisfactory reason why the distinction which is proposed to be made in the passage of these measures has been made; and while I have listened attentively to all that has been said in this discussion, I have been unable to hear any satisfactory reason advanced, satisfactory to my mind at least, why such a distinction should be made as to the widows of those distinguished generals over the widows of other equally brave and deserving officers, who are upon the pension-list to-day.

In order to ascertain the status of this class of cases for myself, I addressed a letter to the Commissioner of Pensions, and in his reply I find that there are sixty-two widows of brigadier-generals now on the pension-roll, thirty-eight of them receiving a pension of $30 a month; twenty-three, $50 a month, and one drawing a pension at the rate of $100 a month. I find that there are twenty-seven widows of major-generals now on the pension-rolls, nine of whom receive $30 a month; seventeen, $50 a month, and one $166.66 a month.

I submit the letter as a part of my remarks and ask to have it incorporated with them.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF PENSIONS,
Washington, D. C., March 17, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your communication of the 12th instant, in which you ask to be advised of the number of widows of officers who attained the rank of major-general in the United States Army are now on the pension-rolls, and at what rate they are pensioned; and,

Second, the number of widows of officers who had attained the rank of brigadier-general in the United States Army who are now on the pension-rolls and at what rate they are pensioned; and in reply I have to state that the records of this bureau show that there have been sixty-two widows of brigadier-generals pensioned; thirty-eight of them at $30 per month, twenty-three at $50 per month, and one at $100 per month. There have also been pensioned twenty-seven widows of major-generals; nine of them at $30 per month, seventeen at $50 per month, and one at $166.66 per month.

It is impossible to give the exact number of those widows who are now on the pension-rolls without calling upon the several United States pension agents for the information. I have not done this, as your letter indicates that you desire the information at once, and I trust that what I have furnished in this letter will be satisfactory.

Very respectfully,

WM. E. MCLEAN,
Acting Commissioner.

Hon. B. A. ENLOE, House of Representatives.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if there is any valid reason why this distinction should be made between the widows of officers of the same rank and of equal merit, that reason should be stated by the advocates of these bills. If there is any reason other than distinguished political or civil service for preferring these widows over the widows of all other officers of the same rank I have been unable to discover it. Is it not a little singular, Mr. Speaker, that it has just now been discovered that the case of Mrs. Blair is so much more meritorious than it ever was before? General Blair died July 8, 1875. It is not pretended that the widow is in greater need now than she was thirteen years ago. It appears that Mrs. Blair's case was not strong enough to pass a bill on its merits granting a pension to her of $2,000 per annum at any time in the past. The bill for the benefit of Mrs. Logan, I believe, was not strong enough to stand alone on its merits in the Forty-ninth Congress.

Then there seems to be no reason to doubt the fact that the new merit in Mrs. Blair's case grows out of the necessity of Mrs. Logan's case, and that the two are combined in order that they may support each other.

I am unalterably opposed to this character of legislation, both as a matter of principle and as a matter of policy. It is in direct contravention of the very fundamental principles of our system of government, and is another step in the establishment of class distinctions, which, once firmly established, must inevitably destroy equality of rights and privileges among our people and undermine the only basis upon which a republican form of government can securely rest. These distinctions of class, without other than sentimental reasons, are not new in our legislation.

The best-paid people in this country, according to public judgment, for the service performed, are our public officials, yet so strong has this idea of distinctions, based upon official position, civil and military, become in legislation, that it may be truly said that the more money is paid to a man during his lifetime for public service, and the greater the opportunity given to him to make comfortable provision for his own, the greater disposition there is to heap benefits upon his family when he is dead. The growth of this idea of our official aristocracy has not been so rapid as it has been steady and sure.

We now have a retired-list for Army officers that costs the tax-payers $1,246,554.75 per annum.

The retired-list of the Navy costs the tax-payers $865,363 per annum.

The retired-list for our judges costs the tax-payers $40,675.47 per annum.

Congress, which is so willing to bestow the people's money on these favored classes, is not forgetful of its own.

It is a national calamity in one sense, if not in another, when a Member or a Senator dies during his term of service, though the calamity is enhanced if he dies during the session. If he dies before he takes his seat, one-half his salary for the term, or a little over—about $6,000, I believe—is given to his family. If he dies during his term, after taking his seat, he is buried at the expense of the tax-payers, at a cost which varies all the way from a few hundred dollars to several thousand dollars, and his salary for the remainder of his term is paid to his family, in addition to the salary paid to his successor.

And so it goes, Mr. Speaker; and this idea of an almost irresponsible use of public money for the benefit of the families of public officials does not stop here, but it extends to the deceased employés of the two Houses of Congress, whose families always receive an appropriation of a greater or a smaller sum according to the grade of the salary of the employé while living.

Class legislation has already made an aristocracy of wealth in this country that is growing richer and richer day by day out of the earnings of friendless and unprotected labor; and class legislation is year by year adding to an aristocracy of tax-consumers, who are helping to eat out the prosperity of those who earn the wealth of this land.

The evils which we are sowing in our Government by this sort of legislation will spring up in the future to curse the oppressed and the oppressor, and I for one will not see it done without lifting my voice against it.

The appeals for sympathy so eloquently uttered here are not strong enough nor loud enough to shut out the complaints and the cries of distress that come up from discontented labor in every part of this great country. When measures like these are brought before Congress my sympathies are aroused, not for the eminent and the rich and the distinguished; but, sir, they go out to the man and the woman in the crowded cities, in the quiet villages, in the fields, in the workshops, and in the mines, all over this country, who are toiling at barely living wages, while the money is wrung from their labor which is piling up in the Treasury that Congress may squander it in extravagant and reckless legislation of this character.

Legislation of the character proposed is all wrong, and the wrong in it is deep-seated, because it is subversive of the great principle of equality of rights before the law, and if I can read the signs of the times aright there will be a day of reckoning, a lightning-stroke of outraged public opinion at no distant day that will startle Congress worse than the bolt did that fell upon this Capitol a few days ago.

I shall vote against these bills, not in disparagement of the distinguished civil and military services of the eminent men whose widows are to be pensioned, but, sir, because I love justice and right, and the true principles of republican Government more than I love the memory of any man, however great he may have been in peace or in war.

Mr. MATSON. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri, my colleague on the committee [Mr. WALKER].

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, it is at all times a difficult task to oppose a great error when that error is backed by a large measure of popularity. It is doubly so when sympathy is linked with popularity, as is the case with these two bills. Nothing but the sincerest convictions of duty, nothing but the truest loyalty to those convictions, and nothing but supreme love for the genius of our institutions, which is against the establishment of any privileged class, could prompt any Missourian to cast his vote against one of these bills at least. Blair and Logan are household words in Missouri and Illinois; names that stand now, and will stand for all time, as synonyms of public and private purity, splendid bravery, unselfish patriotism, and unsullied honor.

It has been said that the passage of these bills would prove an incentive to the youth of our land and cause them to make greater efforts to emulate the illustrious examples of these illustrious citizens, soldiers, and statesmen. Whose example did Logan follow? Whom did Blair take as his guide? Certainly no one will contend that the passage of large pension bills gave an incentive to either of these two distinguished citizens.

The purest patriotism is not aroused by pelf. Cassius had an itching palm, but his patriotism is not to be commended. Too great love of gain extinguishes rather than increases the patriotic passion in the human breast. What youth can read the historic lines where the unselfish, liberty-loving Washington, the greatest patriot of any age, declined to accept anything for his long services in the war of Independence as commanding general, except his expenses, without feeling his own pride, patriotism, and purity of purpose strengthened? It is true the American people admire statesmanship; it is true they idolize great military geniuses, and are willing to pay fair salaries to such as they demand services from or see fit to honor; but I insist, Mr. Speaker, that this carries with it no kind of obligation on the part of this great country to maintain the families of her distinguished civilians or soldiers in luxurious idleness or lordly ease. [Applause.]

It is not claimed that the distinguished recipients of these proposed pensions of $2,000 per year each are needy, destitute, or dependent; Mrs. Logan, I am informed, being worth something like $70,000 in her own right, and Mrs. Blair, possibly not having any capital, is at least drawing a pension of $600 a year at present. If these proposed measures and the few precedents placed on the statute-books heretofore are not class legislation, I would like for some gentleman to point out what would be.

It has been asserted that this is the same thing as erecting monuments to our distinguished dead. I deny it. One perpetuates the memory of our heroes and also of distinguished events in our history; the other establishes the one thing to be dreaded by all Americans—the privileged class. It may be that the country demands such legislation; it may be that the poor private soldier who slept under the stars or watched at some lonely picket-post while his general reclined at ease in his "guarded tent" demands that the wife of his general shall draw the splendid sum of $2,000 per year, while he or his widow is required to put up with the small sum of $12 per month, and even that on the condition that he shed his blood on the field of battle or died from disabilities incurred in the line of duty—I say there may be such a demand coming from the private soldiery and the common people, but it is difficult to hear it. Could the widow of any private soldier whose husband died under the exact conditions and circumstances which surrounded the death of General Logan establish her claim to a pension under the law as it now exists? I have known of stronger claims being rejected.

As a partial excuse for such legislation it has been stated that the generals suffered great intellectual strain, and had greater responsibilities resting upon them. I answer, they received much larger pay for the intellectual strain and monopolized the honors for the responsibilities.

Since I have had the honor to be a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions I have given considerable study and attention to pension legislation, and have received many suggestions and many complaints and very many letters claiming, and justly, too, that the present pension laws have more of unfairness than fairness, more of injustice than justice, more of inequality than equality, and cause more dissatisfaction than satisfaction, more heart-burnings than heart-ease; hence, in my humble judgment, the whole system of pension legislation needs radical revision and equalization. [Applause.]

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, as a Missourian, familiar with the stormy history of that State immediately succeeding the war, I have reason to remember General Blair with gratitude. Both Blair and Logan were men of large mold, and the services of both in military and civil life were distinguished. But that may be said with equal truth of hundreds of others. If I should follow a mere sentiment I would vote for these bills; but really I can see no good reason founded in law, right, or public policy for pensioning these widows. The people must pay these pensions. Every poor man in my district must contribute to them. I am opposed to granting these large pensions to rich widows who do not need them. What pensions we have to give I prefer to give to soldiers who, though more obscure than Generals Blair and Logan, were equally brave, and who, by reason of poverty and disease, deserve and need them. In this direction of pensioning deserving and needy soldiers I have gone and am willing to go to every reasonable length, but I can not agree to the increase of the civil pension-list which these bills propose to make. I say civil pension-list, because that is the purport of the pending proposition. We are proposing to give a pension of $2,000 to widows who do not need it, although their husbands were honored in every way after the war and died in civil life, and tax widows whose husbands were slain on the battle-field, and who receive only $12 per month, to pay them! It is a species of injustice and inequality I can not vote for.

Mr. MATSON. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I have voted against all this class of pensions, and I intend to do so.

I am in favor of liberally pensioning soldiers for injuries or disabilities resulting from service in the war; but I am not in favor of pensioning any one, or his successors, merely for the reason that he was illustrious either in civil or military life.

I wish here to say that if I felt at liberty to accommodate my conduct in such cases to my personal feelings I would vote for the bill.

General Logan was one of the most illustrious of our citizens—illustrious both in civil and military life. His fame is a part of the heritage of our country that will grow brighter as the years roll on. And as to the proposed recipient of the bounty of this bill—the widow of General Logan—none speak of her but to praise. And she deserves all the praise bestowed upon her.

But every such bounty as a reward or recognition of eminence is undemocratic, and, as I believe, a precedent that our Government should not adopt or follow.

While General Logan and General Blair were brave soldiers and patriotic citizens, thousands and hundreds of thousands of others were equally brave, equally patriotic.

But it will be noticed that, while pensions of this class are becoming very frequent, they are almost always, if not always, given to the rich and the famous, who need not such bounties, while the poor, who have been equally brave, self-sacrificing, and patriotic, are unremembered. This is neither republicanism nor justice.

Unless we call a halt, we shall soon have as large a list of pensioners—pensioned simply because the pensioners are renowned in military or civil life—as any old-country monarchy. Where is this to stop? Are these not the incipient steps toward the building up of an aristocracy? I can not believe that this course is wise or that it accords with the spirit or genius of our Government.

I am sorry to hear the word "Democrat" or "Republican" used, in a party sense, in connection with this bill. This is a question of what is wise public policy; of our duty as legislators of a Government of the people, for the people—a Government that should regard and treat the rich and the poor, the famous and the humble, alike. [Applause.]

Mr. MATSON. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH].

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, in the short time allotted to me I will only have an opportunity to explain very briefly the reason for my vote upon the two bills now pending.

No gentleman upon this floor can say anything, however eloquent, in regard to the life and service of General Francis P. Blair that I can not most heartily and cordially indorse and approve. No grander personal theme was ever given to a Representative upon this floor than the life and character of General Blair. If anything could tempt me from the strict line of public duty which I have marked out for myself, to vote for a bill of this character, it would be to place the widow of General Blair upon the pension-roll at the rate of $2,000 per annum.

Unqualified admiration for his heroic and chivalrous nature, his peerless character and splendid achievements, added to a warm personal friendship extending over a period of many years, and an earnest desire to emphasize my appreciation of the heroic dead by adding to the comfort of his widow in her declining years, are strong inducements to vote for this bill.

But the money to pay it belongs to the people, and in the discharge of a public duty I do not propose to sacrifice principle upon the altar of my personal friendship or my personal admiration for General Blair as a soldier and citizen of my own State of Missouri.

That he was a soldier eminent in war is known to every gentleman upon the floor. That he was a citizen honored and trusted by his State of Missouri, the history of that State and the national legislation of this country attest. He died an officer of the State of Missouri. Missouri loved and honored him, but General Blair would have blushed could he have been present here to-day and heard some of the reasons given for supporting this bill. There is nothing in his life to justify the belief that anything would induce him, if living, to swerve from a great principle as a legislator or shrink from the performance of a public duty simply because of personal friendships for the living or admiration for the achievements of the dead. His grandest characteristic was unswerving, loyal, and heroic devotion to public duty and public trusts.

I vote against these bills as I voted against the bill to place the widow of General Hancock upon the pension-list at $2,000 per annum, because I believe the sum named is excessive and that it is an invidious distinction against the widows of hundreds and thousands of soldiers who lost their lives in that great struggle, and because I believe it is unjust to the millions of the living who have to pay these pensions as long as these ladies live. It is $2,000 now, but in a short time we will be asked to raise them all to $5,000.

It will grow in extent and in amount until there will be no limit to the privileged class which the hard-worked and tax-laden people of this country must support, whose average annual income is less than one-half of the amount of either one of the proposed pensions here called for; and therefore I can not get my own consent, however tempting it may be, to vote for bills like these and set the precedent that my vote would set by placing them upon the pension-list at $2,000 per year.

Mrs. Blair is already upon the pension-roll at $50 per month, by special act of Congress, which I most cordially supported. There are many widows of other major-generals who receive the same pension. The widow of the brave and gallant Canby, who lost his life, after his eminent services through the entire war, in the Indian outbreak through the treachery of the Modoc Indians, to-day, and since his death, has drawn the modest pension of $50 per month. There are widows of other officers brave and gallant whose pension has never been over $50 per month. And I see no reason why the widow of General Blair and the widow of General Logan should be taken out of this class and raised to $2,000 per annum when the average income of the people of the State of Missouri, who will pay their proportion of these pensions, is less than one-half of $2,000 per annum.

People who toil from the beginning to the end of the year make less than one-half of what we are asked to give to support the widows of great soldiers, but, as has been truly said, neither of whom died in the military service. They died in the civil service; one a United States Senator, and the other a State officer of the State of Missouri.

My colleague [Mr. CLARDY] has referred in most eloquent terms to the services rendered by General Blair after the close of the war.

I followed him in those political campaigns as a humble lieutenant, and no one had a higher admiration for him then or reveres his memory now more than I do. But Missouri has not been unmindful or ungrateful. She rewarded General Blair for his eminent services in those political campaigns, and made him first a United States Senator, and then a State officer, paying him the salary attaching to a State officer at the time of his death. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ENLOE. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. MACDONALD. I ask unanimous consent that that permission be extended to all gentlemen who have spoken or who will speak in this debate.

There was no objection.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask that the same privilege be extended to gentlemen who have not spoken.

There was no objection.

Mr. MATSON. How much time remains?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCCREARY). The gentleman has eight minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. MATSON. I think there must be some mistake. I thought I had fourteen minutes left.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair corrects his former statement. Part of the time was taken up in receiving a message from the Senate.

Mr. MATSON. The bill granting a pension to Mrs. Logan is a House bill. The bill granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Blair is a Senate bill. The two propositions, however, were companion pieces of legislation, and originated in the Senate. The Senate bills came to the House, but the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House found a necessity to amend the Logan bill, and so, out of compliment to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MCSHANE], who was one of the largest contributors to the Logan fund, determined to report the House bill introduced by him, as their doing so would not in any way delay the enactment of the law.

I have deemed it necessary to make this explanation, and I wish to add to that the further statement that I have not sought, so far as I am concerned, in any way to delay the consideration of either of these bills. While I have felt that they involved propositions of very great importance to the people of this country, while I believe that this kind of legislation is the most vicious almost that could be proposed, I have sought, so far as I could, to be perfectly fair, and to enable the friends of these bills to reach an early consideration of them.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the passage of these bills means an immediate establishment of an aristocratic class in this country. I believe that if these two bills proposing to give pensions of $2,000 each to these good women become laws, it will not be more than a year until all of the widows of the hundreds of general officers of both the Army and the Navy will be pensioned at nearly a like sum.

Mr. HOVEY. Amen!

Mr. MATSON. I believe that will be the result, and therefore I am opposed to it; because I know, and every man who votes for these bills must know, that pensions will not go around at that sum even in proportion to the services rendered. It can not be done; and I say when a man votes for either of these bills, or propositions like them, he does so at the expense of other worthy persons who might otherwise get pensions adequate perhaps to the service they had rendered. But at the rate of $2,000 a year to the widows of major-generals the money, as I have said, will not go around, limitless as it is supposed to be by some gentlemen.

What reason is there, if these pensions are granted, why the same pension should not be given to the widow of Major-General Stannard, the gallant and heroic soldier who came from the State of Vermont, in the late war? a very humble man, a man who served during four years of the time that I have served on the Committee on Invalid Pensions as the messenger of that committee at a salary of $1,200 a year; a man who lost one arm in the service and was wounded in the other, and who had five other wounds in his body. When the proposition was made by the Senate, after a disagreement between the two Houses and a conference report had been made, this House refused to give his widow even $75 a month, because they said they had established the rule of giving but $50, and they would not go beyond it.

What reason, I say, is there for giving these women any more than you would give the widow of that gallant man, although he may have been somewhat obscure in the latter part of his life? a man who was wounded within hand-shaking distance of General Hancock at Gettysburgh, both of them shot out of their saddles while resisting the desperate charge of Pickett's division. You refused to do that, and yet you propose to take up these two others who have no stronger claims, so far as military services are concerned, than that invalid widow of General Stannard, who has not been out of bed for ten years, as was shown in the discussion upon that bill. What reason is there why these two widows should have more than the widow of General Crocker, of Iowa? What reason is there why these widows should have more than the widow (if he should leave a widow) of that grand old man whose face I look into now, one of the favorite soldiers of the State of Indiana, my colleague, who gloriously earned his high rank, Maj. Gen. A. P. HOVEY?

What reason is there why these women should have more than the widow of General Robert Anderson, whose services were so eloquently described by my colleague [Mr. HOLMAN] recently in the debate when the House voted her a pension of $100 a month? What reason is there why any of these widows I have mentioned should have less than the widow of Major-General Logan and Major-General Blair? The widow of General Canby, who rendered distinguished services during the war and was afterwards murdered by the Modocs, receives $50 a month, and has a dependent sister to take care of. What reason is there why these two should have more than she receives? What reason is there why they should have more than the widow of General Hooker, if he left a widow? Or the widow of General Meade, if he left one? Or than the widow of General Phil. Kearny, who was killed upon the field of battle? Or than the widow (if he leaves a widow when he dies) of that grand man whom we all know, and who has served with us here, Major-General Slocum?

What reason is there for giving $2,000 a year to those women and not giving it to the widow of every one of those distinguished men around whose names the halo of glory rests, and will forever rest? So it will be said, and so it may be said of the widows of the hundreds of general officers of the Army and the Navy. Far be it from me to seek to take away one atom of the glory and the luster that surround their names; and those who oppose this bill have no disposition to say or to do anything that will detract in the least degree from the name and fame of either General Logan or General Blair, or from that of their very much esteemed widows. But, sir, since the Logan proposition was first mooted, I have received, I may safely say, hundreds of letters from people in the humbler walks of life, from soldiers' widows, some of whom draw no pension, others of whom draw pensions of $12 a month, widows of men who were killed upon the field of battle, widows who saw their husbands for the last time when they left them to go to the field.

These women write and say that they do not think it is just to make this distinction and to give the widow of General Logan $2,000 a year while they are left penniless or with a mere pittance, especially when it is a matter of public notoriety that she has a large income already, and that more than $60,000 was given to her by the generous people of this country. They do not believe it is right.

Mr. Speaker, wise men in this country have expressed concern of late because of the restless disposition of the laboring people of the country, the people in the humbler walks of life. God forbid that the time should ever come when anarchy and riot and bloodshed shall prevail; but it is apprehended, seriously apprehended, and if it ever does come those who bring it about will find in such legislation as this the best possible excuse for that kind of lawlessness.

Gentlemen have undertaken to justify this legislation on the ground that England would do it. England might, because her government is based upon a different idea from ours. There kingly power and the rule of noble blood prevail, but here in this free democracy of ours the grand underlying proposition is that of equal rights to all and exclusive privileges to none [applause], and gentlemen who vote for this bill vote in direct violation of that great underlying principle of free and equal government.

Mr. Speaker, there are many other reasons why this bill should not pass. It is said that there are precedents for this legislation. Precedents! and yet, sir, if you will turn to the record of what took place when any one of those bills was passed you will find that it was claimed by the friends of the bill that it would not be a precedent for anything. If you can find any case in which that was not so I will withdraw all my opposition to this bill. Every time a bill of this kind has been proposed to the House the friends of the bill have claimed and insisted that it was not and would not and could not be a precedent. "No two cases alike," says my eloquent friend from New York [Mr. COX], perhaps, in advocating a bill of this kind. "No two cases alike," says some one else. "This bill must stand by itself. I am in favor of making distinctions, so as to recognize distinguished services," says another, and so on. So in advocating bills heretofore it has been asserted they would not be precedents; but now we are met by the claim that they are precedents for the passage of this bill. The fact is, as I stated in the beginning, when bills of this character pass they not only become precedents, but they fix almost beyond the hope of reversal the principle of pensioning the widows of general officers at very extravagant rates. Why, sir, already since this proposition to give Mrs. Logan $2,000 a year was first advocated several bills have passed this House placing the widows of other general officers on the pension-roll at the rate of $100 a month. Bills of the same character have passed the Senate.

The widow of General Ricketts, a most estimable woman, has received increased pension on the ground that she herself rendered service, having been a nurse during the war. The widow of General Paul, a man who in an instant had both eyes plowed out by a minie-ball at Gettysburgh, has had her pension increased to the rate of $100 a month because of the extreme sufferings which her husband endured, perhaps about as strong a reason as could be given. I have already referred to the case of the widow of General Anderson. Several other propositions of the same kind are pending, and others are about to follow. The inevitable effect of the passage of these bills will be the increase of the pensions of the widows of all general officers. That is, to my mind, as clear as day.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MORRILL. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY].

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, the bill under consideration for the relief of Mrs. Apolline A. Blair was introduced in the Senate by a distinguished Senator of my own State [Mr. VEST], and has my hearty and cordial approval. Among all the soldiers that Missouri gave to the Union Army, there was none more intrepid, none more magnanimous than Francis P. Blair, and but for his heroic efforts Missouri would probably have been swept from her moorings in the Union.

General Blair believed in the union of the States, and with unshaken firmness and patriotic devotion, never excelled in the history of any country he gave the best years of his life to preserve the Government and restore the national authority, and died a poor man. [Applause.]

General Blair never sheathed his sword while there was a Confederate in arms; but when the war was over and the old flag again floated unchallenged, he laid down his sword and sought diligently, with all the earnestness of his great heart, to re-establish, restore, and re-enthrone fraternal feeling between the different sections of our common country.

Sir, I give to this measure a most earnest support, because in my opinion the great services of General Blair, at a critical period in the history of the Government, and throughout the entire war, entitle his widow to the most generous consideration at the hands of the American people; but as a Missourian there is another reason impelling me to its support.

Mr. Speaker, I will not in this presence and at this hour venture to tread upon partisan ground; but having been to some extent an eye-witness, I can not forget the lofty courage in the presence of imminent personal danger which General Blair manifested in behalf of my people after the close of the war. [Applause.]

Sir, in those terrible days immediately succeeding that great struggle the most vicious elements of society in many parts of our State were in control of local affairs. Our people were prostrate, tax-ridden, and oppressed.

Confronted with this unhappy condition of affairs General Blair hesitated not a moment, but turning his back upon the paths which led to speedy political preferment, he fearlessly championed the cause of the weak, the oppressed, and the downtrodden.

Sir, remembering as I do his heroic conduct under those circumstances, it affords me peculiar pleasure to be able to support so worthy a measure in behalf of the widow of this knightly soldier.

Mr. Speaker, General Blair was one of two men who were peculiarly the representatives of the volunteer soldiery of the country.

Sir, I am for the bill because of the extraordinary services of General Blair to the Government, and for the additional reason stated, and I trust that the House will by a decisive vote grant this pension to the widow of the most illustrious soldier that Missouri gave to the armies of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. MORRILL. I yield the residue of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN].

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Speaker, in watching the progress of this discussion I have observed that the distinguished character of the service rendered by Generals Logan and Blair to this country has been conceded fairly and generously by the opponents of these measures. There remains, therefore, but one objection to the passage of these bills—an objection which has been strongly urged and which deserves serious consideration—the objection which has been voiced by so many on this side, that legislation of this character is legislation in favor of a class.

Mr. Speaker, if there were foundation for this objection, I concede that it ought to be decisive of the fate of these measures. But it seems to me to be a self-evident fallacy to declare that this legislation is in favor of a class when it is avowedly based upon the illustrious services of two individuals.

And gentlemen who advance the objection that this is class legislation do so without fully considering the import of the terms which they use. Class legislation is that which is devised for a set of individuals, set apart or distinguished from the rest of the people, based on some reason extrinsic to their own merits. But legislation which recognizes individual eminence, which recognizes individual service, is legislation directly opposed to that which is generally denominated class legislation.

But when the illustrious service of these two generals has been considered, when the character of the deeds they wrought for the benefit of this Republic has been confessed, the argument is supplied which imposes upon this House the duty of providing for those whom they have left helpless to that country whose existence they and their comrades have preserved. [Applause.]

It has been said, Mr. Speaker, also, in opposition to this bill, that the widows and orphans of private soldiers and of subaltern officers are not properly provided for now by the pension legislation of the country. If that be true it is an argument for increased pensions to those persons, but it is no argument against the enactment of these measures. [Applause.]

I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, for my part, that when we reflect on the peculiar character of the services which were rendered by the leaders of our armies in the rebellion, we are confronted with an historical record which is not paralleled by anything recorded in those pages of the world's history devoted to recording the existence and experience of other nations. This was not a conflict to repel invasion. This Army of ours did not spring into existence in answer to a battle-cry which sounded throughout the country calling the people to arms to resist the invasion of a foreign foe. No foreign flag was sweeping over our shores. No ships of war belonging to a hereditary foe were parting with their prows the waters of our harbors.

But brethren were called to arms against brethren. It was civil strife, and the man who went into the field periled not only his life, but as a pledge of his loyalty offered up on the altar of his country his whole future prospect, staking all on the issue of the conflict. Suppose this civil war had terminated differently; suppose those who followed the Confederate flag had triumphed, who can tell what may have been the fate of the general officers who led the Union armies? Who can say that passion, fanned by years of resistance, triumphant at last, might not have doomed to outlawry, to exclusion from even professional life, to exclusion from all political privileges, those who had led the armies of the North?

Mr. OATES. What warrant has the gentleman for that statement?

Mr. COCKRAN. I am describing a hypothetical case.

Mr. OATES rose.

Mr. COCKRAN. Wait a moment.

Mr. OATES. No gentleman ever contemplated any such thing.

Mr. COCKRAN. I am describing what may be the outcome of any civil strife, but I am far from saying gentlemen sitting here who bore arms in the Confederacy, or the Confederacy itself, would actually have done that which I portray as the possible result of any civil war.

Mr. MARTIN. What do you mean by that?

Mr. COCKRAN. I am referring to that risk which every soldier takes who engages in civil strife. And I say, with all respect to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] and to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MARTIN], if we reject the legitimate and moderate claims of those who bore arms in defense of their country, who rendered services as illustrious as those rendered by General Logan and General Blair, if their widows and children are not to be considered the wards of the nation, we discourage the display of patriotic devotion whenever the nation shall again need heroic soldiers, skillful officers, and undaunted patriots. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the first bill on which the vote is to be taken.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3191) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary S. Logan.

The SPEAKER. The first question is on the amendment proposed by the committee, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 9 strike out the words "for and during her natural life."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOGG. I submit the following amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause.

The SPEAKER. But the previous question has been ordered upon this bill, and it is not subject to amendment.

The question is on ordering the bill as amended to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill was engrossed and ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

The question recurred on the passage of the bill.

Mr. MATSON. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 154, nays 96, not voting 74; as follows:

Mr. COX with Mr. BROWER on Mrs. Logan's pension bill. If present, Mr. COX would vote for the bill, Mr. BROWER against it.
Mr. WHEELER with Mr. LODGE on the Logan pension bill. If present, Mr. LODGE would vote for the bill, Mr. WHEELER against it.
Mr. BLAND with Mr. GROSVENOR on all political questions and on the Logan pension bill. If present, Mr. GROSVENOR would vote for the bill.
Mr. BLAND. I desire to state that had I not been paired I should vote against the bill.
The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.
Mr. MORRILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.
The latter motion was agreed to.

AMERICAN INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. MCCREARY, Mr. RUSSELL of Massachusetts, and Mr. MORROW as managers on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 1473) to authorize the President of the United States to arrange a conference for the purpose of promoting arbitration and encouraging reciprocal commercial relations between the United States of America and the Republics of Mexico, Central and South America, and the Empire of Brazil.

MRS. APOLLINE A. BLAIR.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the next bill.
The Clerk read as follows:
A bill (S. 574) to increase the pension of Mrs. Apolline A. Blair.
The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommend the following amendment:
Strike out the words "for and during her natural life."
The amendment was agreed to.
The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, and it was accordingly read the third time.
The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?
Mr. MATSON. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.
The yeas and nays were ordered.
The question was taken; and there were—yeas 148, nays 90, not voting 86; as follows:

Cox,	Kennedy,	Romeis,

So the bill was passed.
Mr. COWLES. I am paired with Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio. If he were present he would vote "aye," and I should vote "no" on this bill.
I desire also to make the same announcement with reference to the bill for Mrs. Logan's pension.
Mr. MACDONALD. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.
There was no objection.
The following additional pairs were announced:
Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota, with Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, on this bill. If present, Mr. O'NEILL would vote for the bill and Mr. WILSON against it.
Mr. OATES with Mr. E. B. TAYLOR on this bill. If Mr. TAYLOR were present, he would vote for the bill and Mr. OATES would vote against it.
The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.
Mr. MORRILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.
The latter motion was agreed to.

ANTHONY L. WOODSON.

Mr. LANHAM. I move that the House do now adjourn.
Mr. BURROWS. I ask my friend to withhold that motion for the present to allow the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FINLEY] to call up the matter to which I objected in the morning. I have since examined it, and am satisfied the bill should pass.
Mr. LANHAM. I withhold the motion to adjourn for that purpose.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none.
The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4665) for the relief of Anthony L. Woodson.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States be, and he is hereby, directed to examine and settle the claim or claims of Anthony L. Woodson, of Hart County, Kentucky, for property taken and used by the Army of the United States during the late rebellion, and that he pay him therefor such sum as may be found due.

Mr. FINLEY. There is a substitute which I ask to have read.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk informs the Chair that the substitute has not yet come from the Printing Office.

Mr. FINLEY. Then I ask that the consideration of the bill stand over until to-morrow morning.

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MATSON. I move that the House take a recess until 7.30 p. m.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas had moved to adjourn.

Mr. LANHAM. We have had the day devoted to pension business and I think we should adjourn.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Did not the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] move to take a recess?

The SPEAKER. Yes; but the gentleman from Texas had the motion to adjourn pending and yielded to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FINLEY].

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana that the House take a recess until half past 7 o'clock, the business of the evening session to be under the special order.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 13 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until 7.30 p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 7.30 p. m., and was called to order by Mr. MCMILLIN, as Speaker pro tempore, who directed the following letter to be read:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 30, 1888.

SIR: Hon. BENTON MCMILLIN is designated to preside at the session of the House this evening.

JOHN G. CARLISLE, Speaker.

Hon. JOHN B. CLARK,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Mr. DOCKERY. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of bills under the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first bill.

The Clerk read the title of the first pension bill on the Calendar, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5246) granting a pension to John Godsen.

Mr. MATSON. That bill was introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREENMAN] and was reported by the Committee on Pensions. The gentleman from New York came to me and stated that he would be unable to be present this evening, but that he had investigated the case and was satisfied the bill should not be passed. He desired me to ask that it be reported back to the House with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

The bill was ordered to be reported back to the House with the recommendation that it be laid on the table.

WILLIAM B. JOHNSON.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 428) granting a pension to William B. Johnson.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the limitation of law, the name of William B. Johnson, late Company D, Thirty-ninth Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 428), granting a pension to William B. Johnson, submit the following report:

The claimant in this case enlisted February 2, 1864, in Company D, Twenty-ninth Iowa Infantry, and was discharged July 12, 1865. In his application for a pension he alleges that in South Carolina, in February, 1865, he contracted cold, resulting in lung disease and lameness of left leg, from exposure while on Sherman's march to the sea. The claim was rejected in the Pension Office on the ground that there was no record of the disability and his failure to furnish satisfactory testimony. The records of the company show that he was sick and sent to Alexandria, Va., May 20, but the nature of the sickness is not stated. The hospital records of the organization are not on file in the War Department. Capt. W. T. Matthews, commanding the company, testifies that claimant left the company from sickness at Goldsborough, N. C., to return to the company at Alexandria, Va.

"I was also acquainted with him before he entered the service, and knew him to be a sound man at that time."

In an office letter, subsequently filed, Matthews says:

"Said soldier contracted disease about February or March, 1865, while on the march from Savannah, Ga., to Raleigh, N. C. It seemed to be an affection of the throat and lungs. His health was poor up to the time of his discharge, and he had bad health for ten years after he came home. Since that time I have not been personally acquainted with him."

The postmaster at Osceola, Iowa, speaks in the highest terms of Captain Matthews's reputation for truth and veracity. Henry V. Griffin, a member of the same company, testifies that claimant, while aiding and assisting division train in passing Salkehatchie Swamp, in South Carolina, caught cold, which settled on his lungs, and caused bronchial and lung affection.

"I have known claimant since his discharge and know that he has spent much for medicine."

Samuel A. Stacey testifies that he was well acquainted with the claimant from 1865 to 1878, seeing him at least once each week during that time; that he suffered almost continually from disease of the lungs.

Dr. B. T. Raiff testifies to treating him upon his return from the service for phthisis pulmonalis, and that he is still affected with the same disease; he also adds that he knew him before enlisting and he was a healthy boy.

Dr. J. W. Holland testifies to treating him from 1877 to 1881, and says:

"During the time I knew him he was suffering with cough and expectoration and pain in lungs; he was easily exhausted and short-winded."

W. B. Talmond, J. W. Clinker, Lafayette Rockley, and others testify to intimate acquaintance with claimant, and that he had continually suffered from disease of the lungs. The examining surgeon at Omaha, Nebr., certifies that he examined him September 27, 1881, and says:

"I find a great degree of inflammation of the bronchial tubes; the degree of disability above entitling him to a half pension."

While the evidence submitted in this case does not fully comply with the regulations of the Pension Office, your committee are satisfied that the claimant contracted the disability in the service; that it has existed ever since; and therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. LYMAN. I notice that the report in this case says that the claimant enlisted in Company D, Twenty-ninth Iowa Infantry. I think there must be some mistake. The Twenty-ninth Iowa Infantry was my own regiment, and we never served in South Carolina, North Carolina, or Virginia. Unless some explanation is given by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL], who reported the bill, I will ask that it be recommitted for further investigation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Iowa that while the report speaks of the claimant as having been in the Twenty-ninth Iowa Infantry, the bill says the Thirty-ninth Iowa Infantry.

Mr. LYMAN. That is probably correct.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

THEODORE GARDNER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5118) granting a pension to Theodore Gardner.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Theodore Gardner, late sergeant First Battery Kansas Volunteers, at the rate of $17 per month, in lieu of the pension he now receives.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

Claimant, who was a sergeant in First Kansas Battery, is now receiving a pension at rate of $8 per month, by virtue of a special act of Congress approved June 18, 1878, for double scrotal hernia. The rate having been fixed by the special act, the Pension Office declines to entertain any application for an increase. The soldier's right to a pension having been admitted by the passage of the special act, it would seem simple justice that he should receive the same pension as his comrades who are suffering from the same disabilities.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES H. ORR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6761) for the relief of James H. Orr.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, instructed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James H. Orr, late private in Company D, Twenty-first Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers, and to pay him a pension from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

This soldier enlisted August 14, 1862, in Company D, Twenty-first Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers, and was discharged June 8, 1865, after a service of nearly three years. August 7, 1866, a little more than a year after his discharge, his guardian filed an application for pension in his behalf, alleging that "in the service and line of duty he became partially insane, and that after his return home to his family, consisting of a wife and one son, he was by the proper court adjudged insane."

The evidence as to the incurrence and continuance of the disability is absolutely complete. The hospital records show that he was taken to the hospital insane May 8, 1863; that he was retained in the convalescent camp until December 16, when he was returned to his company "sickly." It is clearly shown that afterwards in the service he was violently insane and had to be retained by force, and that he was not in his right mind when he returned home; was soon after sent to an insane asylum, where he now remains an incurable lunatic.

The application for a pension was rejected on the ground that "an abnormal mental condition existed prior to enlistment."

This case is a most singular one. The soldier was accepted into the service early in the war and was retained until after its close, and when an attempt was made to secure for him a pension this great Government pleads that "an abnormal mental condition existed prior to enlistment." After exhausting every possible resource they have succeeded in showing that before he enlisted he had a peculiar temperament; that he was penurious, easily angered, very excitable, and very timid; that he was unsocial and suspicious of those with whom he had dealings.

It is also shown that he was an unusually industrious and hard-working man. Several witnesses testify that they considered him not well balanced mentally, while others say that he was of ordinary mental capacity, but irritable and excitable, though never known to engage in personal quarrels.

Your committee are forced to the conclusion that no jury in the land would have adjudged the man insane at the time of his enlistment, and the fact that he became insane in the Army and has continued so since only proves that the hardships, privations, and dangers were more than he could endure. Had he possessed the mental strength of some of his more fortunate comrades he probably would not have lost his mind.

Is it not equally true that the thousands who are now receiving pensions on account of sickness contracted in the service would not have lost their health had they possessed the vigorous constitutions and the power of endurance of their more hardy comrades? Is it assuming too much to say that if this man had remained at his home, in the quiet Wisconsin village, with his wife and child, he might have been spared to a life of comparative usefulness instead of being doomed to a living death? It is proper to add that there is no evidence of hereditary insanity in the family. Further comment is unnecessary.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment: Strike out all after the word "pay," in line 7, and insert "to his legally constituted guardian the pension to which he will be entitled under this act."

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommend an amendment, striking out from lines 7 and 8 the words "him a pension from and after the passage of this act" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "to his legally constituted guardian the pension to which he will be entitled under this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. HETTIE K. PAINTER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3839) granting a pension to Mrs. Hettie K. Painter.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Hettie K. Painter, a volunteer nurse during the late war, and pay her a pension at the rate of $25 per month.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

This bill grants a pension to Mrs. Hettie K. Painter for valuable services rendered as a nurse in the hospitals and on the battle-fields during the war of the rebellion. A similar bill passed the Senate during the Forty-ninth Congress, and was favorably reported by this committee. The report is hereto attached, and the passage of the bill recommended, with an amendment: Strike out the words "twenty-five," in line 7, and insert the word "twelve."

SENATE REPORT.

"This is a bill to pension Mrs. H. K. Painter, as a recognition of her valuable services as hospital and field nurse during the recent war. These services are, briefly stated, as follows:

"She nursed the sick and wounded after the first battle of Bull Run for three months, and until she lost the use of her right hand, when she returned to her home in New Jersey. General Philip Kearny asked her to return, and she did so, and her services are noticed in Foster's book, "New Jersey in the Rebellion," page 29, and in other works, and by Surgeon-General Barnes. She returned a second time from home, or Philadelphia hospital, on a telegram from Surgeon-General Barnes, after the second battle of Bull Run; took charge of the Georgetown College hospital; thence she went to Armory Square hospital. After the battle of Gettysburgh she joined the Army at Frederick, Md.; was ordered to visit Washington and report on the cause of complaints, and her report to the Surgeon-General was satisfactory.

"After the battle on Rapidan the Surgeon-General placed her in charge of hospital cars at Brandy Station. After General Grant took command of the Army of Virginia she was ordered to Aquia Creek and across to Fredericksburgh, thence, after a short time, to Washington hospital, and thence to City Point, where General Grant gave her passes to and from divisions and hospitals, thence back again to Washington hospitals until the war closed, and the closing of the hospitals. But for the death of Grant, Lincoln, Kearny, Mott, and others, she would have received their warm commendation. Since the war she has furnished evidence to many disabled soldiers whose hospital record was imperfect. She is indorsed by resolutions of the encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic of Nebraska.

"In corroboration of these statements the committee have the testimony of J. S. Ely, late assistant surgeon, United States Volunteers; Levi Fujon, late of Company I, New York Heavy Artillery; Samuel Read, quartermaster First Regiment New Jersey Volunteers, and others.

"Mrs. Painter was a graduate in medicine, a circumstance which made her services doubly valuable. From the ample testimony at the disposal of the committee they are satisfied not only that she deserves a pension, but that it has been too long delayed."

The amendment of the committee to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twelve" was agreed to; and the bill as amended was reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARGARET S. MURRAY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 404) for the relief of Margaret S. Murray.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, ordered to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pensions laws, the name of Margaret S. Murray, of Worcester, widow of Henry Murray, and mother of T. Edward Murray, musician in Company C, Third Battalion Massachusetts Rifles, who died from disease contracted in the service, leaving no widow, child, or children, and upon whom said Margaret S. Murray was dependent.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The report of the Committee on Pensions in the Senate in this case sets forth fully and clearly the facts in this case, and is therefore adopted and made a part of this report.

"This claim was rejected by the Bureau of Pensions June 9, 1879, and again April 11, 1884, for the reason that the soldier's death was not the result of a disability contracted in the service.

"The deceased son enlisted April 19, 1861, for three months, and was discharged July 12, 1861, having been in hospital since June 12, 1861, for treatment for typhoid fever. He died of consumption September 12, 1876, never having filed any claim for a pension. The claimant is his mother and a widow; and the proofs as to her dependence on the deceased are, in the opinion of your committee, sufficient. The history of the deceased subsequently to his discharge appears by the following evidence:

"Dr. O. Newton testifies in March, 1879, that he was surgeon of the battalion of which deceased was private; that deceased was very sick with typhoid fever, and was sent home as soon as he was able to be moved; that when the fever left him he was afflicted with pustules filled with blood, which, when opened, could be stopped only by packing with lint saturated with Monsel's solution of iron. Deceased never came under affiant's treatment after leaving the Army, but affiant frequently saw him, and knows he never fully recovered; frequently saw him after consumption was manifest, which he believes was caused by malarial poisoning, and of which he has no doubt he died.

"Dr. P. E. Hubon testifies, March, 1879, that deceased came under his care in July, 1861, in an almost moribund condition from typhoid malarial fever of lowest grade liver apparently enlarged, and jaundiced and sickly appearance of skin. For days had to open rapidly formed abscesses on face and body, and his case seemed hopeless. Under treatment he slowly recovered sufficiently to do some business. From that time to 1873, when affiant went to Europe, he treated deceased for various complaints, sore throat, cough, etc. In all treatment had to combat the malarial poison in his system.

"Dr. F. J. NcNulty testifies, March, 1879, that he treated deceased from November, 1873, to September, 1876; that when he saw him in 1873 he was suffering from an acute attack of bronchitis, which soon developed into a chronic form; and about the latter part of 1874, or beginning of 1875, well marked symptoms of pulmonary phthisis presented themselves, which caused his death in 1876. In February, 1881, the same physician testifies that he attended deceased from early in 1873 until a short time before his death, February 12, 1876; that during this time affiant treated him for acute bronchitis; that the condition of his lungs during all this time was tuburculous, and he had frequent hemorrhages, and affiant's opinion is that he contracted his disease during the late war.

"James J. McLane, late captain Company E, First Massachusetts Cavalry, testifies April, 1880, that he was well acquainted with deceased, who was a sound man at his enlistment; that from exposure, etc., at Fort McHenry, Baltimore, was taken sick from a bad cold, which disabled him, and for which he was sent to hospital for treatment, where affiant frequently saw him suffering from hemorrhage and great weakness, which eventually caused his death. Affiant was with him during his service, and after his discharge until his death. Affiant saw deceased after his discharge in Little Washington, N. C., where he had a turn of bleeding, and afterward, in the fall of 1863, at Fort Washington, where he was so bad that affiant had him placed on a bed and carried to a hospital 'where I saw him several times bleeding from the lungs.' Affiant saw him again at Roanoke Island, in 1865, where he was employed in the quartermaster's department as clerk. He was then troubled with spitting blood from his lungs, and after his discharge from that service until his death, 'throwing blood from his lungs.'

"George P. Burt testifies that he saw the deceased the day after his discharge, when he appeared in a very sickly condition, suffering apparently from disease of some of his vital organs, and thereafter frequently saw him have hemorrhages until his death. In May, 1862, when troops were called for, he started for the seat of war, but was unable to go beyond Boston. In February, 1863, affiant called on deceased and found him bleeding from the lungs. In June, 1863, the deceased was appointed enrolling officer for the draft, but owing to his feeble condition was unable to accept. He soon after left for the front, where he remained until the spring of 1866, when he came home feeble and still suffering from frequent attacks of hemorrhage. He never rallied, but gradually failed from frequent attacks until his death.

"Eliza O. Regan testifies that when deceased came home he was very feeble, appearing like a person with consumption.

"Isaac Davis testifies that prior to deceased's enlistment he was a student in affiant's office, and to all appearance he was a strong, robust, healthy man, and free from any disease or bodily injury.

"Twenty of deceased's neighbors and townsmen testify that he was sound at enlistment and free from disease.

"In reference to the application for a rehearing of the case in 1881, a report on file in the Pension Office states:

"'Claim was rejected June 9, 1879, on the ground that the disease—phthisis—which caused soldier's death was not the result of his military service. In my opinion the additional evidence on which claim is readmitted is not sufficient on which to base a change of action. It now appears from the testimony of Dr. McNulty that he did not attend soldier up to the time of his death, so we have no medical testimony or record to show cause of death.'

"The testimony is uniform, however, that out of the fourteen or more years which elapsed between his discharge and demise only a fraction of a year, and that immediately preceding his death, is unaccounted for, and that during all this time he was under treatment for malarial and consumptive diseases or ailments allied to them. Evidence less pertinent and consecutive has in hundreds of cases convicted men of serious crimes; and your committee think it is not straining the point of evidence or mercy in favor of the widowed and paupered mother of the dead soldier to conclude that testimony which shows a sound condition of health at enlistment, serious and almost fatal illness during service, and a state of health from that time till death that required the regular attendance of physicians, whose concordant statements are continuous up to within the year and 'a short time before his death,' is sufficient and binding upon their judgment, and that it justifies a favorable report upon the subject under consideration."

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SARAH E. BRANSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 854) granting a pension to Sarah E. Branson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sarah E. Branson, widow of Philip W. Branson, deceased, late of Company F, Fortieth Regiment of Illinois Volunteer Infantry.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, the report in this case is quite long, but the substance of it can be stated in a nut-shell, and, with the permission of the House, I will make a brief statement of the case. The question involved is rather a legal one than anything else. The Pension Office discovered, when the application was made for a pension, that Philip W. Branson, the deceased soldier, had a wife living at the time of his marriage with Sarah E. Branson. The evidence, however, shows that Sarah E. Branson knew nothing whatever of this at the time, and never did know of it until after his death. She bore him five children. The first wife was divorced a few years after the marriage with the second wife, and the whole case hangs upon the question whether the second marriage was a legal one. Senator DAVIS made a report upon the case in the Senate, and he goes into a long argument to prove that the marriage became legal on the granting of the divorce from the first wife. Your committee were unanimously of the opinion that this woman, who was deceived into the marriage, who knew nothing of the former marriage, and who had borne this man five children, should receive the pension. I have stated the only point in the case.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MAHALA DEXTER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4104) granting a pension to Mahala Dexter.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mahala Dexter, dependent mother of Henry H. Dexter, late of Company M, Second Massachusetts Cavalry Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. GALLINGER) was read, as follows:

The House Committee on Invalid Pensions of the Forty-ninth Congress reported this claim favorably, but it was not reached on the Calendar. The facts are that claimant is the mother of Henry H. Dexter, a private in Company M, Second Massachusetts Cavalry, who enlisted March 7, 1863, and was killed in battle near Drainesville, Va., February 23, 1864. Claim was rejected on ground of non-dependence; that soldier did not render any assistance after 1860.

Soldier worked for his father on his farm in Barton, Vt., until 1860, when he went to California, and it does not appear that he made any substantial contributions to the family after that time. It is shown, however, that the parents are now in very feeble health and destitute circumstances. At the time of soldier's death they had a little property of something like $2,000 value, upon which there was a mortgage of $1,200. Claimant's husband has been at no time since 1864 able to perform any but light labor, being troubled with hernia of long standing and with an affection of the wrist.

The St. Johnsbury board of examining surgeons report him in 1882 as "a broken-down old man, and unfit from his age and infirmities to perform manual labor." He is now eighty-five years of age, and the claimant is also very advanced in years.

Your committee think that this aged and needy couple, whose son was killed in battle, are deserving of the bounty of the Government, and therefore report the bill back with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

STEPHEN D. REDFIELD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1785) granting a pension to Stephen D. Redfield.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Stephen D. Redfield, late a second lieutenant in Company A, Thirty-seventh Regiment Iowa Volunteers, and to pay him a pension of $17 a month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) is as follows:

The report of the Pension Committee of the Senate is as follows:

"The claimant, Stephen D. Redfield, enlisted September 1, 1862, and served until March 24, 1865, as a second lieutenant in Company A, Thirty-seventh Regiment Iowa Volunteers. He is now drawing a pension of $7.50 a month for disease of the eyes, as the result of sunstroke; he applied for an increase, on the ground of lumbago, partial paralysis of left side, total deafness of left ear, and general prostration, but this application was rejected by the Pension Office March 24, 1886.

"John Hogendabler, captain of the company in which claimant served, testifies that claimant was sunstruck August 1, 1864, while in line of duty, near Memphis, Tenn.; that he was affected in his head; was unable to do any duty for several weeks, and, so far as he knows, has never recovered; and that when he entered the service claimant was a healthy, robust man. This testimony is corroborated by Dr. Joseph Orr, assistant regimental surgeon; by E. H. Stedman, first lieutenant of claimant's company, and by other comrades.

"Dr. J. P. Whitney testifies that he has known claimant for fifteen years, and that on examination he found him suffering from nervous prostration, deafness, partial paralysis of left extremity, and other disabilities. In his opinion claimant is almost totally incapacitated for the performance of manual labor. The testimony as to these disabilities is corroborated by that of Dr. William Flatt.

"This claimant is now over eighty-one years of age; is strictly temperate and industrious; has an aged wife to support, who is also crippled; and is so seriously disabled that he can not pursue his trade of shoemaker except at intervals, especially in summer-time or in a heated room. The testimony shows that he is a respected citizen in the community where he resides; that he has been mayor of his city (Vinton, Iowa), and that he has always been a 'public-spirited citizen and Christian gentleman.'"

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SARAH E. PRIBBLE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 818) granting a pension to Sarah E. Pribble.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sarah E. Pribble, widow of Charles M. Pribble, late a private of Company B, Eleventh Maine Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. GALLINGER) is as follows:

Charles M. Pribble enlisted on the 26th day of August, 1862, as a private in Company B, Eleventh Regiment Maine Volunteers, and served until August 14, 1864, when he has disabled at the battle of Deep Bottom, Virginia, by a severe gunshot wound in the foot. He applied for and received a pension, which continued until date of death, November 7, 1882. The claimant under this bill applied for widow's pension, but it was refused on the ground that death of soldier was not due to the disability for which he was pensioned, the cause of death being given as liver and stomach trouble.

The soldier's soundness at enlistment is unquestioned, and the fact that when he returned from the Army he was suffering from fever and ague is well established, although he did not ask pension for that disability. On this point Dr. John J. Jones, of Carmel, Me., testifies that immediately upon the soldier's return from the Army he was called upon to treat him for fever and ague, and that he continued to treat him from time to time for that disease, which was continuous upon him until the time of his death, during which time his liver and stomach were affected by reason of the fever and ague.

Dr. I. W. Tibbetts, of Stetson, Me., testifies as follows:

"I treated soldier for gunshot wound, and also for fever and ague and disease of the kidneys, contracted in the Army. The fever and ague was more or less continuous from the time I commenced to treat him, causing liver and stomach trouble, which was the immediate cause of his death, although I have no doubt the gunshot wound tended to produce the extremely emaciated condition and perhaps to affect the kidneys. These conditions I have no doubt were contracted in the Army, and I know that they have been continuous and finally resulted in his death."

The medical evidence shows conclusively that this man's death was due to a debilitated condition of the system, resulting from a gunshot wound, for which he was pensioned, and from fever and ague contracted in the service, but for which he had not asked pension.

The fact that he was treated for fever and ague immediately upon his return from the service proves that the disease was contracted in the Army, and his widow should not be deprived of her rights because he did not allege that disability.

Your committee report the bill back favorably, and recommend its passage.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

STEPHEN THURSTON.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6812) granting an increase of pension to Stephen Thurston.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Stephen Thurston, of Belfast, Me., late a private in Company G, First Regiment of Maine Volunteers, at the rate of $45 per month.

The report (by Mr. GALLINGER) was read, as follows:

Claimant was a private in Company G, First Maine Heavy Artillery, and was wounded by two rifle-balls in the thigh at the battle of Petersburgh, Va., July 18, 1864. In consequence of the wound the leg became shriveled and entirely useless, and also gangrenous. From the time of his discharge he has been compelled to use two crutches. A medical examination on January 19, 1865, is as follows:

"Applicant is totally disabled by gunshot wound of right thigh; gangrene destroyed nearly all the fleshy part of the posterior portion of thigh; the leg is permanently flexed upon the thigh; he is much prostrated," etc.

Other medical examinations from time to time revealed the fact that the use of the leg was wholly and permanently lost.

The following recent medical certificates are filed with your committee:

"BELFAST, ME., February 14, 1888.

"This is to certify that I have this day examined Stephen Thurston, formerly Company G, First Maine Heavy Artillery, and find that the right leg is in such condition from wounds received while in the service of the United States as to place him upon the pension-list rated as an amputation at middle third of femur. The condition of the limb is such from the effects of gangrene that it is useless, and no suitable stump could be made for the support of an artificial limb. I consider his condition worse than one of amputation of the thigh. I am disinterested.

"This certifies that I have this day examined Stephen Thurston, formerly Company G, First Maine Heavy Artillery, and find his right leg useless from wounds received while in the service of the United States. The present condition of the limb is such, from the effects of gangrene, that no suitable stump could be made for the support of an artificial limb. In my opinion his condition is worse than amputation of the thigh. I have no interest in the claim.

"WM. H. FOGLER,

In addition to the above, a petition signed by the county treasurer, the judge of probate, judge of police court, the collector of taxes, the editor of the local newspaper, and a large number of lawyers, merchants, manufacturers, and other business men, citizens of Belfast, Me., is in the hands of your committee, setting forth the merits of this case, and urging that the increase of pension be granted.

Claimant is now receiving a pension of $36 per month, which is the full amount that can be allowed under the pension laws; but it is evident that this case is one that Congress can properly take cognizance of. It is conclusively shown that the leg is utterly worthless, and that, even if amputation should be resorted to, the tissues have been so completely destroyed by gangrene that it would be impossible to wear an artificial limb. This fact makes the disability so clearly equal to that for which $45 is allowed under the general law, that your committee report the bill back favorably, and recommend its passage.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

THOMAS S. HOPKINS.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (S. 450) for the relief of Thomas S. Hopkins, late of Company C, Sixteenth Maine Volunteers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Thomas S. Hopkins, late a private in Company C, Sixteenth Maine Volunteers, now on the pension-roll, be, and he is hereby, exempted, by reason of mental incapacity, from the limitation prescribed in section 2 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1879, entitled "An act making appropriations for the payment of the arrears of pensions granted by an act of Congress approved January 25, 1879, and for other purposes," and he shall be entitled to, and there shall be paid to him, the same rate of pension, and the same arrears thereof, as if his application for a pension had been filed with and allowed by the Commissioner of Pensions prior to June 16, 1880.

The report (by Mr. GALLINGER) was read.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. I shall have to object to the passage of this bill.

Mr. MORRILL. I will ask, then, unanimous consent that the bill be passed over. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], who introduced the bill, is not present this evening.

Mr. MATSON. I shall object to passing the bill over. I think it ought to be disposed of, or at least discussed until we can ascertain some reason for passing it over.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. I do not wish to enter into any protracted discussion about this matter. I believe that the general pension laws ought to be sufficient in the main for the determination of pension applications; but as there are some exceptional cases, we meet here on Friday nights to act upon bills of that sort.

In this case, as I understand, the applicant has been receiving a very fair pension since 1880; and I am opposed to all these bills which propose to go back for a period of years and by special enactment to give to particular individuals large amounts of money.

Gentlemen may discuss this bill if they see proper, but while I do not wish to interrupt the harmonious proceedings of the evening, I will say that unless I can see some good reason for changing my mind about the bill I do not think I shall be willing to see it passed. I am told that it will carry about $2,000 of pension, covering a considerable period back of 1880, when the applicant obtained the pension which he is now receiving. My present judgment is that I shall object to the passage of this bill with such an attendance as we have here to-night.

Mr. GALLINGER. The report in this case was prepared by myself; but the bill was introduced by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], who is very much interested in the case. As the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN] has signified his purpose to demand a vote by a quorum, which would of course prevent the passage of the bill, I will renew the request that the bill, retaining its place on the Calendar, be passed over until next Friday evening, so that the gentleman from Mississippi may examine it, and that the gentleman who introduced the bill may be present to defend it.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that this bill be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

WILLIAM C. WAIT.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (S. 550) granting a pension to William C. Wait.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore to the pension-roll the name of William C. Wait, late a private in Company C, of the Fifth Vermont Volunteers, at the rate of $8 per month.

Mr. GALLINGER. This is a Senate bill; but the report accompanying the bill when it came from the Senate was so brief, that I felt the facts ought to be somewhat elaborated; and unfortunately I wrote a report which is longer perhaps than was necessary. I will therefore ask permission to make a statement of the case, in lieu of the reading of the report. The bill is a thoroughly meritorious one.

Mr. MATSON. I shall insist on the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. GALLINGER) was read, as follows:

Soldier enlisted originally September 16, 1861, in Company C, Fifth Vermont Volunteers, and was detached for service on the gunboat Mound City February 21, 1862. In the course of said service he was taken ill, and in being transferred from hospital to hospital was exposed on a stretcher on the deck of a vessel and contracted thereby a disease of the chest. He was treated in hospital from July 6, 1862, to July 10, 1862, for general debility, and from September 1, 1862, to October 15, 1862, for chronic bronchitis, and was discharged for disability from the United States steamship Clara Dolsen on January 31, 1863. He was pensioned January 31, 1871, at $8 per month from February 1, 1863, on account of disease of kidneys and lungs. His rating was subsequently increased to $15, and again to $18 per month, then reduced to $10, and after a special examination his name was dropped from the roll November 1, 1877, on the ground that the disability was not received in the service.

On June 10, 1882, an application for restoration was rejected on the same ground, the medical referee saying: "It is clearly shown that soldier suffered before enlistment with some disease of the air-passages, hence we can not hold that the bronchitis, of which there is a record, is due to the service."

The claim was again specially examined in 1885, and an adverse decision reached, the medical referee holding that "the fact that soldier suffered with asthma made him peculiarly susceptible to attacks of bronchitis," and gave it as his opinion that the asthma was the first great cause of the bronchitis.

In reviewing the mass of testimony on file we find an affidavit from Dr. O. A. Holcomb, of Peru, N. Y., who swears that he has known claimant for thirty years; that before the war he was a sound, healthy man, free from asthma or any lung disease. Dr. Holcomb's reliability is admitted by the special examiner.

Stephen T. Craft, of Beekmantown, N. Y., testifies that he intimately knew soldier from early boyhood, and never knew him to have asthma before enlistment.

Harman Butler testifies that he became acquainted with claimant in February, 1862; that claimant was a perfectly healthy man; that after the siege of Island No. 10 claimant became ill, but partially recovered; that at the naval engagement at Fort Pillow the steamer Mound City, on which claimant and affiant were then serving, was sunk by the rebel vessel Van Doren, and all hands were compelled to work in the water for several days, which occasioned a recurrence of claimant's disabilities, shortly after which he was sent to the hospital.

John D. Sheridan testifies that he was captain of Company C, Fifth Vermont Volunteers, and that claimant was carefully examined by surgeon Millard A. Childs, and declared to be sound and healthy; that claimant served in affiant's company to date of detail to Mississippi flotilla, during which time he was always strong and healthy, ready for any kind of duty, and that had he been unsound he would not have been selected for service in said flotilla.

Dr. Millard A. Childs testifies that he was assistant surgeon of the Fourth Vermont Volunteers, surgeon of the Tenth Vermont, and surgeon-in-chief of an Army Corps; that he carefully examined William C. Wait for muster, and knows that he was an able-bodied, healthy man, free from all physical defects and infirmities, and especially as regards lungs and kidneys.

Dr. Melvin J. Hyde gives similar testimony as to soldier's freedom from disease at time of enlistment.

Numerous other certificates are given bearing on the same point, and going to prove soldier's soundness prior to army service.

Six medical examinations were had, in all of which the opinion was expressed that the disabilities were incurred in the service.

In August, 1877, the case was sent to a special examiner. Several witnesses were examined, who swore, more or less definitely, that they knew claimant had suffered from asthma before enlistment. The most pronounced testimony was given by Henry C. Hill, of Isle La Motte, who swore that he had known claimant to suffer so severely from asthma as to be hardly able to rise from his chair or walk across the floor. Others put it more mildly. A significant circumstance is that no medical testimony was introduced to show that claimant was treated for the disease prior to enlistment, while several physicians testified to treating him shortly after his return from the war.

Claimant took the ground that those who testified against him did so through malice, but the Department did not accept that view of the case.

The special examiner accepted the evidence in the case as sufficient to warrant him in recommending that the name should be dropped from the rolls. In speaking of the claimant he says: "He is a man of more than ordinary intelligence, but, from all that I can learn, is unfortunate in being gifted with a faculty of making himself disagreeable and unpopular." On the strength of this report the pension was discontinued.

Another special examination was ordered in October, 1884, which was conducted very thoroughly. The first witness called was Henry C. Hill, who testified so strongly against claimant in the first special examination. His testimony on this occasion was much milder than before, yet the examiner says:

"I can not help thinking that Mr. Hill is very much prejudiced, an opinion shared by parties at Isle La Motte, who asked to be excused from testifying, on the ground that they were so much prejudiced that they did not feel that it would be proper to testify. Mr. Hill denounced the claim as fraudulent several years before the special examination in 1877, and his personal business and legal quarrels with claimant are known to all."

Other witnesses were called, most of whom testified that they believed soldier suffered from asthma prior to enlistment, but, as before, no medical testimony was introduced to show that claimant had been treated for the disease. The examiner closed his report in these words:

"As a layman I should say that the claimant should be restored to the roll, for I believe that his physical troubles were permanently aggravated by his service if they did not originate therein, but the medical authority of the office being against me, I am constrained to recommend rejection."

This case is one of more than ordinary interest, and a thorough examination of all the papers would seem to show that a great injustice has, doubtless unintentionally, been done to the soldier. It is clearly evident that the claimant's assertion that the testimony against him was malicious is borne out by the facts, for that of Henry C. Hill was so manifestly unfair that the second examiner finally excluded it from the case, although testimony from the same man, and of a much more violent character than that given in the second examination, entered into the case upon which the pensioner was dropped from the rolls.

It further appears that even if soldier had asthma prior to enlistment he did not have that disease at all while in the service. True, the medical officers of the Government claim that the bronchitis from which he suffered was the result of an old asthmatic trouble, but that at best is an unsupported assertion. It is certainly more reasonable to believe that the bronchitis was occasioned by soldier's exposure at one time on a stretcher on the deck of a vessel, and again by working several days in the water at a time when he was only partially convalescent from illness of another kind.

Again, it is significant that at neither special examination was any physician produced who treated him, or medical prescription shown that he used prior to enlistment, while it clearly appears upon the testimony of medical officers of the Government who examined him for muster that he was thoroughly sound at time of enlistment, especially as regarded kidneys and lungs, and also that ever since his return from the war he has been under medical treatment.

Claimant is suffering from incurable disease. Recently he has lost by fire what little personal effects he had, and is now utterly destitute.

Your committee has also had under consideration the bill (H. R. 4097) for the same purpose, which bill they report back with the recommendation that it lie on the table, and recommend that the Senate bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ABBIE S. HUTCHINSON.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (S. 733) granting a pension to Abbie S. Hutchinson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Abbie S. Hutchinson, widow of Charles F. Hutchinson, late private of Company I, Sixth New Hampshire Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. GALLINGER) was read, as follows:

The report made by the Senate Committee on Pensions in this case is as follows:

"[Senate Report No. 144, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

"The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 733) granting a pension to Abbie S. Hutchinson, have examined the same, and report:

"Charles F. Hutchinson, private Company I, Sixth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers, enlisted November 14, 1861, and was discharged January 24, 1863, because of umbilical hernia contracted in the service. He died of consumption April 20, 1873.

"The claimant is his widow, and filed her application for pension November 21, 1873, alleging that her husband died 'of disease caused by an injury and disease contracted while in the service.'

"Prescott Hall deposes, December 31, 1872, substantially as in his subsequent affidavits, stating that the deceased was kicked in the bowels and chest, causing a rupture and hemorrhage of the lungs. He also deposes, November 14, 1873, that he was 'late second lieutenant' of the regiment to which Hutchinson belonged; that 'on or about June 15, 1862,' while on board a transport going into New Berne, N. C., the deceased was kicked in the stomach and bowels by the colonel's horse, and was so seriously injured that he was sent to the hospital. The transport was small and crowded, and the soldiers had to stand close to each other and to the horse, which became frightened and set to kicking, and it was impossible for the soldier to get out of the way; that deceased was also ruptured at the time and from the same cause.

"Prescott Hall again deposes, March 26, 1875, that he was 'late second lieutenant of Company I, Sixth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers;' that in April, 1862, Hutchinson was kicked in the stomach and chest by the colonel's horse and badly injured while on board a transport; that he immediately coughed up blood from his lungs to a considerable amount; was sent to hospital and never again returned to service; that the injury was the cause of his discharge; that there was so little room on the transport that some were obliged to stand near said horse, which became frightened and kicked. Previous to the injury Hutchinson was sound, healthy, and seldom excused from duty. Deponent knew him well before the war; lived in the same town.

"Dr. Wight deposes, November 11, 1873, that he was the family physician of the deceased for more than twenty years; that he attended him professionally in February, 1863, soon after his return from the Army, and found him troubled with severe inflammation of the chest and abdomen; hemorrhage from the lungs ensued and continued at different times until it ended in tubercular consumption, of which he died April 20, 1873; that before going to the war deceased was entirely free from said disease.

"Dr. Wight again deposes, October 6, 1876, that he was called to treat the deceased the latter part of June or the first part of July, 1863, and found him suffering from great soreness of the left side. His breathing was difficult and painful. After some days he threw off from the lung from half a pint to a pint of pus, indicating vomica of the left lung, caused, as we had good reason to suppose, by injury which he received while in the United States service. He coughed more or less after his return from the Army until he died. 'So it is sure that the disease of which he died had its beginning while in the service of his country.' Claimant was able a small part of the time to do some work, but not so much as half a man's work at any time.

"Albert Smith and Henry E. Chapman, two comrades, testify to claimant's being kicked by a horse. Chapman says he was injured internally; was cramped and bent up, and was picked up and carried to the other end of the boat.

"Henry E. Marsh and his wife Mary jointly depose, April 13, 1882, in corroboration of the testimony as to the health and strength of the soldier before enlistment; had known him for many years, being familiar with his family; any statement that the fatal disease was brought on by improper habits is untrue and a slander upon the fame of the soldier.

"Cyrus Gilman, ex-representative and selectman; Stephen Dearborn, merchant; Zaccheus Painter, ex-selectman and ex-town treasurer; Josiah J. Renn, ex-postmaster, etc.; Alfred Prescott, ex-town clerk, etc., and several other citizens of Gilmanton, N. H., claimant's place of residence, jointly depose that up to the date of his enlistment he was a strong, healthy man. After his discharge he appeared feeble; that deponents were familiar with his habits; that he sometimes drank liquor, but not to drunkenness or to be called intemperate.

"Levi H. Mudgett, postmaster at Gilmanton, was applied to by letter from the Pension Office, July 18, 1878, as to whether deceased was sick when he came out of the Army, etc. Upon the back of this letter is indorsed the following:

"'I have made inquiries of Mr. H. E. Marsh, who was his nearest neighbor and is one of our selectmen and has filled the office for a number of years, and has employed him more than any other man. Mr. Hutchinson was married a short time before he enlisted, to a married woman, and she drew State aid for awhile from both her husbands, as they were both in the Army. For awhile after his discharge he complained of not being well, but soon went to work for Mr. Marsh and worked for him most of the time up to his last sickness, which was consumption, brought on by improper habits. Mr. Marsh don't think his health was permanently impaired by anything that was contracted in the Army. He was a cooper by trade, but worked for Mr. Marsh on farm work and stone work. He was married to his last wife since he left the service, and his first wife has since married her third husband.

"'LEVI M. MUDGETT,
"'Postmaster.'

"This same Mr. Mudgett, however, deposes April 5, 1882, that he was well acquainted with the deceased before he enlisted; that he was then a sound, healthy man; that on his return from the war he appeared to be in feeble health; that while at work for deponent, after his discharge, he had a hemorrhage of the lungs; that these attacks continued with more or less frequency while he lived; that his habits of life after his discharge were as good as men's in general; that he sometimes drank liquor, but not intemperately, and deponent does not think it injured his health or shortened his life.

"This witness explains his answer to the letter from the Pension Bureau by stating that 'if anything was contained in that against the habits of said Hutchinson, that related to his habits before he enlisted and not since his discharge.'

"Dr. Wright for the fourth time deposes substantially as in his former affidavits, adding that the deceased was born and brought up in the village where deponent has lived for fifty years; that deponent knew his habits of life; they were as good as men's in general; he sometimes drank liquor but never to drunkenness, and any assertion to the contrary is false.

"Your committee has set forth the above testimony as it appears from the records of the Pension Office with more fullness than is customary, for the reason that the rejection of the claim upon the facts by that bureau seems to have been without warrant, and the rejection was sustained by the Secretary of the Interior February 11, 1879, upon the testimony as it then stood.

"We therefore, after a careful consideration of all the evidence, recommend the passage of the bill."

Your committee adopt the above report as its own, and recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

HANNAH R. LANGDON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 549) granting a pension to Hannah R. Langdon.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Hannah R. Langdon, widow of Henry H. Langdon, late an assistant surgeon in the Seventh Regiment Vermont Volunteers in the war of the rebellion, and pay her at the rate of $20 per month from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. GALLINGER) is as follows:

A similar bill to this passed the Senate during the last Congress, and has again passed that body. The Senate report is as follows:

"That the petitioner is the widow of Dr. Henry H. Langdon, late an assistant surgeon in the Seventh Regiment Vermont Volunteers, war of the rebellion; that he enlisted in the Army October 7, 1862, and was discharged on surgeon's certificate of disability March 27, 1863; that at the time of his death, 24th September, 1881, he was receiving a pension of $8.50 per month for chronic diarrhea and piles, contracted at Pensacola and Santa Rosa Island, Florida, about January, 1863; that the petitioner filed a claim for pension December 5, 1881, which was rejected on the ground that it failed to appear in the papers in the case that the disease from which the officer died (consumption) was in any degree traceable to his military service.

"On this point the affidavits of Dr. A. P. Grinnell and Dr. H. H. Atwater, submitted to your committee, among other proofs and papers, would seem to be conclusive, which are as follows:

"'I, A. P. Grinnell, of the city of Burlington, Vt., of lawful age, on oath depose and say, that I am a practicing physician in Burlington, Vt., and have been for the last fourteen years; that I was acquainted with Dr. H. H. Langdon, and knew him and his family from boyhood, and also saw him quite frequently and advised with him often regarding the treatment of his disease, although I was not his regular professional attendant; that no history of consumption could be traced in his family; that I am acquainted with Hannah R. Langdon, and know that she is the widow of said Dr. H. H. Langdon, and has not married since his decease; that I have read her petition for a pension, and state that I have no doubt, from the facts set forth in said petition and from my personal knowledge of said Dr. Langdon's condition, that his lung trouble was the direct result of his chronic diarrhea, and that the chronic diarrhea was the cause of his death.

"'A. P. GRINNELL, M. D.

"'Subscribed and sworn to this 10th day of November, 1886, before me.

"'J. M. RUSSELL,
"'Justice of the Peace.'

"'I, Hiram H. Atwater, United States examining surgeon for pensions, do depose and say that, as a member of the board of examining surgeons, I examined Henry H. Langdon, assistant surgeon of the Seventh Vermont Regiment, December 1, 1880, who claimed a pension for chronic diarrhea and piles, and that upon the certificate of said examination said Langdon was granted a pension. I further state that said Langdon died 24th September, 1881; that I saw him and prescribed for him several times during his last sickness; that the immediate cause of his death was disease of the lungs, and that I believe this disease supervened upon and was associated with the chronic diarrhea for which he was pensioned, and that this latter disease was the remote cause of his death. I further state that I have read the petition of Mrs. Langdon, and that I believe reliance can be placed upon her statements.

"'H. H. ATWATER.

"'Personally appeared before me this 16th day of November, 1886, at Burlington, Vt., Dr. H. H. Atwater, and made oath to the above affidavit by him subscribed.

"'J. M. RUSSELL,
"'Justice of the Peace.'

"In view of the statements contained in these affidavits, the signers of which are gentlemen well known to be of the very highest standing in their profession and in the community where they and Dr. Langdon resided, your committee is of the opinion that the prayer of the petitioner should be granted; and therefore report the accompanying bill and recommend its passage."

This seems to be a very meritorious claim for widow's pension, but your committee see no good reason for granting a higher rate of pension than is allowed by general law, and therefore recommend that the bill be amended by striking out all after the word "rebellion," in the seventh line; and also by inserting, after the word "pension-roll," in the fourth line, the words "subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws," and with these amendments recommend its passage.

The amendments were adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

EMMA R. JOHNSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7856) granting a pension to Emma R. Johnson.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-rolls, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Emma R. Johnson, minor child of William Johnson, late private in Company E, Seventh Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) is as follows:

Mary E. Carpenter, formerly widow of William Johnson, late private of Company E, Seventh Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers, applied for pension November 28, 1879, alleging that Johnson's death, from apoplexy, June 7, 1879, was due to an injury received by the concussion of a shell near Spottsylvania, Va., about May 10, 1864, and chronic diarrhea contracted in service.

The legal examiner, doubting the connection between the alleged injury and the fatal disease, the former having been shown by parol evidence only, submitted the case to the acting medical referee, Dr. Graham, who, under date of November 1, 1881, rendered the following opinion:

"If it can be shown that this man received concussion of the brain, or any injury to the brain, by the bursting of a shell while in the service, I believe then that it may be admitted that the apoplexy of which he died was a result of it."

The case was subsequently placed in the hands of special examiners and thoroughly examined as to its merits. That soldier was injured at the time and place and under the circumstances alleged is shown by the testimony of eyewitnesses to the injury. It is further shown by the reports of the several special examiners who had charge of the case at different times that ever after the injury soldier was suffering from spells of dizziness and weakness of spine. This condition was aggravated by chronic diarrhea, from which soldier suffered during, since, and at date of discharge, as shown by the records of the Surgeon-General.

Dr. Duley testifies that he formed the soldier's acquaintance soon after he came out of the service and knew him intimately until a few months of his death. His physical condition was frail; was suffering from prostration of the nervous system; complained of pains in head and palpitation of the heart.

Dr. Russell testifies that he found soldier in a comatose state just before his death; that he died of apoplexy, which in his opinion was caused by the concussion or the albuminous state of the urine.

Special Examiner Barrett, in his second report on the case, says:

"After handling this claim a second time, I am inclined to view it more favorably than I did at first. I think it is established that claimant's husband was physically sound when he enlisted, and that from discharge to death he suffered from symptoms of the disease which killed him. The evidence also seems to establish the fact that he suffered from a shell concussion in the Army."

The case was finally returned to the Pension Bureau with the recommendation for its admission, in accordance with the opinion of the acting medical referee heretofore referred to. But upon submission to the present medical referee the claim was rejected on the ground that soldier's fatal disease, apoplexy, was not a result of shell concussion or any other cause incident to his Army service.

Your committee are inclined, however, to believe that the fatal disease is chargeable to the soldier's military service, and that some relief should be granted to such of his pensionable heirs as under the present circumstances would be entitled under the general laws should the Pension Bureau concede origin in the service. The widow having remarried and all but one child having passed the pensionable age, the bill under consideration must be returned to the House without further consideration, but in lieu thereof the committee begs leave to submit a substitute in behalf of the yet pensionable minor, Emma R., and ask that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY ROBINSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6759) granting a pension to Mary Robinson.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary Robinson, dependent mother of Andrew J. Robinson, late a member of Company C, Eighth New York Cavalry.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) is as follows:

Mary Robinson was the mother of Andrew J. Robinson, late a member of Company C, Eighth New York Cavalry.

The evidence shows that the son, Andrew, enlisted and was enrolled September 10, 1861, as a private in Company C, Eighth New York Cavalry, for three years. That he was killed in action near Amosville, Va., November 10, 1862, aged twenty years. The soldier was never married. He left surviving him his parents, Mary Robinson and Luther S. Robinson, her husband, who has since died.

Mrs. Robinson applied for a pension June 12, 1880, which was rejected on the ground only that the mother was not dependent upon her son at the time of his death. The evidence also shows that the son sent money to his parents while in the service.

It also appears that Mrs. Robinson is now and has been for years poor and without means for her support, and the committee believe that this comes clearly within the rule, that dependent mothers whose sons were killed in action, and who are now poor and needy, should receive this just acknowledgment of the sacrifices they have made, and do therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. NUTTING. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to call up for present consideration House bill 4580.

Mr. MATSON. I must demand the regular order.

Mr. NUTTING. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that objection, and permit a statement.

Mr. MATSON. I do not wish to be discourteous to the gentleman from New York, but in my opinion the regular order is absolutely necessary to the proper transaction of this business at these night sessions.

Mr. NUTTING. Allow me to explain. I have been for two evenings where my name has been first on the list——

Mr. MATSON. It is utterly useless, permit me to say to the gentleman, for I must insist upon the regular order.

Mr. NUTTING. Allow me to state this, that although my name has been first on the list to be recognized, I have yielded to other gentlemen, and when I did get an opportunity to secure the passage of the bill some of the committee objected.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana has demanded the regular order, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

ANGERONE P. COLE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 815) granting a pension to Angerone P. Cole, mother of George H. Cole, private Company B, Twenty-fourth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Angerone P. Cole, mother of George H. Cole, private Company B, Twenty-fourth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) is as follows:

The Senate Committee on Pensions made the following report in the case, which your committee adopt as their own:

"The claimant asks for a pension as the dependent mother of George P. Cole, who was a sergeant in Company B, Twenty-fourth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers, who was wounded and taken prisoner at the battle of Stone River, and died in hospital at Annapolis, Md., February 18, 1863.

"The relationship of the mother to the son and the non-marriage of the latter are satisfactorily proved. The ground of rejection is non-dependence; that the husband earned $700 in 1863, $936 in 1864, and that he owned a house valued at $1,200, which increased in value to $3,000. It is shown by good evidence that the son lived at home and aided in supporting his father and mother before he enlisted; that he contributed from his earnings to the purchase of their small cottage. This house, of course, gave them no revenue. Being in Milwaukee, it was heavily taxed, increasing in the assessed valuation until in 1884 the tax was $449.

"It also appears from the sworn statements of respectable witnesses that the father and mother were poor; that both were dependent upon the son, for the father was in broken health, physically incapacitated for manual labor; that when the son died the expense of taking his body to Milwaukee and the cost of burial were borne by neighbors and friends; that after the death of this son two other sons, who have since died, helped the old people.

"The witness who testifies to the father's earnings in 1863-'64 is Chauncey Simonds. He seems to be a candid witness, but his statements on this point are a little inconsistent. He says for these years he earned, respectively, $700 and $900, and to this he adds:

"'During these years Mr. Cole was confined to his house for several weeks by illness; in the year 1863 he was more or less disabled and laid up with rheumatism and neuralgia.'

"Valentine Zimmerman testifies that during these years the father was very ill, not expected to recover, and it is affiant's belief that his health the past twenty-three years prevented him to a greater or less extent from earning means of support.

"The inference is that there is a possible mistake in the computation of his earnings during those years, or else that his employer, from sympathy and kindness, and in view of the heavy tax on their home, was very liberal to him.

"Dr. Carlston, of Milwaukee, swears to have treated the father for fifteen years; has known him twenty, and that he has suffered from disqualifying ailments during all of this time.

"The witness Simonds, who employed him, speaking of his long absence from work, says, being a good man he was favored, and his place kept for him.

"The evidence amply substantiates the dependence of the mother. She is now seventy years old; not only dependent, but needy, and the committee regard her case as one in which it is not only proper, but the duty of the Government to extend the small relief she asks.

"The bill is reported favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass."

Present dependence having been accepted as good ground for special legislation in this class of cases by previous Congresses, your committee are of opinion that the relief asked for should be granted, and therefore report favorably on the accompanying bill and ask that it do pass.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt that this is a meritorious bill, and that all of the bills reported to the House by this committee are meritorious; but I have waited here for eight years to have a bill reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions that I have introduced. During the last six years the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, as I understand it—and if I am wrong I wish to be informed of the fact and will take it back—has had charge of the bills that I have introduced. Not one of them has been reported to this House either favorably or unfavorably.

Mr. MORSE. From Indiana?

Mr. STEELE. Yes, from Indiana. An inquiry addressed to many Republicans on this side of the House has developed the fact, from every one of them from whom I have heard, that not a single one of these bills has been reported, and every one has been placed in his hands.

I believe that this kind of legislation is wrong. The Committee on Military Affairs, of which I have the honor to be a member, has found in the investigation of its business a great many cases private in their nature, petitions for private relief, and instead of making a point on any given case we have reported general bills that now cover—or will when the bill now before the Senate passes—what we believe to be every meritorious case. Over six hundred bills have come to us at this session. We do not say that all of these are meritorious, but if they are meritorious the general law framed by us will provide a remedy for them, and the meritorious cases will be relieved. I believe that that should be the object of the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Six years ago I introduced a bill asking that the soldier who went into the war alongside of his neighbor who was wounded, had an arm shot off for instance, while the first soldier served throughout the war and came out physically able to do the work that was necessary to maintain his family, but who after serving all through the war was poor and unable to get along on the wealth that was accumulated by his more fortunate neighbor who staid at home, but had to go to work, probably in a saw-mill, and the very first day he went there to work he accidentally falls and has his arm or leg sawed off, should have Government relief as well as the other. The soldier who was wounded in the first battle of the war, under the present law, is allowed to receive a pension from the date of his disability. His neighbor goes on and participates in twenty battles, serves to the end of the war, and comes out poor and dependent, and, as I have said, meets with some accident by which he is disabled, and becomes dependent upon his neighbors' help and the charity of the public, but receives no recognition from the Government because he did not happen to have his arm shot off in a battle during the war. Now, I believe that in such a case as that, a man who has served his country well and suffers such a misfortune, becoming disabled, is as much entitled to the care of the Government as one who had his arm or leg shot off or was otherwise disabled in the first battle of the war.

There is a bill now before that honorable committee looking to the care of such men. They have been sleeping on it now for four or six long weeks. Why do they not, instead of employing the four or five clerks they have on that committee on reports of these little private bills—why do they not take up that general bill and bring it before the House that we can vote upon it?

I believe every disabled soldier should be cared for. I believe further it would be a just measure to say to the soldiers and sailors of this country, "We will give you a pension according to the services you performed." That is not done.

I have sat here night after night while those gentlemen who were specially interested were asking for the passage of these private bills, and I have allowed them to go through. Meanwhile gentlemen shut their eyes and pay no attention to the necessity for general legislation, and I want to say to my colleague, who I may say is a very prominent candidate for the position of governor of my State, and the chances look favorably to his election——

A MEMBER. His nomination.

Mr. STEELE. Yes, his nomination. Thank God for the correction. [Laughter.] I want to say to my colleague that if he seeks to make his election sure, or if he wants to make it problematical even, he had better go into some of this general legislation.

I am not going to oppose this bill, but I tell you that in four weeks from now unless some general bills come from that committee, if there is not a quorum of this House present no private bill shall go through if my objection is strong enough to prevent it.

General legislation is what we want from this committee. Having said this much——

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois (in his seat). I waive all further objection. [Laughter].

Mr. STEELE. Yes; having said this much I waive all further objection.

Mr. MATSON. My colleague from Indiana is very much mistaken in several statements he has made. Some might be attributed to a lack of memory. He has undertaken to state the facts as to our experience which has run together in this House for some seven years; and he says I have not reported any bills for him. The gentleman is mistaken about that. I think I can remind him of one case he pressed on my attention, only one. That was the case of a man who had had his arm shot off, William Boone by name. The bill passed the House and was vetoed by the President.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Lowry's bill was taken up and mine left.

Mr. MATSON. While the bill of my colleague [Mr. STEELE] was the only bill pending I pressed it on the committee, and over my protest an adverse report was ordered in a previous Congress. I always believed that man was entitled to a pension. If the gentleman remembers having spoken to me with reference to bills of his which were in my hands I would be glad to have him remind me of the particular bill and give the circumstances. It ought to be known to every member of the House that with the number of bills in the hands of that committee it is impossible to report all of them. It is the rule—I will not say it is a rule without exception—not to report bills unless they are pressed by the members who introduced them. I think my colleague is well informed on that proposition.

That is the fact, as I understand, in relation to my colleague's bills. If he has any bills he desires to have pressed in the House and placed before the committee, and if he will come to me and state the case, I will say to my colleague if there is any shadow of ground on which a favorable report can be based he will have as much attention as any other gentleman has ever had. When he says his colleagues have informed him that their cases have not been reported, I beg to state to him that there are on the Calendar bills introduced by each one of his Republican colleagues, Mr. HOVEY, Mr. CHEADLE, and Mr. BROWNE. The first bill I reported in the last Congress was for General BROWNE. The first I reported in this Congress was in behalf of a person who lived in his district. Every one of those gentlemen has had his bills reported as impartially as any Democratic member of the House from Indiana.

Mr. STEELE. I stated every gentleman I had inquired of had so informed me. I alluded to Mr. OWEN, Mr. JOHNSTON, and Mr. WHITE.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. OWEN, I think, will bear me witness that I reported a bill for him this session, but adversely. It had no merit, and I could not report it any other way. I have tried to be as impartial as I could.

My colleague has spoken of the matter of general legislation, and says no general bills have been reported by the committee in this Congress. Mr. Chairman, we have reported a bill to increase the pension for deafness. We have reported a bill in relation to attorney's fees. We have reported a bill in relation to men wounded in battle who were enlisted in the militia force. Five different general bills have been reported.

Here is the Senate bill to pension men for disabilities not incurred in the service. That has been in our hands for about ten days; and during that time all the time the committee could devote to the consideration of that bill has been put in. The committee at its meeting to-day was occupied with the consideration of that bill. Important amendments have been made. The unanimous judgment of the committee was that some of the amendments were absolutely essential before the enactment of the law; and that if the bill had been enacted as the Senate provided there would have been a contradiction in terms that would have made it completely ineffective and inoperative.

The gentleman's complaint is not well founded. The Committee on Invalid Pensions is the hardest-worked committee in this House, and it has been quite as industrious as any member could demand that it should be. There has been no cessation of work. I repeat, the complaint of my colleague is not well founded. I apprehend that he perhaps belongs to the number of gentlemen who have come here to-night expecting to pass some particular bill—we know how that is; we know that we all have our preferences in reference to certain bills—and because he has not been able to reach it by an irregular operation, he has got a little miffed about it. If the gentleman wishes to disclaim it I yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. STEELE. If any gentleman, the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, or anybody else, will say that I have intimated that I want any particular bill passed, I will then say that I am mistaken. There is no bill that I know anything about on the Calendar; but I know that mine is not on the Calendar.

Mr. MATSON. Then, if the gentleman's bill is not on the Calendar, it is because he has never said a word to me about any bill.

Mr. STEELE. I supposed that introducing a bill in three Congresses in succession would entitle it to the attention of the committee without giving any special notice.

Mr. MATSON. Well, if the gentleman has been here so long and does not know that when a man has several hundred private bills on his hands he can hardly be expected to do justice to each particular bill within a limited time without having his attention called to it, he has been here to very little purpose.

Mr. STEELE. I supposed that when the bill had been introduced here for three successive Congresses that was sufficient evidence that there was a desire to have it taken up. I did not know that it was necessary to see the chairman or any member of the committee specially about it.

Mr. MATSON. I might retort upon my colleague in this way: I have introduced several bills which have been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, of which he is a member, and none of them have ever been reported except one.

Mr. NUTTING. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. NUTTING. I would like to know what this discussion has to do with the subject before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's point of order may be very well taken as a matter of fact, but it is not in the power of the Chair to control the course of debate.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, I think it is a question of privilege. [Laughter.]

A MEMBER. Regular order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana, the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, a question.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, so far as the Committee on Military Affairs is concerned, every bill that has been referred to me as a member of that committee has been reported.

Mr. NUTTING. Mr. Chairman, I desire to have my point of order decided. If I am right, I want to have it decided that I am right; if I am wrong, I want to have it decided that I am wrong. I say that it makes no difference whatever with reference to our business here to-night what the Military Committee has done or has failed to do. We are here for the purpose of considering the pension bills which are upon this Calendar, and not the action or non-action of any particular committee of this House about bills that are not on this Calendar.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. NUTTING. Mr. Chairman, I desire to have my point of order decided.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has decided that a gentleman when recognized has the right to discuss any proposition relating to pension questions. That has been the universal rule, so far as the Chair is advised, at these pension sessions. Of course, as to the propriety or impropriety, the expediency or inexpediency, of the discussion, the Chair must leave that to the judgment of members.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] a question.

Mr. FORD. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Chairman, what I have said in reference to these matters has been said in response to the remarks of my colleague [Mr. STEELE]. I have no desire whatever to occupy the time in this way. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIAMS] for a question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to ask the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions how many bills are now pending before that committee.

Mr. MATSON. I can not state definitely; but there are somewhere between three thousand and four thousand.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The old soldiers are getting somewhat impatient about these pension bills. I have no special remarks to make with regard to the diligence of the committee. I have no criticisms of that kind to offer. On the contrary, I believe they have been working hard, but the applicants for pensions can not conceive why it is that their bills are not acted upon, and for that reason I wanted to ask the gentleman this question, and get his answer into the RECORD, as some sort of excuse for the delay. I understand the gentleman to say there are between three thousand and four thousand bills pending before that committee.

Mr. MATSON. Yes. There have been between three hundred and four hundred reported, which is an average of about fifteen to each member of the committee. I know I have reported a large number myself, and I think every member of the committee has done his full share. I state the case very mildly when I say that between three hundred and four hundred have been reported.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Chairman will permit me a remark, I think there are nearly two hundred general bills before the committee.

Mr. MATSON. About two hundred.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, this bill will be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

BETSEY MANNSFIELD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 809) granting a pension to Betsey Mannsfield.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Betsey Mannsfield, mother of Franklin J. Mannsfield, late a private in Company I of the Fifth Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The facts in the case are set forth in the report of Senate Committee on Pensions, which your committee desire to adopt as their own, in words as follows:

"The claimant is Betsey Mannsfield, mother of Franklin Mannsfield, a private in Company I, Fifth Wisconsin Infantry, who died at Fairfax, Va., November 14, 1861.

"From the evidence it appears that the soldier was a mere youth at the time of his enlistment; that he enlisted contrary to his father's wishes; that his death affected his father very seriously, and that he became and remained dissipated and reckless. It is also shown by the evidence that soon after his son's death he was seriously injured by a fall; that his mind was affected, wholly unfitting him for business or manual labor.

"The claim is rejected on the ground that he was the owner of considerable land, which was purchased at an early period, but it does not appear that it was productive or that much of it was improved. Immediately after his son's death he sold a horse belonging to the soldier, and which he had left at home. The price obtained was $50, and the money was used for their support. While felling timber, prior to 1861, he was struck on the head, and in addition to his other peculiarities he became deranged on the subject of religion and persisted in exciting discussions. It is affirmed by reputable witnesses that the net income in 1861 from his farm and shop did not exceed $150, and some years it was less.

"It is in evidence that prior to the son's enlistment the father was subject to temporary mental incapacity; that the claimant has earned her own living by toil and management. In 1883 their possessions were reduced to 40 acres, mortgaged to affiant, O. D. Bishop, for $600, two cows, and a pig. The father, years back, owned more land, but it had been sold from time to time to pay debts incurred in a reckless way and from which there was no escape. There is no contradictory evidence that is of any value, and it is apparent that the mother is very old, very needy; that she has bravely struggled to maintain herself, and that it is time she had relief.

"The bill is reported favorably with a recommendation that it do pass."

Concurring in the conclusions reached by the Senate committee, we respectfully return the accompanying bill and likewise ask that it do pass.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I listened with some interest to the complaints of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] here awhile ago about the neglect which the Committee on Invalid Pensions have shown towards the men who have lost their limbs in saw-mills. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, we have not got through with the regular Army crowd yet. It will be time enough to come to the saw-mill crowd when we get all those who have lost their arms or legs in the war fixed up. [Laughter.]

I do not think the gentleman from Indiana has any right to complain of anybody for neglecting to comply with his request about pension legislation here. He, sir, is the first and the only man in this House to whom I ever made application to help me with a pension case; and I have never heard of his raising his voice yet in behalf of that application, although he pretends to be one of my best friends, and, I believe, would be willing to see me elected governor of Mississippi. [Laughter.]

When I first came here, sir, I went to the gentleman from Indiana (and I heard him pressing the saw-mill question here then) and told him about one of my constituents who had lost an arm, not in the regular service it is true, but in a better service, I believe, than the saw-mill business; a man who, down in Mississippi, was performing on the night before the election the patriotic duty of firing the cannon to notify the colored people that we were going to have a fair election. [Laughter.] Now, Mr. Chairman, that has been two years ago; and although the gentleman gets angry here because the saw-mill people have never been taken care of, and although he has been pressing me, as a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, to help him out with the Little Miamis down there in Indiana, yet who has ever heard him raise his voice here in behalf of that poor cripple down in Mississippi?

A MEMBER. The gun exploded?

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Yes, sir; the gun burst and blew off his arm.

Mr. STEELE. Let me interrupt you a minute. It was not the one-armed man you came to me about. Did you not state to me that a friend of yours who had been drafted was scared so badly that his health had been poorly ever since? [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. No, no; that was an Indiana man. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, if we could spare the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions from this House (which we could not very well do), it would be very gratifying to us all to see him elected governor of Indiana.

But, sir, in all seriousness, is it not about time that we should cease to trade off the votes of this House and the money of the people of this country in political maneuverings to have people elected to any place? I do not think gentlemen ought to get up here and threaten members with what will be the result in elections if we do not come to time in certain pension legislation. Gentlemen ought not to get up on this floor and intimate, "If you come up all right on the subject of pensions, although your other politics may be bad, we might afford to elect you governor or Congressman, or something of that sort."

Now, if the gentleman from Indiana will just possess his soul in patience, let us pick up this Calendar and look to see whether the Committee on Invalid Pensions is doing its duty. Why, sir, as much interested as I am in this subject of pensions, I could get along with half the bills they are reporting here. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, this bill will be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

DELIA U. PECK.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (S. 803) granting a pension to Delia U. Peck.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Delia U. Peck, widow of Thomas S. Peck, late private in Company (unassigned) of Twenty-second Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

They are satisfied from an examination of the report of the Senate Committee on Pensions in this case, which they adopt as part of their report, that this is a meritorious case, and that when the Government by its strong arm, by means of the draft, forces a man into its service, after having had him examined by its own selected agents and pronounced sound and fit for military duty, ought to be estopped from subsequently claiming that any disability existed at the time he was forced into military service. They recommend the passage of the bill.

"[Senate Report No. 198, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

"The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 803) granting a pension to Delia U. Peck, have examined the same, and report:

"The claimant is the widow of Thomas Peck. She filed her application in 1875. Her husband was a drafted private in the Twenty-second Wisconsin Infantry. He was drafted October 3, 1864; discharged May 17, 1865; died August 22, 1867. The widow's claim was rejected by the Pension Office, and also on appeal to the Secretary of the Interior. It is stated, and it appears to be a fact, that the man died from the internal discharge of an abscess. The ground of rejection is that the abscess existed before he was drafted; and, again, it is assumed that it originated after discharge.

"There is much that is contradictory and inconsistent in the decisions as compared with the facts. There have been several special examinations, in the report of one of which it is said:

"'The Government should not set up a claim of prior unsoundness, because the man did not palm himself off as sound to get in—he did not want to go in, but was taken against his will, was drafted, was examined by the Government's doctor and pronounced sound.'

"And the special examiner adds:

"'I believe the claim meritorious. The soldier went in sound, and was unsound when he was discharged, and remained so until he died.'

"The object appears to be to defeat the claim, first by assuming that the abscess existed before he was drafted, and then by claiming that it did not appear until after his discharge. In the opinion of the committee it is not material which of these two assumptions is the correct one. If the abscess existed when he was drafted, the Army doctors pronounced otherwise, put him at a soldier's hard duty, and precipitated a fatal ending. If it did not exist before he was drafted, it is inferably due to the service. The Government is too powerful an organization to resort to doubtful expedients to deprive a poor, suffering woman of a few dollars a month to keep her from the poorhouse.

"The bill is reported favorably with a recommendation that it do pass."

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I have no disposition to oppose this bill. I merely wish to say to my colleague [Mr. MATSON], the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, that I do not think he is right in taking the position that before bills shall be taken up by his committee the member who has introduced, perhaps, ten bills to pension ten different men, the cases being equally meritorious, shall come before the committee and select two or three of those bills and ask that they shall be acted on to the exclusion of the others. Bills which are introduced here ought to stand alike before that committee, and should be acted upon on their merits, without requiring Representatives here to select the case of this or that man, to the exclusion of others whose applications are perhaps equally meritorious.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a few words of explanation and self-vindication as a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. As an illustration of the manner in which bills are thrust before the faces of members of that committee, I want to mention one or two cases. A pension agent here in the city of Washington stuck under my nose three bills and asked me to get the papers in those cases and make a report upon them. I went to the gentleman who had introduced the bills and asked him whether he knew anything about those cases. He said he did not. I asked him whether he had ever examined the papers in those cases. He said he had not. I asked him whether he knew anything about the merits of those applications. He said he did not. Then I said to him: "If you will give me the number of any bill of yours which is in my hands as a member of that committee, I will send to the office and get the papers in that case; and at any time you may fix I will meet you in the committee-room, will sit down with you and examine the papers, and we will confer in regard to making a report. But," said I, "I give you notice now that I never will send for the papers in any case unless you have interest enough in it to call my attention to it.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

Mr. SAWYER. This member had introduced those bills—there were several of them—upon the mere request of a pension agent here in the city of Washington, who comes to me and asks me to examine and report a bill when the man who has introduced it cares nothing for it, or at least does not care enough about it to inform himself as to whether there is any merit in the case.

In one instance, one of these pension agents not only called my attention to a bill which had been referred to me as a member of that committee, but he stuck under my nose the draught of a report which he or one of his clerks had prepared, and asked me to present it as the report of the committee. I want to say, as a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, that I am not the agent of any pension attorneys here in the city of Washington. They come to any one of the members of the House and request him to introduce their bill. The member knows nothing about it. He hands it to a page, and the page places it in a box prepared for that purpose. He does not send for the papers, nor does he examine into the facts of the case.

Now, as one of the members of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, I will say that I have not time to do what ought to be done in reference to these cases by the members themselves. But I have been disposed to do the very best I could in complying with the requests of members. I have obliged one member in twenty-seven cases, two in seventeen each, one in twenty, and so on. It will be seen that if all the members were as prolific as those to whom I refer it would impose upon me the making of some two hundred reports.

I can not sit down and spend a week's time in examining a case when the member himself who introduced the bill does not attempt to know anything about the papers, nor does he seem to care anything about it. I am always willing to do what I can to oblige members in reference to bills which they may introduce when they are themselves disposed to sit down and give me the benefit of the knowledge they may have on the case they present.

There is no committee of this House which makes more reports on cases presented to it than this very Committee on Invalid Pensions. Every case presented to it with the papers is taken up and considered. But if there is any member upon the floor who thinks he can make more reports, I, for one, will be happy to resign my place to him and let him do it.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think it is necessary for any member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions to stand up on the floor of this House and defend that committee. It is as well known to the members of the House as any fact can be that it is the hardest-worked committee in the House, and that its labor is of the most disinterested character, for it is uniformly in behalf of some individual who is not a resident of the district represented by the member of the committee to whom the case is referred.

I have had some experience in connection with pensions. I have appeared before the Committee on Invalid Pensions; and I do not think it is out of the way for any member when he introduces a bill to go to that committee and present the facts for the proper understanding of the case by the committee. I only rose to say I thought it altogether out of place for the members of that committee to defend themselves; they need no defense. [Applause.]

Mr. STEELE. I did not intend to say that the Committee on Invalid Pensions did not do a great deal of work. I know they do a great deal of work; and if I said anything to create any other impression, I take it back.

I merely meant to emphasize the fact that in my judgment we should have more general legislation, so as to avoid the necessity of having so many special bills coming here session after session.

So far as the introduction of bills by attorneys is concerned, I plead guilty to having introduced one bill presented to me by an attorney of this city. I did so after writing to the man whether he wished the bill to be introduced. I have had more than one hundred applications from attorneys asking me to introduce bills for them, but I have universally replied, with this one exception, that I was not an assistant attorney, and would only introduce bills for my constituents when they asked me to do so.

There was no objection, and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

IDA M. WELTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1784) granting a pension to Ida M. Welton.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ida M. Welton, only surviving child of George C. Welton, late a soldier in the Sixth Regiment Vermont Volunteers.

The amendment of the committee was read, as follows:

After the word "volunteer," in line 5, add the words "and pay her a pension of $18 per month."

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1784) granting a pension to Ida M. Welton, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

Accompanying the bill comes the report of the Senate Committee on Pensions thereon, which your committee take the privilege of adopting as their own.

[Senate Report No. 114, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Ida M. Welton, have examined the same, and report:

"A bill was reported at the last session of Congress for the relief of the petitioner, and passed a short time before its close. The following favorable report, which is adopted by the committee, accompanied the bill:

"'The petitioner is the only child of George C. Welton, who was a soldier in the Sixth Regiment of Vermont Volunteers in the late war. He died on the 25th day of December, 1865, leaving a widow and this child without any means of support. The widow drew a pension until the date of her remarriage, which was September 1, 1868, and $2 per month for her daughter until the latter was sixteen years of age. She is now twenty-nine years of age, and is in almost a totally helpless condition. Her affidavit and that of her physician and others are herewith appended, showing her condition.

"'Her step-father and mother are poor, and dependent upon their labor for their support.'

"Your committee think that this is a very worthy and just claim, and therefore report back the petition with an original bill.

"I, Ida M. Welton, of Groton, in the county of Caledonia and State of Vermont, on oath depose and say:

"That my father, George C. Welton, was a private soldier in the late war, Company C, Sixth Regiment Vermont Volunteers; he was discharged from the service March 31, A. D. 1863, and died December 25, A. D. 1865. I further say that I drew a pension from the time of my father's death till I was sixteen years old, and my mother drew a pension from the time of his death to the time of her remarriage, which was September 1, A. D. 1868.

"I further say that I am my father's only child, and was seven years old when he died, leaving me without means of support, except upon the daily labor of my mother. She subsequently married a poor man, upon whom I now rely for support. I was taken sick when I was sixteen years old, or the spring before I was sixteen, with scrofula. I kept gradually growing worse till six years ago, when I had the rheumatic fever, and have been unable to walk a step since, and have wholly lost the use of my fingers and elbows, and am unable to perform any labor for my support. Dr. Jackson, of Bane, Vt., prescribed for me, to whom the Pension Department is referred.

"I am now living with my step-father and mother, who is now fifty-four years old, and if she should be taken away I would be left wholly without a home, as I have no relatives on my father's side, and I can not even move from my chair without help.

"GEORGE W. KENNEDY.

"The bill is reported with a recommendation that it do pass."

The case seems one of great merit, and following the established precedent in this class of cases, your committee likewise report favorably on the accompanying bill, and ask that it do pass; amended, however, by adding after the word "volunteer," in line 5, the words "and pay her a pension at the rate of $18 per month."

Mr. PETERS. I wish to take a moment, Mr. Chairman, to emphasize what has been brought out here to-night, and that is, that any soldier who writes to a pension agent in this city and asks that pension agent to present a bill to the member of Congress from his district for the purpose of having it introduced simply prejudices Congress against his bill. I wish to place that fact on record, so that soldiers, not only in my district, but throughout the United States may know that whenever they pay a dollar to a pension agent in the city of Washington to secure the passage of their bills they merely throw that much money away.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, I think that is running the thing a little too far. I think it is quite well known to the soldiers throughout the country who apply for pensions that our laws recognize attorneys to prosecute such claims before the Pension Bureau, whether they live in Washington or elsewhere. I speak of the prosecution of claims before the Pension Bureau.

A MEMBER. Do not take up so much time.

Mr. TAULBEE. I think I have an hour. If members of Congress are willing that claimants should be prejudiced—if I understand the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS]—by the simple fact they have asked some attorney to prepare a bill and ask their member to present it for them, I think they do a great injustice to the claimant. If an attorney in Washington, in the neighborhood of where the claimant lives, has been instrumental in preparing a case for Congress or for the Pension Bureau, I do not think that is any good reason why any member of the House should vote against that bill if it has merit.

So far as the payment of fees to attorneys for the prosecution of pension claims before Congress is concerned, there is no law to authorize it that I know of; and if I knew of the existence of such a law I should be in favor of its immediate repeal. This House needs no attorneys to prosecute claims. If the attorney should make and file a brief, it does not facilitate the consideration of the claim.

But I see no good reason why a claim should be prejudiced because of the simple fact that a soldier has been in communication with an attorney in the prosecution of his claim before the House or the Department, and by reason of that fact is led into the belief that it would facilitate his case in Congress to ask the assistance of such an attorney; or that a member of the House ought therefore to oppose the bill, and vote against it, if, as I said before, it has real merit. I had intended to say this much on this point and no more.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in reference to the bill which has just been read, and the consideration of which we are about to enter upon, I desire to say that I am not in sympathy with that kind of legislation. I undertake to say it is a discrimination in favor of individual children of deceased soldiers that is not extended to their widows. We have a general law that gives to the widow of a soldier who lost his life in the service, or died as a consequence of it, a pension of $12 a month.

We rate their pensions arbitrarily, regardless of their physical or financial condition; and this bill is in the line of some other bills passed during this Congress. It undertakes to give to the children of the deceased soldier a greater pension than that given to the widows of soldiers under similar circumstances.

I believe it has been heretofore developed, in the discussion of these bills at the Friday evening sessions, that the Committee on Invalid Pensions have considered that this is fair and proper legislation. I would simply say, without intending to cast a reflection upon the committee, for I believe it is as fair, honest, and cautious a committee as could be organized, that if such is intended to be the course of legislation upon this subject, it should be made to give equal relief to all. And I think it quite appropriate, if this kind of legislation is to be carried out, to pass a general bill, authorizing the Commissioner of Pensions to place all such persons upon the roll at $18 a month. The children of all soldiers who died in the war, or as a consequence of their service, which children are now destitute of means of support and unable to labor, should have a pension of $18 a month if this character of legislation is to prevail.

Now, I think it is well known to all the members of the House that private pension bills are introduced only at the request of the claimants or their friends, when the attention of a member of Congress is called to the fact; and doubtless it will be conceded by all that throughout the whole country there are afflicted children of soldiers who properly come within the same line of legislation as this bill proposes, but who perhaps, in view of this precedent, may not hear of it for ten or twenty years.

They are in ignorance of the precedent the committee is now setting; and I say that because of their want of information in this direction they ought not to be discriminated against. Therefore it is rather in favor of that class that I make these suggestions than in opposition to this or any other bill.

These bills appeal to our sympathies very strongly; but I want whoever reported the bill to give us, if possible, some reason, if you please, why the widow of a soldier destitute of any other means than the pension she is receiving, and unable to labor for her own support and who is also helpless pecuniarily and physically—why she ought not to have a pension of $18 a month as well as the child of a deceased soldier who is entitled to a pension on the same ground.

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Chairman, I made the report in this case, and I do not know that it is necessary that I should say a word. I do not wish to occupy the time of the House unless it is important to do so. I will, however, take the time of the committee to call attention to a single item of evidence contained in this case.

This soldier died, leaving a widow and this one child. Permit me now to describe the condition of that child, as appears from the evidence in this case, which is undisputed. This child drew a pension until she was sixteen years of age, and then, under our law, it was cut off. Dr. Eastman testifies:

I am Ida Welton's family physician; have known her all her life, and was well acquainted with her father; knew him before and after his enlistment. Said Ida Welton has been an invalid for the last ten or twelve years; her disease has been scrofula and rheumatism; has had two runs of inflammatory rheumatism, besides being in pain and distress with it most of the time. Has had ulceration of the glands of the neck and axilla, and is at present very much out of shape from contractions and rigidity of the muscles in and around the affected parts.

With the exception of the hip and shoulder joints, all the others are either anchylosed or entirely out of joint and useless. Fingers are in such a shape that she is unable to put on or take off her clothes or to hold the knife and fork steady, and it is with much difficulty that she feeds herself. Is totally unable to do any kind of work or to earn anything with which to support herself. She was left poor, and at present is without any means of support, but lives with her mother, who has, up to this time, taken care of her, but she is getting up in years and is also poor. If she should be taken away, Miss Welton must go upon the town and become a pauper. She is a worthy person, and is in good standing in the church and respected by those who know her.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that in reference to the daughter and only child of a soldier who is in the condition described by that affidavit, lying upon her back perfectly helpless, a grateful country owes it to the memory of the soldier-father that the daughter should be provided for.

Mr. TAULBEE. I would like to ask the gentleman why it is that the committee has not provided for the granting of similar pensions to this to all children of soldiers under like conditions?

Mr. SAWYER. I can not answer except in this way: We have been trying—I have not had much experience in this House—but in the last House we did try, as the gentleman knows well, to secure some general legislation which would relieve the committee from much of this labor. We have a bill now pending on the Calendar of this House which will relieve the committee of one-half of this labor should it become a law, and I do not know why this has not been done before. All the evidence in this case of the poor unfortunate, bed-ridden daughter of a soldier appeals to the House of Representatives, representing the people of this country, for relief in her suffering. That is all I know, and I am in favor of answering her prayer.

Mr. MATSON. I will say, in reply to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE], that these bills apply to dependent insane and imbecile children over sixteen years of age, and there are not enough of them to justify making a general law. A general law would be subject to a good deal of abuse. All the relief necessary can be had by special legislation.

Mr. TAULBEE. I would like also, while the chairman of the committee is in that line, to have him answer, if he will, why it is there is not some provision had for grading the pensions of widows of soldiers who are afflicted. If we are to enter upon the theory of giving any relations of a soldier pensions in consequence of their affliction, then why discriminate against the widow of a soldier?

Mr. MATSON. I will answer the gentleman's question with pleasure and as briefly as possible. A widow of a soldier is pensioned according to the rank of her late husband. The widow of an enlisted soldier receives $12, of a second lieutenant $15, of a first lieutenant $18, and so on. The widow is pensioned because of her husband's death; it is on that account alone and not because of disability.

The $18 in this bill is an arbitrary rate fixed by the committee, and I remember why it was so fixed. Most of these cases, indeed I may say all of them, are those of children over sixteen years of age, invalids and afflicted by insanity, imbecility, etc., persons utterly unable to transact their own business and manage their own affairs. The $6 additional are put on to pay the expense of guardianship. I hope that explanation is satisfactory.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions a question. It has been the usage for several evenings, after the bills on the Calendar had been called in their order until nine or half-past nine, to permit members who were here to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of such bills as they might call up. Now, the inquiry I desire to make is this: Whether it is proposed that the opportunity of asking such unanimous consent shall not be allowed at any stage of the session, or whether this usage which has been followed heretofore may be continued?

Mr. MATSON. I will say to the gentleman from Kansas that the reason I objected to the irregular proceeding of calling up bills by unanimous consent is, first, because the officers of the House complain that that practice makes it very difficult for them to keep the record, and mistakes are more liable to follow in relation to the action of the House.

I regret my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL], is not present. I will state that it was agreed, at his suggestion, that on these evenings the committee itself would require the regular order to be followed, in order to obviate any complaints of gentlemen that they had not had bills called up. We agreed also that we would require the reports to be read. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL] and all the committee agreed to that.

More than that, it was the judgment of the committee that if twenty or twenty-five bills were considered in an evening that was fair work for one evening; that, on the other hand, when we came here and, if I may use the expression, railroaded bills through the House we were subjecting ourselves to criticism, and very just criticism.

That has been the action of the committee, not formally taken but agreed to all around; and I think we should adhere to that mode of conducting business. I believe it is better for the pensioners and better for the public service, and I do not think the House ought to subject itself to the criticism of passing these bills without proper consideration.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that there is nothing before the committee; all this is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana another question.

Mr. KEAN. I call for the regular order.

FRANCES ANNE PYNE RICKETTS.

The Clerk read the title of the next pension bill on the Private Calendar, as follows:

A bill (S. 393) for the relief of Frances Anne Pyne Ricketts.

Mr. SAWYER. I have been directed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to ask the House to have this bill referred back to the committee. I had no opportunity during the session of the House to-day to make that request. I now ask that this bill be reported back to the House with a recommendation that it be referred back to the committee. I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] desires to say something about it.

Mr. RANDALL. I dislike very much to make any suggestion contrary to the wish of the Committee on Invalid Pensions in relation to this matter, because I know the suggestion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SAWYER] is of a friendly nature. But I think a word of explanation may obviate the purpose which the gentleman from New York has in view.

As early in the session as I was able to do so I introduced into this House a bill granting a pension to this lady. That bill went to the Committee on Invalid Pensions as soon as it was appointed, and in due course it came up and was fairly and fully considered. In the mean time a like bill had been introduced in the Senate by the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS].

That bill was passed by the Senate and came to this House. The Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House reported it back with an amendment reducing the amount. Subsequently I appeared before that committee and requested a rehearing of the case. The committee gave it a rehearing, and upon a review of the case the committee, acting on the bill which I had introduced, concurred with the substance of the Senate bill.

Now, if this bill is recommitted an injury will be done with reference to the priority of this claimant on the Calendar, and, in view of the concurrent action by the committees of the two Houses as to what should be done in the case, if this Senate bill should now be taken up and a motion made (I will make the motion) to non-concur in the first recommendation of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, the bill can be passed.

A MEMBER. We can vote that recommendation down.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The bill has not been read yet. It is not before the House.

Mr. SAWYER. So far as I am personally concerned, I have no objection to the course suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL]. I do not wish to delay the passage of the bill at all.

Mr. RANDALL. I would not object to the other course if this case could keep the place on the Calendar that it has now.

Mr. SAWYER. At the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] I withdraw my request.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The bill was read. as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll of the United States the name of Frances Anne Pyne Ricketts, widow of James B. Ricketts, late a major-general in the United States Army, retired, and to pay her a pension of $100 per month, to take effect from and after the passage of this act, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would advise the committee that the report in this case is very long, so that it will not be possible to conclude the reading of it and get back into the House and pass the bills already disposed of by the committee by the hour fixed for adjournment—half past ten o'clock.

Mr. MATSON. I move that the committee now rise. So far as I can ascertain there is no pretense that Mrs. Ricketts is entitled to any pension at all. Her husband died retired, I believe. She is not pensionable.

Mr. RANDALL. She gets $30 a month now.

Mr. MATSON. She does?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes.

Mr. MATSON. This bill does not say so.

Mr. RANDALL. I know the fact, however.

Mr. MATSON. This bill proposes to put her on the pension-roll at $100 per month. I suggest that it be taken up the first thing at the next pension session. I think it is likely to produce some discussion.

Mr. RANDALL. I think not. The committees of both Houses have reported it favorably.

The question was taken on the motion that the committee rise; and the Chairman declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

A MEMBER. I call for a division.

Mr. RANDALL. If there is a persistent effort or a general desire to adjourn, I will not obstruct it. If there is any doubt in the mind of the gentleman [Mr. MATSON] as to whether this widow is on the pension-roll or not, inquiry will determine that.

Mr. MATSON. The Chair has stated that the report in this case can not be read and the pending bills passed within the time at our disposal this evening.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not wish to force this bill to-night.

The CHAIRMAN. A division was called for by a gentleman on the left. The question is on the motion that the committee do now rise.

Mr. PERKINS. If this bill is not passed can we not run on for fifteen minutes more?

Mr. MATSON. The Chair has stated that we can not finish by half past 10 o'clock.

Mr. PERKINS. That is, if we consider this bill.

A MEMBER. Regular order.

The question was taken on the motion that the committee rise; and it was rejected—ayes 12, noes 16.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the report upon the pending bill.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report. After a portion of it had been read,

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, in view of the hour fixed for adjournment, half past 10 o'clock, I fear the reading of this report in full at this time might delay a number of other pension cases, and I therefore move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and, Mr. MCMILLIN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. DOCKERY reported that the Committee of the Whole House had, according to order, had under consideration the pension bills on the Private Calendar, and had directed him to report to the House sundry bills, with various recommendations.

HOUSE BILLS PASSED.

House bills of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole House without amendment, were severally ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 428) granting a pension to William B. Johnson;

A bill (H. R. 5118) granting a pension to Theodore Gardner;

A bill (H. R. 4104) granting a pension to Mahala Dexter;

A bill (H. R. 818) granting a pension to Sarah E. Pribble;

A bill (H. R. 6812) granting an increase of pension to Stephen Thurston;

A bill (H. R. 7856) granting a pension to Emma R. Johnson; and

A bill (H. R. 6759) granting a pension to Mary Robinson.

House bills of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole House with amendments, were taken up, the amendments severally agreed to, the bills as amended ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were respectively read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 6761) for the relief of James H. Orr; and

A bill (H. R. 3839) granting a pension to Mrs Hettie K. Painter.

SENATE BILLS PASSED.

Senate bills of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole House without amendment, were severally ordered to a third reading, and were accordingly read the third time and passed:

A bill (S. 404) for the relief of Margaret S. Murray;

A bill (S. 854) granting a pension to Sarah E. Branson;

A bill (S. 1785) granting a pension to Stephen D. Redfield;

A bill (S. 550) granting a pension to William C. Wait;

A bill (S. 733) granting a pension to Abbie S. Hutchinson;

A bill (S. 815) granting a pension to Angerone P. Cole, mother of George H. Cole, private Company B, Twenty-fourth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers;

A bill (S. 809) granting a pension to Betsey Mannsfield; and

A bill (S. 803) granting a pension to Delia U. Peck.

Senate bills of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole House, with amendments, were taken up, the amendments agreed to, the bills as amended severally ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed:

SENATE.

SATURDAY, March 31, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of State, transmitting correspondence and reports relative to the purchase of historical documents; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of citizens and voters of the town of Upper Sandusky, Wyandot County, Ohio, praying that the work of the eradication of pleuro-pneumonia may be continued under the Bureau of Animal Industry as at present organized, and that it be allowed to remain in the Department of Agriculture, with a chief at its head who shall be a competent veterinary surgeon; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of Stewart Sanderson, of Shelby, N. Y., praying that an appropriation be made for the construction of steel rams for the purpose of coast defense; which was referred to the Committee on Coast Defenses.

Mr. WALTHALL. I present a petition of the house of representatives of the State of Mississippi, praying Congress to assist the State board of health in establishing inspective quarantine service on Ship Island. As the petition relates to the disposition of public buildings, I move that it be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WALTHALL presented a petition of the house of representatives of the Legislature of Mississippi, praying Congress to pass an act placing the naval reserve lands of the United States Government situated in Harrison County, in that State, on the market; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented a petition of the house of representatives of the Legislature of Mississippi, praying for confirmation of titles to certain lands donated to that State by act of Congress passed September 28, 1850; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present a resolution adopted by the Medico-Chirurgical Society of St. Louis, Mo., urging upon Congress the propriety of the passage of a bill to provide suitable maritime protection for the whole country under the supervision of officers of the General Government, the necessary expenses to be defrayed from the national Treasury. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A similar petition was just referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. HARRIS. The petition presented by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL] was simply a request that certain buildings which belong to the United States be turned over to the State for inspection purposes. As I understand, the petition presented by the Senator from Missouri looks to the establishment or regulation of quarantine.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is it; and it should go to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

Mr. HARRIS. This petition should go to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, while the other was properly referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be so referred.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present a resolution adopted by the Medico-Chirurgical Society of St. Louis, Mo., urging upon Congress, in the event of the passage of a bill modifying the tariff, that the import duty be removed from all medicines, medical and surgical appliances, and from everything used in the treatment and diagnosis of disease in a full proportion, with a view to its future complete removal. I move the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL presented the petition of W. M. Haynes and 8 other male citizens of St. Louis, Mo., praying for better legal protection for women and girls within the territorial, admiralty, and maritime jurisdiction of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MORRILL presented the petition of Lucius D. Savage and 11 other citizens of the county of Washington, Vermont, praying that Senate bill No. 548, granting pensions to widows and minor children of pensioners, may receive favorable action by the Senate; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, presented a petition of the State board of railroad commissioners of the State of Iowa, in favor of action by Congress to have the Interstate Commerce Commission investigate and report to Congress conclusions arrived at in respect of what may be done to promote the safety of railroad employés, the proper heating of passenger cars, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of Abernethy Post, No. 48, Grand Army of the Republic, of West Union, Iowa, praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of Typographical Union, No. 68, of Keokuk, Iowa, praying for the passage of an international copyright law; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FARWELL presented a petition of citizens of Christian County, Illinois, praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr, HOAR presented a petition of James M. Davis, Byron B. Floyd, George W. Wentworth, and 54 others, ex-Union soldiers and sailors, citizens of Haverhill, Mass., praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HOAR. I present the petition of the Icelandic Educational Society, of Winnipeg, Dominion of Canada, praying for an appropriation by Congress for the thorough examination of the records in the Vatican and other Roman libraries of the discovery of America by the Icelanders, and also for a public recognition of Leif Ericsson as the first discoverer and colonist of America, according to the plan for a Viking Hall heretofore presented. I suppose that the petition should go to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks the petition can not be received under the rule, it being from citizens or subjects of a foreign power.

Mr. HOAR. I supposed there was no human being from whom the Senate would not receive a respectful petition.

Mr. HARRIS. I think the express rule is that unless such a petition is communicated by the State Department or the President, it can not be received.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the fourth clause of Rule VII.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

> But no petition or memorial or other paper signed by citizens or subjects of a foreign power shall be received, unless the same be transmitted to the Senate by the President.

Mr. HOAR. I had forgotten that rule for the moment.

Mr. MANDERSON presented a petition numerously signed by exprisoners of war, citizens of Owen County, Indiana, praying for the passage of what is known as the prisoners-of-war pension bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition numerously signed by citizens of Putnam County, Indiana, praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Thomas County, Nebraska, praying for the establishment of United States courts at North Platte, Nebr.; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SABIN presented the petition of Robert W. Simmons, late corporal in Company B, Second Regiment Pennsylvania Provisional Heavy Artillery, praying to be allowed an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of Junction Lodge No. 6, of the Amalgamated Iron and Steel Workers of the United States, of Steubenville, Ohio, and a petition of Hubbard Lodge No. 9, of the Amalgamated Iron and Steel Workers of the United States, favoring a protective-tariff policy; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland. I present the petition of George M. Upshur and 36 other members of the Maryland Legislature, praying for the continuance of the work of eradicating pleuro-pneumonia under the Bureau of Animal Industry, as now organized, by strengthening and not changing the present plan of operation, keeping such bureau in the Department of Agriculture, under a competent veterinary surgeon as chief, with no control of any board or commission over such bureau or its work. I also present two other petitions of a similar character, one from citizens of Carroll County, and another from citizens of Frederick County, in the State of Maryland. I move that the petitions lie on the table, as the bill on that subject has been reported and is on the Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN presented a petition of citizens of Eden, Martin County, Kentucky; a petition of citizens of America, Lee County, Kentucky, and a petition of citizens of Ballard County, Kentucky, praying that the work of the eradication of pleuro-pneumonia may be continued under the Bureau of Animal Industry as at present organized, and that the bureau may be allowed to remain in the Department of Agriculture, with a chief who shall be a competent veterinary surgeon; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CHACE presented petitions of citizens of Macon and Savannah, in the State of Georgia, praying for the passage of an international copyright law; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PLATT presented the petition of T. F. Bean and others, citizens of the District of Columbia, calling attention to the law as it exists in the District of Columbia relating to lunacy, and praying for legislation in relation thereto; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. STANFORD presented a petition of the American Forestry Congress and other citizens of Auburn, Placer County, California, praying for the passage of additional laws for the preservation of forests on the public lands; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. FAULKNER presented the petition of Emery P. Myers and 18 other ex-Union soldiers, citizens of the State of West Virginia, praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MITCHELL presented a petition of citizens of Polk County, Oregon, praying that the work of the eradication of pleuro-pneumonia among cattle shall be continued under the Bureau of Animal Industry as at present organized; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HAWLEY presented a petition of members of the faculty of the Wesleyan University, of Middletown, Conn., praying that certain books therein enumerated may be imported free of duty; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BATE presented the petition of the Tennessee Bar Association, praying that increased compensation be allowed United States district judges; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BATE. I present the petition of James W. Bowman, a citizen of Henderson County, Tennessee, praying for the passage of the bill granting him a pension, which I ask be placed on file with the papers accompanying the bill for his relief, the bill having been reported and being now on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered.

Mr. HISCOCK presented a petition of 450 ex-Union veterans, citizens of the State of New York, praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HOAR presented resolutions of the Legislature of Massachusetts; which were read, as follows:

Resolutions relating to freight-car and steam couplers and to freight-train brakes.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, In the year 1888.

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives in General Court assembled:

Whereas thousands of railroad employés every year are killed or injured in coupling or uncoupling and in handling the brakes on freight cars used in interstate traffic, and most of these accidents can be avoided by the use of uniform automatic couplers and train brakes; and

Whereas the success and the growth of the system of heating cars by steam from the locomotive or other single source largely depends on the adoption in interstate traffic of an uniform steam coupler; and

Whereas these subjects are believed to be of pressing importance and within the proper scope of the powers of the Congress of the United States, while attempts on the part of the individual States to deal with them have resulted and must continue to result in conflicting regulations:

Resolved, That the senate and the house of representatives of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts in General Court assembled do most respectfully and earnestly urge upon Congress a consideration of the foregoing subjects with a view to the passage of a resolution instructing the Interstate Commerce Commission to consider what can be done to prevent the loss of life and limb in coupling and uncoupling freight cars used in interstate commerce, and in handling the brakes of such cars, and in what way the growth of the system of heating passenger cars from the locomotive or other single source can be promoted, to the end that said commission may make recommendations in the premises to the various railroads within its jurisdiction, and report its doings to Congress at an early date, with suggestions as to legislation on said subject as may seem to it necessary or expedient.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted to the Congress of the United States and to each of our Senators and Representatives therein.

SENATE, March 22, 1888.

Adopted.
Sent down for concurrence.

E. HERBERT CLAPP, Clerk.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, March 27, 1888.

Adopted in concurrence.

EDWARD A. McLAUGHLIN, Clerk.

A true copy.
Attest:

E. HERBERT CLAPP, Clerk of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the resolutions be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and I ask the consent of the Senate to make one or two observations in regard to them.

These resolutions have been adopted by the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts on the urgent recommendation of the railroad commissioners of that State, who compose the first board of the kind, I think, ever appointed in this country, and which board consists of gentlemen of very high authority and great experience in regard to all railroad matters. They called my attention to the subject some weeks ago and informed me that these resolutions would be here in due time.

The number of employés of railroads who are injured or killed on the railroads in this country in handling freight trains amounts to thousands every year; and the danger from the somewhat unmanageable trains of freight cars, especially in coupling and uncoupling them, is a very serious peril to life and limb.

The railroad commissioners of Massachusetts endeavored to establish some regulations for the government of the railroads of that State which would be sufficient to almost wholly remove this very great danger, but they found themselves embarrassed by the question of jurisdiction. Under the recent decisions of the Supreme Court it is quite obvious that they could make no regulation which would be applicable to railroads engaged in interstate commerce and apply certainly to trains conveying merchandise from State to State.

It becomes necessary, therefore, to have national action upon the subject, and the railroad commissioners of Massachusetts, with the concurrence and assent of the similar authorities of quite a number of other States of the Union, have desired that the Interstate Commerce Commission might be clothed with authority to deal with the subject and to establish suitable regulations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial will be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. BROWN presented the petition of the committee for philanthropic labor of the New York Yearly Meeting of the Religious Society of Friends, praying for the initiation and adoption of measures looking to the establishment, in conjunction with other nationalities, through treaty stipulations, of a permanent court of international arbitration for the amicable adjustment of the differences which may arise between our own and other countries; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented the petition of the Cultivator Publishing Company, of Atlanta, Ga., praying for the passage of what is known as the fractional silver-certificate bill; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. REAGAN presented a petition of 32 citizens of Mount Carmel, Tex., praying an increase of compensation for third and fourth class postmasters; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. EVARTS presented a concurrent resolution of the senate and assembly of the State of New York, urging the passage of the bill to refund to merchants and commercial agents the taxes exacted under certain legislation in 1871, by the local authorities of the District of Columbia, imposing a license tax upon commercial agents, which law was on May 9, 1887, declared by the supreme court of the District of Columbia beyond the bounds of any authority delegated to the District of Columbia by Congress; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of the common council of the city of New York, requesting that the Congress of the United States appropriate the sum of $2,300,000, to be expended by the Secretary of War, for the improvement of Harlem River and Spuyten Duyvil Creek, in accordance with the plans and upon the route already approved and acquired therefor; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of 74 ex-Union soldiers and sailors, citizens of Walton, N. Y.; a petition of 11 ex-Union soldiers and sailors, citizens of Auburn, Cayuga County, New York; a petition of 16 ex-Union soldiers and sailors, citizens of East Homer, N. Y.; and a petition of 440 ex-Union soldiers and sailors, citizens of Albion, Orleans County, New York, praying for the passage of the per diem rated service-pension bill; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a memorial of the Arkwright Club, of Boston, Mass., urging the passage of the bill (H. R. 1527) to make bills of lading conclusive evidence in certain cases; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1171) for the relief of the legal representatives of George McDougall, deceased, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 499) for the relief of William H. Crook, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2501) for the relief of William M. Bryant, reported it without amendment.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6887) for the relief of Henry Brock, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Ernest Hodder, praying that his claim for pay be referred to the Court of Claims, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1426) for the relief of William H. Young, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; which was agreed to.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1323) to confer brevet promotion on officers of the United States Army particularly distinguished by heroic action in Indian warfare, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2028) to authorize the President to confer brevet rank on officers of the Army for gallant services in Indian campaigns, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2021) to brevet officers of the Army on the active and retired lists, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. EVARTS, from the Committee on the Library reported a bill (S. 2564) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to purchase from Miss Virginia Taylor Lewis a sword of Washington; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1645) to limit the hours that letter-carriers in cities shall be employed per day, reported it with an amendment.

EXPENSES OF SENATE INVESTIGATIONS.

Mr. ALLISON. I am authorized by the Committee on Appropriations to report a bill appropriating $20,000 for expenses of special and select committees of the Senate, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be now considered.

The bill (S. 2550) appropriating $20,000 for expenses of special and select committees of the Senate was read twice, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ALLISON. If I may be permitted to say a word, I will state that there are four or five committees of the Senate now making investigations, and the appropriation for that purpose is almost entirely exhausted, or within a few dollars, which makes it necessary that this appriation should be made or that the investigations should not proceed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC-BUILDING EXPENDITURES.

Mr. STANFORD, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to furnish the Senate with a statement of appropriations and expenditures for public buildings from March 4, 1885, to the present time.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DANIEL introduced a bill (S. 2551) to amend section 993 of the Revised Statutes of the United States for the District of Columbia so as to make inauguration day a holiday within said District; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PADDOCK (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2552) relating to postmasters at Presidential offices; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland (by request), introduced a bill (S. 2553) to incorporate the Washington and Western Maryland Railroad Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2554) for the relief of the heirs of Lieut. Commander Wilson McGunnigle, United States Navy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 2555) for the relief of James J. Johnston; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. MANDERSON introduced a bill (S. 2556) for the relief of Charles B. Newton; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am somewhat at a loss to know to what committee the bill should be referred. It proposes to reimburse Charles B. Newton, a boy nineteen years old, who was arrested on the charge of being a deserter from the Army of the United States, who was kept in confinement and very grossly abused and maltreated. It is a case of mistaken identity. Whether it should go to the Committee on the Judiciary, the Committee on Claims, or the Committee on Military Affairs, I am somewhat at a loss to know. I should like to get some suggestion from the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, if there be no objection.

Mr. VOORHEES (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2557) authorizing the issue of specie certificates, redeemable half in gold coin and half in silver bullion equal in value to the gold half; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. DANIEL (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2558) changing the name of the Real Estate Title Insurance Company of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a bill (S. 2559) providing for the printing of Government publications upon private orders; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. SABIN introduced a bill (S. 2560) to improve and encourage the cultivation and manufacture of flax and hemp; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. HISCOCK introduced a bill (S. 2561) to provide for the erection of a monument at Sackett's Harbor, in the State of New York; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. GEORGE introduced a bill (S. 2562) to provide for the erection of a public building in Yazoo City, Miss.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. REAGAN introduced a bill (S. 2563) to compensate Mrs. Sarah L. Larimer for important services rendered the military authorities in 1864, at Deer Creek Station, Wyo., and for loss of property taken by Sioux Indians; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. VOORHEES introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 67) authorizing and directing the Librarian of Congress to permit Dr. J. F. Jameson to cause to be made a copy of the records of the Virginia Company, and to cause the same to be published; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Library.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PURCHASE OF BONDS.

Mr. REAGAN. I offered an amendment the other day, and as there is a mistake about it, I desire to have it reprinted and printed correctly. It is the amendment submitted by me to the bill (H. R. 5034) to provide for the purchase of United States bonds by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order to reprint will be made, if there be no objection.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. HOAR, it was Ordered, That leave be granted Nathaniel McKay to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers in the case of Nathaniel McKay and the executors of Donald McKay.

PRINTING OF FISHERIES MAP.

On motion of Mr. HOAR, it was Ordered, That the Senate Committee on Printing be directed to cause to be prepared and printed for the use of the Senate 500 reduced copies of the map now in the room of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations showing the waters and shores frequented by American fishermen in the North Atlantic Ocean, colored so as to show the effect of the proposed treaty and the rights claimed in behalf of American fishermen.

FLORIDA LAND TITLES.

Mr. CALL submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That a special committee of five Senators shall be appointed, to be selected by the President of the Senate, who shall inquire whether it is essential or advisable for the protection of actual settlers on the public land of the United States in the State of Florida, which has been heretofore patented or certified to other than actual settlers improvidently or without authority, that suits shall be brought by the United States to cancel such patents, the committee to report by bill or otherwise, and further report such other legislation as may be necessary for the protection of actual settlers on the public lands of the United States in the State of Florida and for the settlement of the title to the public lands in the possession of such settlers.

Mr. CALL. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. BECK. I should like to ask the Senator from Florida why the regular committee of the Senate can not do that work. We have just appropriated $20,000 this morning to pay the expenses of special committees, and it seems to me the regular committees of the Senate can do all the work they have before them. I should like to know why the regular committee can not do it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HOAR. I suggest that the resolution lie over until the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands comes in. I do not myself know anything about it, and I have no objection to it; but I think the members of that committee should be present when a special subject within their jurisdiction is referred to another committee.

Mr. MITCHELL. I was about to make the same suggestion. I understand that the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands will not be here to-day.

Mr. SHERMAN. The resolution had better go over until to-morrow.

Mr. HOAR. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution lies over, under the rule.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to withdraw his objection.

Some two weeks since I addressed the Senate and was interrupted by the recurrence of the regular order in my remarks upon the subject of a resolution I had introduced, instructing the Committee on Public Lands to report a bill for canceling patents that had been unlawfully and improvidently issued by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. It was my desire to continue those remarks in order to present to the Senate a case which I think demands imperatively the action of the Senate for the protection of the rights of actual settlers who, under the laws of the United States, have a right to their homes. I had one case of very great and peculiar enormity, and I was interrupted in the presentation of that case.

It has been suggested to me by Senators that if I would confine the resolution to the State of Florida, and provide for a special committee to inquire into the subject, there would be no objection. I shall be obliged to let the resolution lie over, as objection is made; but I desire to say that there is a great necessity for this action on the part of the Senate.

Two years ago I presented a resolution asking for a special committee to investigate these cases, in order that actual settlers upon the public lands of Florida should have a hearing. The Committee on Public Lands of the Senate have a great amount of business before them constantly. They referred the resolution at that time to the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior, who reported to them that the Department had ample means to conduct such an investigation. The committee had no objection to the special committee being raised—they were advised of the pressure of business before them—but upon the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office my resolution for a special committee was indefinitely postponed.

Two years have elapsed. These people are being turned out of their homes. No investigation has been had. Hundreds of letters are in my possession, exhibiting cases of great wrong and injustice for the want of adequate legislation in this direction. I have a letter before me from Mr. P. B. Perry, of Sumter County, Florida, an old citizen, eighty years old, an old soldier of the United States, an excellent citizen, and an honest and good man—who has recently had one of his eyes extracted, and he writes me that he is almost blind in the other—who urges upon me in behalf of the poor people who have settled upon these lands and are unable to pay the prices asked for their homes by the people who make unlawful claim to them, that some investigation shall be had and some protection given to them in the rights which the law passed by Congress has given to them, and which the United States has pledged its faith shall belong to them.

I only ask for that investigation. For two years I have been asking for it. The Committee on Public Lands are overwhelmed with business, and this is a special subject to which a special committee may well give some attention. If Congress will not protect the people in their homes against violations of the law by executive officers, what will become of the country, and who will the people look to for protection? I print by leave of the Senate the letter of Mr. P. B. Perry:

WHITESVILLE, MARION COUNTY, FLORIDA, March 24, 1888.

HONORED FRIEND:—I see from your favor of your late speech that you are at your post, and fighting for the poor man. I am glad that we have a few honest men yet, even in Congress.

Say what you please, money makes the mare go. Judges, lawyers, legislators, all move to the sound of the money; that is, money will enlighten the majority, so that every time the decision is on the money side.

The pure, that money can not swerve from the right, are few and far between. I am proud that you belong to that small but honorable minority that "does not deserve justice" (Harris, of Osceola). That noble idea brings me to our Florida Railway and Navigation railroad land-grant matter that you have so long fought for the people, but it seems, as Harris said, "You did not deserve justice," as it seems to have gone the other way! That $6,000 money I guess held you back till some honorable (?) courts turned the railroad loose. To that end, not long ago, the road had its surveyor (?) camping in my settlement, riding over land, compass in pocket, taking its lands, counting horses' steps for chains, telling the settlers they were stealing his timbers, etc. Some of them talked impudent to him. The result: He went off and, according to his "survey," reported those he holds trespassing, and they have got letters offering to sell them the lands trespassed upon at $5 or $6 an acre.

Now there are some improvements and settlements on the odd sections made in hopes of a forfeiture bill, etc., expecting to get homesteads, but the poor fellows are not able to buy their own labor, so they are ruined.

One case: A school-house put on a 40-acre block, with a pond in it—it is not worth $10—their price is $109, but then, you see, the house.

But, friend CALL, I must close. Stick to the right. P. B. PERRY, SR

I do not know that you or your clerks can read this. I am old and nearly blind; had one eye taken out a week ago; but, oh! CALL, while I breathe let me encourage you in the right. Is there any hopes for those poor settlers?

P. B. P., SR.

Hon. Senator WILKINSON CALL,
United States Senate, Washington.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution lies over under the rule.

PARIS INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION.

Mr. SHERMAN. I propose to ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to pass a House joint resolution. I would not do it but for the fact that time is very important. It is a joint resolution accepting the invitation of the French Republic to take part in the international exposition to be held in Paris in 1889. Time is important because arrangements are being constantly made in regard to the exposition. I think the joint resolution will lead to no debate. If there be no objection, I should like to have it acted upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 83) accepting the invitation of the French Republic to take part in an international exposition to be held in Paris in 1889.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution which was reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with amendments.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask that the amendments of the committee be acted upon as they are reached in the reading of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made if there be no objection.

The Secretary proceeded to read the joint resolution.

The first amendment of the Committee on Foreign Relations was, in section 2, line 10, after the word "commissioner-general," to insert the words "to act under the direction of the commissioner-general;" and in line 13, after the word "nine," to strike out the words "subcommissioners, and said subcommissioners shall be;" so as to read:

That the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint a commissioner-general to represent the United States in the proposed exposition, and, under the general direction of the Secretary of State, to make all needful rules and regulations in reference to the contributions from this country and to control the expenditures incident to the proper installation and exhibit thereof; the pay of jurors, and the preparation of the reports on the exposition and the general results thereof; and an assistant commissioner-general, to act under the direction of the commissioner-general, who shall perform the duties of commissioner-general in case of his death or disability; and that the President may also appoint nine scientific experts, corresponding to and specifically assigned to the nine groups into which the exposition will, under the official regulations, be divided.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 18, before the word "thousand," to strike out "five" and insert "ten;" so as to read:

That the allowance to said commissioner-general for salary and personal expenses shall not exceed $10,000 for his whole term of office.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 21, before the word "five," to strike out the word "twenty;" and after the word "five" to strike out the word "hundred" and insert the word "thousand;" so as to read:

That the allowance of said assistant commissioner-general for salary and personal expenses shall not exceed $5,000 for his term of office.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 22, after the word "nine," to strike out the word "subcommissioners" and insert "scientific experts;" and, in line 24, before the word "hundred," to strike out "twelve" and insert "fifteen;" so as to read:

And the allowance of the nine scientific experts for salary and personal expense each shall not exceed $1,500, not including such clerical service as may be allowed by the commissioner-general, which shall not exceed $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 26, after the word "dollars," to strike out the remainder of the section in the following words:

And the governors of the several States may nominate and the President appoint one honorary commissioner from each of the several States, and the President may appoint one honorary commissioner from each of the several Territories, which said honorary commissioners may report upon such special subjects as the commissioner-general may direct, and shall serve without pay or other expenses to the United States: Provided, That no person appointed by virtue of this resolution shall have any pecuniary interest directly or indirectly in any article exhibited for competition, or act as the agent for any exhibitor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 3, in the following words:

SEC. 3. That the President be authorized, in his discretion, to assign one or more of the public vessels to transport to and from France, free of cost, under regulations to be prescribed by the commissioner-general, such articles as may be offered for exhibition by the citizens of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3 [4], line 7, before the word "hundred," to strike out "two" and insert "three;" and in line 10, after the word "State," to strike out the words "and out of such amount;" so as to read:

That in order to defray the necessary expenses above authorized, and for the proper installation of the exhibition, and the expenditures of the commissioner-general made under the direction of the Secretary of State, and with his approval, and not otherwise, there be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $300,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary for the purposes herein specified, which sum shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3 [4], line 12, after the word "prepare," to strike out the words "as far as practicable and with as little delay as possible;" and in line 15, after the word "exposition," to insert the words "the expense of the same to be paid out of said appropriation;" so as to read:

The Commissioner of Agriculture is hereby authorized to collect and prepare suitable specimens of the agricultural productions of the several States and Territories of the Union for exhibition at the Paris exposition, the expense of the same to be paid out of said appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 3 [4], from line 17 to line 35, inclusive, in the following words:

And the Commissioner of Agriculture is also authorized to prepare, for gratuitous distribution at said Paris exposition, a concise statement printed in English, French, and German, descriptive of swine raising in the United States and the methods used in this country in preparing pork for export, together with such information as he may possess as to the relative wholesomeness of pork raised in the United States and in other countries. And the said Commissioner of Agriculture, under the direction of the Secretary of State, is further authorized and directed to secure, if possible, as a part of said Paris exposition, a competitive inspection of pork raised in the United States and in the different countries of Europe, with the view of determining the relative wholesomeness of the pork products of the United States and of Europe, and for the purposes indicated in this paragraph the additional sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as is necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the joint resolution was concluded.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

MEETING OF WASHINGTON LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The resolution submitted by Mr. MITCHELL, March 29, 1888, was read, as follows:

Whereas it is provided in section 1846 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as follows:

"SEC. 1846. The legislative power in each Territory shall be vested in the governor and a legislative assembly. The legislative assembly shall consist of a council and house of representatives. The members of both branches of the legislative assembly shall have the qualifications of voters as herein prescribed. They shall be chosen for the term of two years, and the sessions of the respective legislative assemblies shall be biennial. Each legislative assembly shall fix by law the day of the commencement of its regular sessions. The members of the council and of the house of representatives shall reside in the district or county for which they are respectively elected."

And whereas the last biennial session of the Legislative Assembly of Washington Territory adjourned sine die in the month of February, 1888; and

Whereas on the 1st day of February, 1888, said Legislative Assembly of Washington Territory passed the following act, which was on February 2 approved by the governor of said Territory, to wit:

'An act to fix the times for the meeting of the Legislative Assembly of Washington Territory.

"Be it enacted by the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Washington, That the next session of the Legislative Assembly of Washington Territory shall begin on the second Monday of January, 1889, at 12 o'clock noon, and the Legisative Assembly shall meet at noon on the second Monday of January, and biennially thereafter.

"SEC. 2. All acts and parts of acts in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

"SEC. 3. This act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage and approval.

"Passed the house February 1, 1888.

"W. M. CLARK,
"Speaker of the House.

"Passed the council February 1, 1888.

"JOHN R. THOMPSON,
"President of the Council.

"Approved February 2, 1888.

"[SEAL.] EUGENE SEMPLE, Governor."

Therefore

Resolved, That the Committee on Territories be, and they are hereby, instructed to inquire into the validity of said act of the Legislative Assembly of Washington Territory, providing that the next session of such Legislative Assembly shall begin on the second Monday of January, 1889, at 12 o'clock noon, and to report by bill or otherwise.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A bill (H. R. 1481) making an appropriation to construct a road and approaches from Pineville, La., to the national military cemetery near that town;

A bill (H. R. 3749) for the relief of Frank Baker; and

A bill (H. R. 4556) to confirm New Madrid location, survey No. 2889, and to provide for issue of patent therefor.

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask that the Committee on the Judiciary may have leave to sit during the remainder of this session of Congress during the sessions of the Senate. Our business has so accumulated that that seems to be necessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Judiciary Committee asks leave to sit during the sittings of the Senate for the remainder of the session. The Chair hears no objection, and that permission will be granted.

THE CALENDAR.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business, that order is closed. The first bill on the Calendar under Rule VIII will be stated.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ST. ALBANS, VT.

The bill (S. 1876) for the purchase of a site and erection of a custom-house and post-office at St. Albans, Vt., was announced as first in order.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, after the word "site," at the end of line 25, to insert "which shall be purchased at voluntary sale or by condemnation;" so as to read:

Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until a valid title to the said site, which shall be purchased at voluntary sale or by condemnation, shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Vermont shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEOPOLD MAYER.

The bill (S. 619) granting an increase of pension to Leopold Mayer was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Leopold Mayer, late captain of Company C, Twelfth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, at the rate of $25 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT LOS ANGELES, CAL.

The bill (S. 1789) for an extension of appropriation for the erection of a public building at Los Angeles, Cal., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SOUTHERN UTE RESERVATION.

The bill (S. 1145) granting the right of way to the Durango, Cortez and Utah Railroad Company through the Southern Ute Indian reservation in Southwestern Colorado was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 3, line 9, after the words "shall be," to strike out "filled" and insert "filed;" so as to read:

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to fix the amount of compensation to be paid the Indians for such right of way, and provide the time and manner for the payment thereof; but no right of any kind shall vest in said railway company in or to any part of the right of way herein provided for until plats thereof, made upon actual survey for the definite location of such railroad, and including the points for station buildings, depots, machine-shops, side-tracks, turn-outs, and water stations, shall be filed with and approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 18, after "United States," to strike out "may, in his discretion," and insert "shall;" so as to read:

Provided, That the President of the United States shall require that the consent of the Indians to said right of way shall be obtained by said railroad company, in such manner as he may prescribe, before any right under this act shall accrue to said company.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOWEN. In line 4 of section 1, where the word "railroad" occurs, I move to strike out that word and insert "railway;" so as to give the correct title.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOWEN. In the same line of section 1 I move to strike out "Durango, Cortez" and insert "Rio Grande;" so as to give the proper name of the corporation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 4 of section 1 it is proposed to strike out "Durango, Cortez" and insert "Rio Grande;" so as to read:

That the right of way is hereby granted, as hereinafter set forth, to the Rio Grande and Utah Railway Company.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting the right of way to the Rio Grande and Utah Railway Company through the Southern Ute Indian reservation in Southwestern Colorado."

SWAMP AND OVERFLOWED LAND GRANTS.

Mr. STEWART. I enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill (S. 758) for the relief of purchasers and other grantees of the United States of certain swamp and overflowed lands, and to reimburse and indemnify certain States, and I ask that a request be sent to the House of Representatives for the return of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada moves to reconsider the vote by which the bill named by him was passed, and that a message be sent to the House of Representatives requesting the return of the bill. That request will be sent to the House of Representatives, if there be no objection, and the motion to reconsider will be entered.

BETTING ON RACES, ETC.

The bill (H. R. 4964) to prevent any person or persons in the cities of Washington and Georgetown from making books and pools on the result of trotting or running races or boat races was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SPOONER. What committee is that reported from?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SPOONER. I desire to offer an amendment to that bill, and I ask that it may go over without losing its place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

E. B. CROZIER.

The bill (S. 73) for the relief of E. B. Crozier, executrix of the last will of Dr. C. W. Crozier, of Tennessee, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, filling the blank after the word "appropriated," in line 6, by inserting "one hundred and ninety-five;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to E. B. Crozier, executrix of the last will of Dr. C. W. Crozier, deceased, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $195, for services rendered as surgeon in the United States Army hospital at Cuthbert, Ga., from June 15, 1865, to July 18, 1865, and for cost of transportation from Chattanooga, Tenn., to Clarksville, Tenn.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHAUNCEY M. LOCKWOOD.

The bill (S. 726) for the relief of Chauncey M. Lockwood or his legal representatives was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads reported an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and in lieu to insert:

That J. W. Hodson, administrator of Chauncey M. Lockwood, be, and he is hereby, authorized to commence his suit in the Court of Claims of the United States for extra mail service on route No. 16637, extending from Salt Lake City, Utah, to The Dalles, Oregon, and the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to adjudicate the same upon the basis of justice and equity, and render a final judgment therein for the value of such extra mail service performed as aforesaid; and from any judgment that may be rendered in said cause either party thereto may appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States; and the bar of the statute of limitations shall not avail in such case.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to amend the amendment, in lines 3 and 4, by striking out "J. W. Hodson, administrator of Chauncey M. Lockwood, be, and he is hereby, authorized to commence his" and insert "the legal representatives of Chauncey M. Lockwood be, and they are hereby, authorized to commence their."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Chauncey M. Lockwood."

ASSISTANTS TO NAVAL BUREAU CHIEFS.

The bill (S. 1438) to provide for the appointment of assistants to the chiefs of bureaus of the Navy Department was announced as next in order.

The bill was read. The Committee on Naval Affairs reported an amendment, to add to the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That the assistant to the Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair shall be selected from the Corps of Naval Constructors not below the relative rank of commander, and shall receive an extra compensation of $800 per annum in excess of his regular pay.

Mr. PLATT. I did not hear the bill read. I should like to know how many new officers it creates.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was reported by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. PLATT. I ask for another reading of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator who reported the bill is not present; and while I do not wish to object to it, I should like to have some explanation of it. I therefore ask that it may be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar, until he comes in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered.

COMMISSIONS OF JUDICIAL OFFICERS.

The bill (S. 143) to provide for the issuing and recording of certain commissions in the Department of Justice was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It provides that hereafter the commissions of all judicial officers, including marshals and attorneys of the United States, appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and all other commissions heretofore prepared at the Department of State upon the requisition of the Attorney-General, shall be made out and recorded in the Department of Justice, and shall be under the seal of that Department and countersigned by the Attorney-General; but the seal shall not be affixed to any such commission before it shall have been signed by the President of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRISON STATISTICS.

The bill (S. 356) to obtain prison statistics was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, in line 12, after the word "States," to insert "and Territories;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General to obtain a record of all United States prisoners, both before and after sentence, and to collect, compile, and present to Congress, in his annual report, complete and practical statistics showing where prisoners are confined, length of sentence, age, nationality, illiteracy, sanitary condition, cost of support, and, so far as possible, the relation of convict labor to free labor. He shall also, in like manner, collect and arrange, as far as possible, tables setting forth the general criminal statistics of the several States and Territories of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MARIA SYPHAX.

The bill (H. R. 3441) declaratory of the meaning of the act entitled "An act for the relief of Maria Syphax" was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It declares that the act of June 12, 1866, "for the relief of Maria Syphax," releasing and confirming to her, her heirs and assigns, the title to a piece of land therein described, being part of the Arlington estate, in the county of Alexandria, Virginia, shall be construed to operate as a relinquishment to Maria Syphax, her heirs or devisees, of any outstanding title to the land which the United States may have acquired since the date of that act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NOTICE TO SURETIES.

The bill (S. 183) requiring notice of deficiency in accounts of principals to be given to sureties upon bonds of United States officials, and fixing a limitation of time within which suits shall be brought against said sureties upon said bonds, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments, in section 1, line 6, before the word "making," to strike out "auditing officer" and insert "accounting officers;" in line 7, after the words "notify the," to strike out "chief" and insert "head;" in line 9, after the word "said," to strike out "shortage" and insert "deficiency;" in line 10, after the word "said," to strike out "chief" and insert "head;" in line 11, after the word "all," to strike out "sureties" and insert "obligors;" in line 12, after the word "such," to strike out "shortage" and insert "deficiency;" in line 16, after the words "to the," to strike out "post-office" and insert "respective post-offices;" in line 17, before the word "may," to strike out "sureties" and insert "obligors;" and in line 18, after the word "discharge," to strike out "such" and insert "the;" so as to make the first section read:

That hereafter, whenever any deficiency shall be discovered in the accounts of any official of the United States, or of any officer disbursing or chargeable with public money, it shall be the duty of the accounting officers making such discovery to at once notify the head of the Department having control over the affairs of said officer of the nature and amount of said deficiency, and it shall be the immediate duty of said head of Department to at once notify all obligors upon the bond or bonds of such official of the nature of such deficiency and the amount thereof. Said notification shall be deemed sufficient if mailed at the post-office in the city of Washington, D. C., addressed to said sureties, respectively, and directed to the respective post-offices where said obligors may reside, if known; but a failure to give or mail such notice shall not discharge the surety or sureties upon such bond.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 1, after the words "upon the," to strike out "adjustment or settlement" and insert "statement;" in line 3, after the word "money," to insert "by the accounting officers of the Treasury;" in line 4, after the word "shall," to insert "thereby;" and in line 6, after the word "such," to strike out "settlement and adjustment" and insert "statement;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That if, upon the statement of the account of any official of the United States, or of any officer disbursing or chargeable with public money, by the accounting officers of the Treasury, it shall thereby appear that he is indebted to the United States, and suit therefor shall not be instituted within five years after such statement of said account, the sureties on his bond shall not be liable for such indebtedness.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC LANDS IN NEBRASKA AND IOWA.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. R. 55) abolishing the office of United States surveyor-general for the district of Nebraska and Iowa, and authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to proceed, under the provisions of sections 2218 and 2219 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in the transfer of the field-notes, maps, records, and other papers to the States of Nebraska and Iowa.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

JOEL J. GOSS.

The bill (H. R. 2056) for the relief of Joel J. Goss was considered as in Committee of the Whole. By its terms all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to certain described real estate in the eighteenth district of the county of Polk and State of Georgia are released, quitclaim granted, and conveyed to Joel J. Goss, his heirs and assigns forever.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROAD TO NATIONAL CEMETERY NEAR STAUNTON, VA.

The bill (S. 1292) to construct a road from the city of Staunton to the national cemetery in the county of Augusta, in the State of Virginia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Military Affairs reported the bill with an amendment, in line 1, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "eleven;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $11,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of constructing a macadamized road from the city of Staunton, in the State of Virginia, to the national cemetery in the county of Augusta, in said State, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, or so much of the above-named sum as may be necessary for said purpose.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to advertise and let the contract for the construction of said road to the lowest bidder, taking bond, with good security, from the contractor for the completion of said road.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

W. W. SCREWS.

The bill (H. R. 6562) for the relief of W. W. Screws was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to W. W. Screws of $100.37, for advertising done by the direction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office in 1884 and 1885.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSIDERATION OF APPROPRIATION BILLS.

The next business in order was the resolution submitted by Mr. BLACKBURN, from the Committee on Rules, February 27, 1888, adding an additional clause to Rule XIV, relating to appropriation bills, etc.

Mr. ALLISON. Let that be passed over in the absence of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed rule will be passed over, retaining its place.

NATIONAL-BANK NOTE REDEMPTION FUND.

The bill (S. 1216) providing for the investment of certain funds in the Treasury, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a report from the Secretary of the Treasury with this bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. There is a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury in regard to it. As the bill was originally drawn it was mandatory and required the investment to be made promptly. He objected to that and objected also to the word "directed" in the bill. He wished that stricken out. I feel bound to state that although the committee passed the bill as it is, using the language "authorized and directed from time to time," which does not compel the Secretary to do it at once; but I am not particular about that.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then I move to strike out, in lines 3 and 4, the words "and directed;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized from time to time,

Mr. SHERMAN. I make no objection. It throws on him the responsibility of neglecting to do what would be a plain duty; but I do not care about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I move to strike out the words "and directed," in the third and fourth lines.

Mr. SHERMAN. They ought to be stricken out in two places.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be made, if there be no objection.

Mr. TELLER. I move, then, to insert "at his discretion;" so as read, "authorized at his discretion."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 11 it is moved, after the word "authorized," to strike out "and directed" and insert "at his discretion;" so as to read:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, at his discretion, from time to time to sell in open market any portion of the bonds purchased, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I move to strike out, in line 4, the word "invest" and insert "expend." I do it with a view of making a further amendment in lines 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, and 15. I want that this money shall be expended, and then when the sum total is reduced to 20 or 30 per cent., as provided for in the latter part of the bill, that from any other money in the Treasury unappropriated the Secretary may reinvest this sum or put in enough to leave it out.

I do not believe in having these bonds which are retired ever afterwards put on the market and sold. There has never been a time and there never will be a time when this money is reduced down from $100,000,000, when if there is a call for more the Government will not have unappropriated money in its Treasury so that it can keep on hand the $20,000,000 that are necessary, more or less, to redeem the notes as they come in. There is now in the Treasury, according to the last statement, $98,000,000, on this account; it was in the former statement $102,000,000. Ninety-eight million dollars are now held for the purpose of redeeming these national-bank notes as they come in. That money has been accumulating in the Treasury for many years. It stands against every note that has been lost or burned up which was formerly the property of any bank in liquidation or any bank that has failed. A large amount of this money will never be presented to the United States for redemption. Nobody can tell how much of it will be presented.. But it seems to me to be a great mistake to keep the money locked up in the Treasury for the purpose of meeting an emergency which, if it comes, will come by degrees, and may never come at all, or to meet a demand that comes by degrees, as it has heretofore, a little at a time. As the Secretary says, during the first year after a bank goes into liquidation there is not much of its circulation presented; the second year there is more, and the third year more, and perhaps the fourth year the notes may practically all come in.

It is entirely safe to rely upon the abundance of money that will always be in the Treasury, without giving the Secretary of the Treasury the authority after he has paid a bond to reissue it. I do not believe there will ever be a condition of affairs that will justify him in doing it, and perhaps it never will occur that he will do it; but I do not want to give him the opportunity. Therefore, I move to strike out the word "invest" and insert in its place the word "expend," with a view of moving a further amendment if that shall be adopted.

Mr. SHERMAN. This money is not the money of the Government. It is deposited by the banks, owned by the banks, but it is lying in the Treasury unexpended, thereby threatening danger to the financial condition of the country. The large amount now deposited is $100,000,000, which tends to contract the currency at a time when money is needed. But, after all, this is the money of the banks, not the money of the Government. It is deposited for a fixed purpose, to pay certain outstanding notes, and therefore we have no right to use that money except to invest it. The word "invest" means to apply to a particular purpose for some one's use. To "expend" means to pay it out for our own objects. The difference in those two words expresses the difference between the Senator from Colorado and myself.

This is not our money. We have no right to expend this money for our purposes, but we may use it as a trustee for the benefit of the cestui que trust. This money is the money of the banks, and it is to be invested for their benefit. It is true the Government takes the risk. There is really no risk in it. It is rather a profit to the Government, and it seems to me the Senate had better leave it alone, because the Government does not own these bonds that are held as security for bank circulation, held in trust, put away in a certain safe by themselves, as these bonds will be under this bill. I think the Senator had better allow the language to stand and let further legislation be had, if it be necessary, to enable the Government to deal with these bonds.

Mr. TELLER. The Government is not the trustee of these banks; the banks are absolutely discharged from any liability on these bills, and the Government has agreed that it will redeem the bills as it agrees to redeem the greenbacks, and it stands in exactly that position, not as trustee. It is an obligation, a debt that the Government owes, to stand responsible for the bank-notes as it does for the greenback when it comes in. This money is not held in trust, and it is not set apart; it simply goes into the great mass of money, and it can not be distinguished from the collections of every day. It simply stands as a liability of the Government, and that is all there is of it. There is no reason in the world why these bonds should not be put in the Treasury and then sold at another time, the United States having an abundant sum of money to meet the debt they represent. There is authority to take any money now in the Treasury. The Treasury does not take the identical money that the banks deposit; no one can tell where that particular money went. This is making it a special trust and changing the existing law in that particular. I do not think it ought to be done. It only makes it possible, in my judgment, to lock up an additional amount of money in the Treasury.

Mr. FARWELL. May I ask the Senator from Colorado, is not the provision of this bill entirely covered by the one which is now under discussion, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to use whatever surplus he has, including this?

Mr. TELLER. I think it is; but I think if this bill passes there will be a certain sum of money there, $98,000,000, that will be held as a fund specially set apart.

Mr. SHERMAN. This money is specially set aside—not, it is true, the identical bills, but that amount of money, so much—as a fund, called a fund for the redemption of the notes of banks in liquidation. We are not trustees for the banks, but trustees for the holders of bank-notes outstanding. The bonds are deposited for the purpose of being held in trust to redeem the notes. By existing law a particular amount is set aside for the payment of the notes to come in, just as $100,000,000 in gold are set aside for the payment of greenbacks.

Mr. TELLER. It is nothing more nor less than an obligation of $100,000,000 in the aggregate, and the money must be kept in the Treasury to meet that as to meet every other obligation. There is no doubt about it. It is not put away in a drawer or vault by itself. All there is to distinguish it from any other debt is that it is put among the liabilities, $100,000,000 to meet a certain debt. My theory is that we should strike out the word "invest" and put in the word "expend," and strike out all about selling bonds; and if the Senator wants to make that a special fund, to say there shall be a certain amount to meet it. Then he can provide for putting away $20,000,000 or $10,000,000, and not $100,000,000, as it now amounts to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is a duty of the Chair to remind Senators that the rule limits debate to five minutes, and to one speech on a bill by each Senator.

Mr. TELLER. Then I will object to the bill unless we can have ample discussion. It is a question of considerable interest.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire to have the bill keep its place on the Calendar?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is a bill that must be discussed at large.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the bill will be passed over.

JOHN BLACK.

The bill (S. 1973) granting a pension to John Black was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of John Black, late of Company B, Thirty-eighth Regiment of Pennsylvania Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SARAH J. TOMPKINS.

The bill (S. 1967) granting a pension to Sarah J. Tompkins was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place upon the pension-roll the name of Sarah J. Tompkins, widow of C. C. Tompkins, late of Company G, Seventh Regiment Kansas Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

J. W. MEADOWS.

The bill (S. 1972) granting a pension to J. W. Meadows was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of J. W. Meadows, late of Company A, Eleventh Regiment Kansas Volunteer Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF PROCEEDING.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to suggest whether it would not be wise to take up all the pension bills, leaving the others in their place.. As this is Saturday, and they ought to be got over to the House as early as possible, let us go through with the pension bills, not disturbing anything else. I ask unanimous consent that that may be done.

Mr. COCKRELL. I object. I think it would not be just to the other cases to do it now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But we shall strike things that lead to debate, and we can get off the whole pension-list and have it done with in a few hours.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont asks unanimous consent that the afternoon be devoted to pension bills until disposed of.

Mr. CHACE. Setting aside this order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Going on under this order, but considering only the pension bills until they are disposed of.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Pension bills first.

Mr. HARRIS. I think we should go on regularly.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think that would be taking advantage of a thin Senate under the order made by unanimous consent, and I doubt the propriety of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It requires unanimous consent to change the order. Is there objection?

Mr. CHACE. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

KEZIAH E. STRONG.

The bill (S. 1142) granting a pension to Keziah E. Strong was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pen-

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELIZA A. TALBOTT.

The bill (S. 1968) granting a pension to Eliza A. Talbott was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place upon the pension-roll the name of Eliza A. Talbott, widow of B. W. Talbott, late of Company G, Fourth Regiment Iowa Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ZEPHANIAH H. BONES.

The bill (S. 1743) granting a pension to Zephaniah H. Bones was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Zephaniah H. Bones, late of Company H, Seventh Regiment Iowa Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY AYRES.

The bill (S. 1172) for the relief of Henry Ayres was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Henry Ayres, of Evansville, Ind., of $3,282.68, or such part thereof as he shall show to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue was erroneously or illegally assessed or collected, or was collected on deficiencies in the production of spirits which resulted from unavoidable accidents or from misunderstanding of the requirements of the law or regulations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no report.

Mr. VOORHEES. I reported that bill from the Committee on Finance. It was reported at a former Congress by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], accompanied by a written report, and there is a report from a House committee. I thought they were both here. I had them here. I think they are filed with the bill as my report. I made no independent report. There is a House report in favor of it, and there is a former Senate report in favor of it, and I contented myself with filing those reports. It is a case which has been carefully considered by committees of both Houses, and I do not think there is any risk about passing it. It is merely giving discretion to the Secretary of the Treasury to do what is right on a showing made by the claimant.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be passed over informally until we can get the paper.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The papers are with the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well, let us hear the former report.

The Chief Clerk read the following report submitted by Mr. BECK March 11, 1884:

The Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 530) for the relief of Henry Ayres, of Evansville, Ind., have considered the same, and respectfully report:

This is a claim for a refund of internal-revenue tax collected on deficiencies in the production of spirits. In view of the facts set forth in the letter of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, appended hereto and made a part of this report, your committee recommend that the bill pass as amended.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 6, 1884.

SIR: In response to your letter of the 21st ultimo, inclosing bill (S. 530) for the relief of Henry Ayres, I have the honor to transmit herewith a report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, dated March 4, 1884, in which he states the facts and suggests that the bill be amended by adding, after the word "cents," in line 6, the following:

"Or such part thereof as the said Ayres shall show to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue was erroneously or illegally assessed or collected, or was collected on deficiencies in the production of spirits, which resulted from unavoidable accidents, or from misunderstanding of the requirements of the law or regulations."

In view of the facts reported, unless the committee has before it satisfactory evidence that Mr. Ayres is equitably entitled to the refunding of the entire sum of $3,282.68, appropriated by the terms of the bill, I would recommend that it be amended by striking out all after the word "cents," in line 6, and inserting in lieu thereof the above-recited words.

Very respectfully,

CHAS. J. FOLGER, Secretary.

Hon. JUSTIN S. MORRILL,
Chairman Finance Committee, United States Senate.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, March 4, 1884.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith the letter (unsigned) dated February 21, 1884, from the Finance Committee, United States Senate, addressed to you and by you referred to me for report.

The writer incloses a copy of Senate bill No. 530, for the relief of Henry Ayres, and asks that you cause the proper officer of your Department to examine the same and submit a report thereon, together with his recommendation.

You refer the letter and inclosures to me for investigation and report as to the legislation proposed.

Senate bill No. 530 proposes to direct and require the Secretary of the Treasury "to pay to Henry Ayres, of Evansville, Ind., the sum of $3,282.68, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, on account of taxes unlawfully collected from him by James C. Veatch, collector of internal revenue for the first collection district of Indiana." So far as shown by the records and files of this office the facts are as follows: Henry Ayres was a distiller at Patoka, Ind., from March 1 to November 12, 1870, and prior thereto. He failed to produce 80 per cent. of the surveyed capacity of his distillery during each month from March to November, 1870, inclusive, except the month of August, and was assessed a tax of 50 cents per gallon upon the difference between his reported product and 80 per cent. of the producing capacity, as follows:

For March, 1870	$412.71
For April, 1870	99.85
For May, 1870	246.86
For June, 1870	356.48
For July, 1870	403.00
For September, 1870	171.48
For October, 1870	861.23
For November, 1870	731.07
Total	3,282.68

On the 8th of November, 1870, the distillery and other property belonging to Mr. Ayres was seized by the collector and subsequently sold, the proceeds of sale being applied to the payment of costs of distraint and sale, and to the payment of taxes due from Mr. Ayres, including $2,523.20 of the taxes above enumerated.

On the 31st of January, 1871, Mr. Ayres prepared a claim for the refunding of $427.78, including $356.48 assessed as a deficiency tax for June, 1870, and $71.30 assessed as barrel tax on 178.23 barrels of spirits.

In this claim there is no reason given for relief other than the statement that the deficiency resulted in part from the fact that he was compelled to use seven dry inches in his tubs when he was allowed but three, and in part from the fact that the weather was very warm and water was scarce. This claim was rejected May 4, 1871, for the reason that the assessment was in strict accordance with the survey, and was correct.

In December, 1882, Mr. Ayres forwarded other papers to this office relating to the fact that he had been assessed deficiency taxes aggregating $3,282.68, and asking, if this office could not grant relief, that the papers be turned over to Hon. William Heilman, M. C. As relief could not be granted the papers were sent to Mr. Heilman, but copies thereof were retained by this office. Among the papers was a certificate from Collector Veatch that the deficiency taxes assessed against Mr. Ayres on lists from March to November, 1870, aggregating $3,282.68, had been collected; an affidavit of Dr. George W. Yates showing that Henry Ayres was sick from October 3 to November 11, 1870, and an affidavit of John T. Crisp, book-keeper for Henry Ayres, to the effect that in the absence of Ayres he had charge of the distillery, and that between March and November, 1870, there were frequent interruptions, preventing the distillery from yielding 80 per cent. of its surveyed capacity, and that such interruptions were caused by tubs bursting, machinery giving way, and boilers getting out of repair.

I can find nothing upon the records or files of this office to show that the $3,282.68 paid by Mr. Ayres as deficiency taxes for the months named, or any portion thereof, was "unlawfully collected," as stated in the bill.

It is fair to assume that a portion, at least, of the deficiency resulted from unavoidable accidents, and that relief, to some extent, might have been granted under the act of March 1, 1879, section 6, but for the fact that said act limited such relief to assessments made subsequent to December 31, 1873.

I am unable, from the papers on file in this office, to say how much, if any, of the deficiencies resulted from unavoidable accidents. It may be that the honorable Finance Committee has evidence before it bearing upon this point.

With my present knowledge of the facts I could not recommend the passage of the bill as now worded.

Unless the committee has evidence before it showing that Mr. Ayres is equitably entitled to the refunding of the $3,282.68, I would suggest that the bill be amended by adding after the word "cents," in line 6, the following:

"Or such part thereof as the said Ayres shall show to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue was erroneously or illegally assessed or collected, or was collected on deficiencies in the production of spirits which resulted from unavoidable accidents, or from misunderstanding of the requirements of the law or regulations."

Very respectfully,

WALTER EVANS,
Commissioner.

Hon. CHARLES J. FOLGER,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the bill by striking out the last clause, which would seem to be rather too latitudinous. I think it would be right to allow the Secretary to make proper investigation; but those last words are so very vague that the claimant could get anything he wanted, almost.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. Strike out the last clause in the bill, as follows:

Or from misunderstanding of the requirements of the law or regulations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then read the bill as it would be without that clause, for I think it will be entirely satisfactory.

Mr. VOORHEES. Let the bill be read as it will stand if amended.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed and required to pay to Henry Ayres, of Evansville, Ind., the sum of $3,282.68, or such part thereof as the said Ayres shall show to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue was erroneously or illegally assessed or collected, or was collected on deficiencies in the production of spirits which resulted from unavoidable accidents.

Mr. VOORHEES. That is all right.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I propose to strike out the last words, which would relieve him from his own misunderstanding of the law, which would be a very dangerous precedent. I think with the amendment the bill is right.

Mr. VOORHEES. I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CAROLINE MOTZ.

The bill (S. 654) granting a pension to Caroline Motz was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, after the name "John Motz," in line 8, to strike out the words "to commence from the date of his death, 13th of November, 1867, and to continue during her widowhood."

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Pensions be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Caroline Motz, widow of the late John Motz, deceased, who was a private in Company K, Ninety-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, for pension at the rate and rank of said John Motz.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY E. WOODWARD.

The bill (S. 2167) granting a pension to Mary E. Woodward was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary E. Woodward, widow of Dr. James B. Woodward, late surgeon of the Tenth Regiment Kansas Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANCIS MARION WALKER.

The bill (S. 2168) granting a pension to Francis Marion Walker was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Francis Marion Walker, late private in Company K, Sixty-first Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, at $18 per month, in lieu of the pension at present received.

Mr. SPOONER. I am informed by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], who is absent with the Committee on Commerce, that there is an error in that bill, which the amendment I send to the desk is necessary to correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 6 it is proposed to strike out the words "Company K, Sixty-first," and insert "Company I, Sixteenth;" so as to read:

Late private in Company I, Sixteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. ANNIE GIBSON YATES.

The bill (S. 1239) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Annie Gibson Yates was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It was reported with an amendment from the Committee on Pensions, in line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fifty" and insert "forty;" so as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Annie Gibson Yates, widow of Capt. George W. Yates, late of the Seventh United States Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month, in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARTIN L. STOVER.

The bill (S. 415) granting a pension to Martin L. Stover was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment in line 9, after the word "officer," to insert "to wit, a first lieutenant; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Martin L. Stover, late sergeant of Company G, Thirty-fifth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate he would be entitled if he had been a commissioned officer, to wit, a first lieutenant, at the date of his disability.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The Secretary read the following report submitted by Mr. DAVIS, February 28, 1888.

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 415) granting a pension to Martin L. Stover, have examined the same, and report:

Martin L. Stover enlisted in Company G, Thirty-fifth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers; became a sergeant and was wounded in the right fore-arm at the battle of Antietam, on the 17th September, 1862. He was discharged for disability in December, 1862. For this disability Sergeant Stover received a pension, with successive applications for increase, as follows: From December 29, 1862, at $4 per month; from October 15, 1879, at $8; from July 21, 1886, at $10; and from May 25, 1887, at $12.

Sergeant Stover now petitions Congress for the passage of a bill for a pension at the rate he would be entitled to if he had been a commissioned officer at the date of his disability. He bases his claim in part on the creditable part he took in the battle of South Mountain, which is officially detailed in the following letter from Brigadier-General Sturgis, addressed to the governor of Massachusetts

"HEADQUARTERS SECOND DIVISION, NINTH ARMY CORPS,
"Fredericksburgh, Va., November 25, 1862.

"To his excellency the governor of Massachusetts:

"SIR: It gives me great pleasure to be able to call your excellency's attention to Sergt. Martin L. Stover, of the Thirty-fifth Massachusetts Regiment, and to recommend him for a commission.

"During the hotly-contested battle of South Mountain I found a considerable body of men, probably two companies, who appeared to have no leader and who did not appear to know what to do. It was very dark, and I called out to know if there was any one who would take charge of them and lead them into the fight. Sergeant Stover promptly stepped forward, and I gave him directions what to do, and I believe he did his work well. I told him in starting to lead them into the wood and do the best he could with them, and that if he would send me his name the next day I would endeavor to have him commissioned. Having received a wound at Antietam which rendered him incapable of writing to me, I never received a note from him until this evening, and I now hasten to comply with my promise and recommend him for promotion.

"Examples of this kind, I think, would have a good effect on others, and besides rewarding merit would have a beneficial effect on the service.

"I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
"S. D. STURGIS,
"Brigadier-General, United States Army."

It also appears that at the battle of Antietam he took command of the company after its officers had been disabled in the fight, and that he there received the wounds which constitute his disability.

A reference to Sergeant Stover's military record shows that he re-enlisted August 15, 1863, was commissioned first lieutenant, and remained in service under second enlistment until October 12, 1865, when he was discharged.

The Commissioner of Pensions, in his last report, page 19, states as follows respecting such cases as this:

"SUBSEQUENT PROMOTIONS TO PENSION SERVICES.

"I beg to call attention to the fact that during the last year the Secretary of the Interior presented to Congress a request for a modification of the law which declares that a pension shall be graded according to the rank of the claimant at the time that the injury was received, without regard to the fact that such claimant might subsequently have been promoted for meritorious services and in good faith. One instance will illustrate many: —— —— was a sergeant in the —— regiment. He contracted a malady which would have been at the time a sufficient reason for his discharge from the military service, but he waived this right given by his condition and served with gallantry and distinction, followed by his malady it is true, through more than four years of war. At the end of the war he was mustered out as full colonel and brevet brigadier-general, having won every step intermediate by honorable service. He died shortly after of the disorder which had followed him from the time of his first service.

"In allowing the pension, the claim being well established, the Commissioner was obliged to say to the widow, that under existing law the only pension that could be allowed her was that of the widow of a sergeant, and that all that her husband had since heroically performed availed nothing in determining her pecuniary rights. The suggestion of the Commissioner is that the rank, subsequently acquired bona fide, should be considered by the Commissioner in determining the amount of pension to be allowed."

The passage of the bill is recommended with the following amendments: Insert the words "to wit, a first lieutenant" after the word "officer" in line 9 of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE W. WELDEN.

The bill (S. 1457) granting a pension to George W. Welden was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of George W. Welden, late a private in Company A, Third Rhode Island Artillery, upon the pension-rolls at the rate allowed for the inability to perform any manual labor.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. MARGARET GALLAGHER

The bill (S. 5) granting a pension to Mrs. Margaret Gallagher was considered as in the Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Margaret Gallagher, widow of Edward Gallagher, late private Company K, Forty-second Regiment New York Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY S. WELLS.

The bill (S. 2071) granting a pension to Mary S. Wells was announced as next in order.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to call attention to the fact that a bill identical in terms with the one just announced has passed the House of Representatives, and is on the Calendar as Order of Business 728, on page 22 of the Calendar. I ask that the Senate consider the House bill instead of the Senate bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The bill (H. R. 6789) granting a pension to Mary S. Wells was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mary S. Wells, widow of the late Rear-Admiral Clark H. Wells, of the United States Navy, at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of any pension she may now be receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DAVIS. Now I move that the bill (S. 2071) granting a pension to Mary S. Wells be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

MRS. LOU GOBRIGHT M'FALLS.

A bill (S. 1757) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Lou Gobright McFalls was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to increase the pension of $20 per month heretofore granted and now allowed to Mrs. Lou Gobright McFalls, widow of Capt. Thaddeus B. McFalls, to $40 per month.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota if "Lou" is a name or abbreviation? Is that an abbreviation or a full name?

Mr. DAVIS. I am not prepared to answer that question. I really do not know.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to be an abbreviation.

Mr. DAVIS. I have not the data by which to correct it if it is.

Mr. HOAR. If it was anything but a pension bill I would interpose, but being a pension bill I will not delay it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RHODA WILLIAMS.

The bill (S. 1045) granting a pension to Rhoda Williams was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Rhoda Williams, widow of John M. Williams, late of the First Iowa Battery Light Artillery Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOEL B. MORTON.

The bill (S. 432) for the relief of Joel B. Morton was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place the name of Joel B. Morton, of Valentine, Cherry County, Nebraska, father of Calvin Morton, on the pension-roll, on account of the services of his son, Calvin Morton, in Company B, Sixteenth New York Volunteers, during the late war.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CAPT. JOHN BURKHART.

The bill (H. R. 2112) for the relief of Capt. John Burkhart was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, in line 7, after the word "emoluments," to strike out:

Of second lieutenant of said company from the 25th day of January, 1865, to the 1st day of March, 1865, and also the pay and emoluments.

And in line 12, after the words "to the," to strike out "1st day of August" and insert "23d day of June;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to John Burkhart, late captain of Company F, One hundred and forty-sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, in the late war, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, the pay and emoluments of captain of said company from March 1, 1865, to June 23, 1865, and also the sum of $64, being money expended by him in the transportation of fifty-one enlisted men of said company from Brookville, Ind., to Sunman, Ind., by stage; deducting from the sum found due him as the pay and emoluments of second lieutenant and captain of said company for the periods above specified the sums of money that have been paid to the said John Burkhart for military service, either as a private or otherwise, rendered by him during the periods above specified.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MANDERSON. I move to strike out the words "second lieutenant and," in line 18 of the bill; so as to read:

Deducting from the sum found due him as the pay and emoluments of captain of said company.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MANDERSON. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments to this bill, and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives thereon.

The motion was agreed to; and, by unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. MANDERSON, Mr. DAVIS, and Mr. HAMPTON were appointed.

NATIONAL SAFE DEPOSIT COMPANY.

The bill (S. 690) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Safe Deposit Company of Washington, in the District of Columbia," approved January 22, 1867, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment to strike out sections 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8 of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the said National Safe Deposit and Trust Company be, and it is hereby, authorized, in addition to the corporate rights and powers now existing, to accept and execute trusts of any and every description which may be committed or transferred to it; and is further hereby authorized to accept the office and perform the duties of receiver, assignee, executor, administrator, guardian of the estates of minors and committee of the estates of idiots or lunatics whenever any trusteeship or any such office or appointment is committed or transferred to it, with its consent, by any person, body politic or corporate, or by any court in the District of Columbia or in any one of the States or Territories of the United States; and said National Safe Deposit and Trust Company is further hereby authorized to accept deposits of money upon such terms and to pay interest thereon at such rates as may be agreed upon from time to time with its depositors, and to act as agent for the purpose of issuing or countersigning the bonds or other obligations of any corporation, association, municipality, or State or other public authority, and to receive and manage any sinking fund on such terms as may be agreed upon. And in all cases in which application shall be made to any court in the District of Columbia, or wherever it becomes necessary or proper for said court to appoint a trustee, receiver, administrator, guardian of the estate of a minor or guardian of the estate of a lunatic, it shall and may be lawful for said court, if it shall think fit (but without prejudice to any preference in the order of any such appointments required by existing law), to appoint the said National Safe Deposit and Trust Company with its assent such trustee, receiver, administrator, guardian, or committee. The accounts of said company as such trustee, receiver, assignee, executor, administrator, guardian, or committee shall be regularly settled and adjusted in the usual mode or before the proper tribunal; and upon such settlement and adjustment all charges, costs, and expenses which are customary or proper to be allowed to any individual acting in either of such capacities shall be allowed to said company for its care and management of the trusts or estates aforesaid; and said company as such trustee, receiver, executor, administrator, guardian, or committee shall be subject to all orders or decrees made by the proper tribunal under the laws of the United States.

SEC. 3. Whenever the National Safe Deposit and Trust Company shall be appointed such trustee, executor, administrator, receiver, assignee, guardian, or committee as aforesaid, the president, vice-president, secretary, or treasurer of said company may make any oath or affirmation now required by law to be made by any trustee, executor, administrator, receiver, assignee, guardian, or committee.

SEC. 4. That when any court shall appoint the said company a trustee, receiver, administrator, or such guardian or committee, or shall order the deposit of money or other valuables with said company, or where any individual or corporation shall appoint said company a trustee, executor, assignee, or such guardian, the capital stock of said company subscribed for or taken, and all property owned by said company shall be taken and considered as the security required by law for the faithful performance of its duties, and shall be absolutely liable in case of any default whatever: Provided, That the supreme court of the District of Columbia may and shall, if deemed necessary, require additional security, and from time to time may, and, at least once during every year, shall, appoint suitable persons to investigate the affairs and management of said company, who shall report to said court the manner in which investments are made by it and the security afforded to those by or for whom its obligations are held; and the expenses of such investigation shall be defrayed by the said company; and the court may, also, if deemed necessary, examine the officers of said company, under oath or affirmation, as to the security aforesaid, and as to the affairs and management of said company.
